LAW OF WILLS.

The Lord Chancellor has lost no time in addressing himself to this important subject. He has already introduced a Bill to amend the Law of Wills, so far, at least, as to remove the doubts in which it has been involved by some recent decisions. The principle of the proposed amendment is, that a will shall not be avoided by reason of defects in the form of execution, provided the Court or Jury shall be of opinion that it was substantially done according to the provisions of the Legislature. As soon as we receive a copy of this salutary improvement in the law we will lay it before our readers.

THE ATTORNEYS' TAX.

An opportunity offers for obtaining the justice so long denied, such as may not again occur for many years. A general election is near, candidates are already canvassing, the assistance and votes of the Lawyers are everywhere sought.

They have a plain duty to perform to themselves and to their Profession.

Let them not give either help or vote to any candidate who will not distinctly pledge himself to support the abolition of the Attorneys' Tax.

We admit that the principle of exacting pledges is a bad one, if applied to political questions, because these are necessarily to some extent questions of expediency, and their application must be determined by facts that are continually varying. Otherwise it is with such a question as that of a particular tax imposed upon a particular class. That is not a question of expediency or of time, but of right and wrong, or as it might be more appropriately described, of right against might. A special tax imposed upon any class, and from which other classes are exempt, is the rankest tyranny of the strong over the weak,—of the many over the few; for what is it but taking money from the pockets of those who are thus singled out for oppression, for the relief of those who are exempted? Suppose that the people under the height of six feet, being an overwhelming majority of the inhabitants of a country, were to impose a tax upon all persons above six feet in height—thus availing themselves of their numbers to make a few contribute to the funds of the State more largely than themselves; would not all agree that this was an act of intolerable tyranny and wrong, and would not the taxed tall men be justified in using all lawful means to relieve themselves from the iniquitous burden? And such is precisely the case with the Attorneys' Tax. The majority have inflicted it upon a small minority; the minority are bound to resist the injustice, and to employ all the powers they possess for its overthrow. If they do not help themselves, others are not likely to help them, because the rest of the community, who are relieved from taxes to the extent of the extra tax put upon the Attorneys, cannot be expected to volunteer to take the burden from the shoulders which now bear it, however wrongfully, and put it upon their own. It is not tax-payers' nature, nor human nature, to be so self-denying. Therefore must the sufferers rely upon themselves alone for redress; they will obtain a great deal more by using the power that is in their own hands, than by any appeals to justice, however eloquent or unanswerable. They have the power to command that which hitherto they have humbly sued for in vain. If they fail to put it forth, everywhere and resolutely, permitting no evasion, and taking no denial, they will have themselves only to blame for the continuance of the unjust burden even for another year. It is certain that if the Attorneys will but act together, now in this one matter, for their common interest, and, while differing as much as they please on all political questions, will resolve that no candidate, whatever his party, who will not distinctly pledge himself to vote for the repeal of the Attorneys' Tax, shall have help or vote from any of them at the approaching elections, the justice for which they have been so long striving will be secured; if they fail in this duty, the tax will probably continue to oppress them for many a year to come.

It would be well for the Attorneys' Clubs and Law Societies throughout the country to hold meetings on this subject, of such great present interest to the Profession, and endeavour to bring about a general agreement among their members, as to the course that shall be pursued by them at the coming elections in relation to the Attorneys' Tax.

SECURITY OF TITLES.

So long as Lord St. Leonard's sits on the woolsack there is no danger of another Registration Bill; but as the tenure of his office is very uncertain, it will be prudent to occupy the leisure thus afforded from the task of combating the details of a particular scheme, in deliberating what other measure might be adopted which might obtain the same desirable object by less inconvenient and costly means.

The end sought is, to prevent the cost of an inquiry into an entire title to a property every time any portion of it changes hands.

This was proposed to be effected by a compulsory registration of every dealing with the property from a certain future day.

To this there were two principal objections; first, that for the next half century, at least, it would still be necessary to investigate the titles previous to the commencement of the register, so that the present cost of making a title would actually be increased by the addition of the costs of registration; second, that the cost of registering the conveyances of very small properties would be extremely burdensome, and that the burden would be imposed equally upon the best and clearest, as well as upon the most equivocal titles.

These objections were, in the estimation of those best informed upon the subject, that is to say, the actual practitioners, the Attorneys, who alone know what are the real costs of conveyancing, fatal to the proposed scheme of registration, and to any that has yet been devised, unless accompanied with some plan for clearing up existing titles, and for facilitating the transfer of land by compulsory arrangement of interests in it.

The great cost of the conveyance of land arises not from the deed of conveyance, but from the investigation and proof of title, and title must be investigated, because the law recognises the right of the owners of land to charge it with liabilities beyond the rights of the possessor for the time being, who, therefore, takes it subject to those claims.

Whether it is wise to permit land to be thus charged is a question not now under consideration, although it is one upon which a good deal might be said on some future occasion. Enough, now, that so it is, and therefore to the extent of the period that the law permits a charge to extend, there must be investigation, in order to ascertain if any such charge exists, otherwise a purchaser or mortgagee, who must take subject to the charge would incur a loss to the extent of that charge.

But this is only one of the costs arising out of the permissive power to charge land. If charges are discovered, they must be removed, as no good title can be made. This is usually a still more costly process; the persons having charges, however numerous, must be found, and paid off, and made parties to the conveyance. But it often happens that some of those persons are dead, and then their legal representatives must be sought, and empowered to discharge their claims upon it; deaths and heirships must be proved, that it may be ascertained who are the proper representatives of the deceased; then, it may be, that some of the claimants are minors, and they cannot convey at all.

These are the practical causes of the complaints so freely made of the cost of conveyancing, and, until some provision is made for these, there can be no great diminution of the expenses. It is not the fault of the Attorneys, but of the Law they have to deal with. In justice to the Profession, it must be asserted, that they are very desirous that conveyancing should be facilitated and cheapened, and would be glad to see a remedy for the evils we have described. It annoys them often, as we know, to be obliged to put their clients to such cost, in order to investigate or make a title; but they cannot help themselves; often they will incur responsibility, and hazard their own liability, in accepting a title that might be questionable, because they will not put upon their clients the cost of a strictly legal proof, or enforce the requirements of the conveyancer.

It is, therefore, a question of very much more interest to our generation than that of Registration, whether it might not be possible to devise means for facilitating the conveyance of land, by removing some of those obstacles to it which we have above described, and we have some suggestions for that purpose, which we will submit to our readers in another article.

SKETCH OF THE SCOTTISH LAW COURTS.

ARTICLE SIXTH.

JUDGES OF THE FIRST INSTANCE.

As we stated in our last article, a leading feature o: the Scottish judicial economy consists in the divi sion of the Superior Court into judges of the first instance, and Chambers of Review—an internal relation, which, in some respects, resembles that subsisting between one of the Common Law Court: here and the Exchequer Chamber, or between Vice-Chancellor and the Lords Justices of Appeal. This is so ancient and well-established a division of labour in the Scottish Courts, and so popular and well regulated has it become, especially of late years, that we believe the public in that part of the realm would not now lightly consent to part with it. Amid all the changes projected within the last half century, which have been neither few nor small, it has never for a moment been seriously proposed to interfere with that branch of the administration of the law appropriated to judges of the first instance and the weight of authority has always been for maintaining it unimpaired. Lord BROUGHAM long ago recommended the same plan as well worthy of the imitation of this country; and it may be observed, that the changes proposed by the present Chancery Commission, with a view to dispense with the Master's offices, are a near approach to this consummation.

It is of course not to be denied, that there are points in the general procedure of the Scottish Courts, not exactly compatible with the present position of our courts here. But there have been gradual improvements of late years, and at present the procedure, as far as relates to the judges of the first instance, is so eminently satisfactory, that in one half of the cases the decision of these judges is acquiesced in, and no further step is taken in the way of appeal. As it has been of late here also in several quarters proposed, that a Master of Court might discharge beneficially a similar function in relation to the pleadings in our Common Law Courts, by way of a substitute for special pleadings, it may be well to look a little more minutely into what may be said in favour of that proposal, as far as any light can be thrown upon it by the practice in Scotland.

The most obvious advantage of having a Judge, or officer, of the highest skill and authority, for the preliminary purpose of sifting the causes that enter the court, and preparing them for the decision of the Court of Review, must resolve itself in one form or other into this, that it is the least expensive mode of administering justice. Of course such an arrangement must be considered as correlative to an untechnical system of pleading, by which is meant pleading more or less at large. The outcry, which now attends the practice of special pleading, seems to resolve itself into an objection as to expense. It is obvious that we may make our system too scientific,—that we may attain a precision of movement at the expense of too complicated a machinery,—that we may indulge in distinctions too nice for the popular sense of justice,—and that the cost of victory may outweigh the satisfaction which ought to attend it. If, on the other hand, we abandon special pleading, the most natural recourse is, both to allow the parties to state the facts as briefly as possible, and to have a Judge or other officer to superintend these statements, for the purpose of punishing impertinence. By the former method the parties can go on exchanging pleadings, and working out an issue to their own satisfaction, without the intervention of the Court: by the latter, the intervention of the Court seems indispensable. We have had experience of the one system; the Scotch have had experience of the other. The general characteristic of our whole administration of justice, as contradistinguished from theirs, is its greater subdivision. If we may attach importance to the opinion of the public, as in these latter days we must undoubtedly do, we have carried this subdivision too far. The Scotch may, on the other hand, have erred in subdividing too little. It is true, they indulged at one time, by their own confession, in an alarming latitude of pleading, and latterly they have been cultivating a more rigorous brevity: still it is not a self-sustaining system into which they have settled. They possess the experience, therefore, of travellers, who have come from the opposite pole—the pole of latitudinarianism. We have exhausted the rigours of a severe, pedantic, and inflexible system, and finding it unsatisfactory, have a tendency now to relax ourselves. It is possible the true golden mean may lie between these extremes, and accordingly, the experience of the Scotch as to their Judges of the first instance, cannot but be acceptable information.

While we have been cultivating a one-sided talent for special forms of justice, the Scotch have enjoyed the comprehensive plan, which undoubtedly has a tendency to breed a larger and more liberal study of jurisprudence, inasmuch as they consider that every one who is promoted to the office of a judge ought to be prepared for all the duties which justice requires to be performed. In attaching this condition to judicial appointments they do not consider that they throw any obstacle in the way of professional ambition, nor that the country will lose the services of many able and highminded men, who would rather sacrifice emolument and station than adventure to discharge duties to which they feel themselves unequal, or rather than hazard in one department the reputation they have acquired in another. Those who are possessed of a special and exclusive genius for one particular department are better adapted to be teachers of law than administrators of justice. The tendency of their system, therefore, they consider to be chiefly towards widening the course of moral and intellectual culture. Under any other each man is apt to humour his own inclination, and restrict himself to that path to which his momentary bent lies, to the neglect of that large study of his profession, and that completeness of knowledge in principle and practice which is necessary to accomplish the character of a great lawyer and judge. The field of training is widened, and when a fitness for all professional duties is expected from every one, the best discipline will be as throughly ensured as judicial preferment will be looked forward to by most men as the termination and reward of their professional life.

As all the Judges of the Superior Court of Scotland, with few exceptions, are thus called upon to discharge the same duties, and as the Court possesses a jurisdiction embracing at once every thing proper to our Equity and Common Law, as well as Admiralty and Consistorial Courts, the Judge of the firstinstance requires to possess ascomplete knowledge while he enjoys the same status as the Judges of the Court of Review. All kinds of cases come before him. An action of debt, a creditor's suit, a bill to set aside a deed for fraud must alike be instituted and prepared under his eye. He sits as a Judge at Chambers at all times, and grants all necessary applications arising incidentally out of the suit for whatever purpose. At each step almost the parties appear before him and take his commands or await his sanction.

It is in the option of the plaintiff, in original cases, and now in appeals from the County Courts for the respondent, to choose not only the particular Judge of the first instance before whom his case is to go, but also the Chamber of Review, to which it may be afterwards desirable to appeal. Formerly, these single-handed Judges were attached to one or other of the two Inner Chambers, and consequently by choosing any one Judge, the suitor was bound to go also before the Inner Chamber to which that Judge was attached. But it was found desirable to break this connection, and now accordingly the choice of both courts is unrestrained. This is found to be a very valuable privilege; and when it has frequently been proposed to take it away, great opposition and dissatisfaction has been excited. The effect of allowing the choice is undoubtedly to create a run of business towards one or two favourite Judges; and Lords JEFFREY and MONCREIFF in their time pointed in vain against the ever increasing load of cases piled up at their door. The amount of labour thus kindly imposed by the confiding suitors on the best Judges was often felt to be a grievance, and plans were often projected with a view of enforcing the rule of rotation, and thus equalizing the burdens. The evil, however, was at last left to cure itself. One good effect has been said to flow from this unconfined election of the suitor, that it tends to secure a supply of the most able Judges; for the moment a barrister is appointed who does not command the general confidence, the scanty and odiously select list of his cases will at once attest this fact. On the other hand, the fickleness only of popular applause has often been demonstrated by these proportions. Be that as it may, however, to attempt nowadays to deprive the Scotch suitor of the choice of his Lord Ordinary, would be to pluck up justice by the roots.

It has been objected to the plan by which Judges of the first instance are exclusively and permanently confined, each a separate court; that their valuable assistance is thereby lost in the ultimate decision of the causes. It is said with some truth, that the intellect and judicial habits of the Judge are never so well cultivated and improved, as when he discharges his duty along with others, and forms part of a deliberative Court. Though some weight is due to this objection, and though it has been frequently considered in Scotland, with a view to an improvement, yet it has been found on examination that no plan could be adopted which would not be followed, not merely by great inconvenience in practice, but by the disadvantages attending a fluctuating court, and by other evils much more immediate and extensive than any which such a change could be hoped to remove.

While the Judges of the first instance have been so undeniably popular in performing their part in the administration of justice, it has occasionally been objected, that the practice has been carried too far of engrossing such Judge's time with mere matters of form, to the delay of the more important business. By relieving the Judge, therefore, of much of this routine, and by improving the process of preparing the pleadings, it has been sought of late years to obviate this objection gradually. At the same time, the vigilant superintendence which is exercised by him in the preparatory stages of the suit—the opportunity afforded for more severe and anxious discussion—the judicial talent and experience employed in the investigation and decision—and the manner in which causes arrived in the Inner Chamber, matured for judgment, were so strong and obvious recommendations, that it was feared, lest by tampering with the minutiæ they might impair the efficiency of this branch of the Court. Accordingly, it was some time before the force of this objection came to be met effectually, which may be said now, however, almost to be done, as we may shew in our next article on pleading.

Further, however, with respect to this same objection, which is the one which most readily occurs to ourselves, viz. that it is a waste of high judicial skill for a Judge to sit alone and perform all the duties incidental to the pleadings; it may be said, that the record and its final adjustment may be safely entrusted to some officer of the Court, such as the Master. Some think that it is no part of proper judicial duty to prepare the case, but that the Judge should confine his attention solely to the decision. That, moreover, it is difficult for a Judge to assist in the preparation of a case without forming some opinion of its merits, before he has an opportunity of hearing it argued in all its bearings, and is in a condition to apply his mind to it judicially. To this it has been replied, that any officer of the Court, on whom so important a duty might be imposed, would require to be possessed of qualifications equally high with those of the Judge, by whom the case is to be finally decided. And even if it were not difficult to find a general officer fully qualified, still he could never have the same weight and authority, and the same means of repressing scandalous and impertinent matter, as the Judge, nor would his suggestions be equally well attended to. It is true, an appeal might be given to the Judge against any proceeding of the master, or officer, in the preparation of the record; but if such applications were to be frequent, they would be the source of increased expense and vexatious litigation, and take up as much of the time of the Judge as would be required if the adjustment were wholly intrusted to him. If, on the other hand, it could be anticipated that there would be no such frequent appeals, this could only arise from the circumstance that practitioners would become more slovenly in preparing their pleadings, a result to be strenuously averted. In other words, the Master would only cut and square all records whatever to one system, and the only way to avoid objections would be generality. Besides, judicial business is never well done by an irresponsible officer, who has none of the proper duties of a Judge to perform, and there would often be entrusted to him most important motions, which involve material questions as to the onus probandi, which it would be absurd to expect him to decide effectually.

Such were the reasons, that prevailed in Scotland, against withdrawing from the Judge in person the superintendence of the pleadings, and [illegible]t delegating so important a discretion to an [illegible]r officer, the importance of which we can, however, scarcely appreciate, inasmuch as our system of pleading is self sustaining, and does not require the help of the Court at all. It was found that nothing but the presence of the Judge could supply a wholesome stimulus to the practitioners, so as to exclude objectionable matter, and though it was found an irksome duty for the judge to perform, still that it behoved to be done, as being upon the whole, the best, the promptest, and the cheapest method to the public of obtaining the end proposed. It is obvious, indeed, that our own experience in this country of the virtues of a Master in Chancery, who in some respects resembles the functionary proposed in Scotland to be substituted for the judge of the first instance, can corroborate the propriety of this conclusion. The expense and delay of references back and forward between the Court and the Master, and the want of authority obvious in the latter, when discharging judicial functions, have with other infirmities, led at last to the long-meditated and now approaching abolition of the entire system of which these Masters and their offices were the most corrupt branch.

In reference to appeals from the County Courts, it came to be a question, whether these ought to go through the ordeal of a preliminary investigation by the judges of the first instance. Great complaints at one time prevailed among the country attorneys, that when their cases were brought up from the County Court, they became subject to a temporary detention at the porch of the Superior Court, before advancing to the scrutiny of the Inner Chamber. They thought this an unnecessary and superfluous stoppage in the transit. This source of complaint was accordingly investigated, and yet so enamoured were the Scotch Law Commissioners of this preliminary process in the Outer House, that they could not find it in their heart to make any exception in favour of these appeals. Their chief reason was this, that inasmuch as the unskilfulness of County Court pleading was not a rarity and as the necessity of a remit from the Inner Chamber would be frequent to get the record amended it would come to be more expensive in the end to allow these importations from the country to come to the Inner Chamber without previous scrutiny. Further, it was alleged, that as there was always an argument by counsel on each case before the Judge of the first instance previous to his decision, there would thus be a second argument before the Inner Chamber, and that two arguments were always more desirable than one. These reasons fully prevailed at the time, but it may be remarked, that the late statute has effected a partial retreat from this position, inasmuch as they now allow all appeals from the County Courts—which are in the nature of writs of error—to be brought direct to the Inner Chamber, if either party desire it. The same privilege is bestowed on appeals from the County Courts sitting in Bankruptcy.

As was stated in our last article, there are two ways, in which a case passes from the Judge of the first instance into the Inner Chamber. If he thinks it a very important and difficult question which is involved, he has it in his power to hand the case over after superintending the preparation of the Record, and without himself giving any decision. But, in the great majority of instances, he hears counsel after the record is made up, and reserves judgment for some days. He then produces this judgment which is in the shape of a brief formal Interlocutor, to which is appended what is called a "Note." This Note is, in fact, a lucid and able statement of the grounds of his decision, and consists of a review of the arguments and cases cited at the bar, and of the authorities generally. When the case is appealed to the Inner Chamber, copies of the pleadings and of this Interlocutor and Note of the Judge of the first instance, are the documents submitted to the Judges there, who hear the case argued again, and thereafter give judgment,—affirming, reversing, or altering the Interlocutor alluded to.

In our next article we shall describe the mode of pleading adopted in the Superior Courts of Scotland.

HOUSE OF LORDS

THE LAW OF WILLS

TUESDAY, March 23.—The LORD CHANCELLOR—My lords, I rise to move the second reading of a Bill for the amendment of the law with respect to wills. When I introduced this Bill the other night I stated to your lordships the difficulties which it was intended to guard against. By a statute passed in the reign of Charles II all devises in writing were to be attested and subscribed by three or four witnesses, in the presence of the testator and it was said that a will was good if the name of the testator was found at the head of the will, and therefore, if a man, for example, began in these terms,—"I, John Styles, do make this my will," that was held to be a sufficient signature. Now, my lords, this was thought to be an abuse, and, in order to guard against such an abuse, a new Act of Parliament was passed in the first year of her present Majesty for the amendment of the law of wills, which provided that every will should be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator, in the presence of certain witnesses. I had stated to your lordships that the effect of that enactment was (and I dare say it was a surprise upon those who framed the Act,) that unless the name of the testator followed immediately after the disposition of the will (if there was, for example, a little more than an inch of space left, on which the name might have been introduced), if the name was placed a little lower, the case was tried, not by the rule of law, but, rather, by the rule of space, and the will was held to be void; and upon that construction, my lords, hundreds of wills have been held to be invalid, and misery and wretchedness have found their way to hearths, where wealth, and peace, and comfort ought to have found their habitations. My lords, the proposition is to amend the present law by providing that where the name of the testator is found, after the will, so as to give, by its place and situation, a sanction to the will itself—so as to shew that it was intended to sanction the will by the signature after the will—that shall be held to be valid. My lords, there are other points which I have endeavoured to cope with, and which may be open to more observation, and which may draw from some of my noble and learned friends objections to its passing without more mature consideration; and, my lords, if that should be so, I can only say that I should at once feel myself bound to withdraw those clauses, because I mean to put forward nothing that in my opinion shall endanger this measure, which is one which I think so exceedingly important. My lords, the two clauses to which I refer will, I think, remedy a very great abuse. The Act of Parliament of her present Majesty, as I have told your lordships, requires a will to be signed at the foot or end thereof, in the presence of two witnesses. That, my lords, I have disposed of. It then goes on to require that the signature of the testator shall be made or acknowledged in the presence of the witnesses. Now, my lords, this difficulty has arisen upon that,—it was not required by the Statute of Frauds, but this difficulty has now arisen. Your lordships will bear in mind that what the Act requires is, that the signature of the testator shall be made or acknowledged in the presence of the witnesses. Now, my lords, it often happens that when a man has made his will and called in the witnesses to attest it, he is anxious that they should not see any part of the provisions of that will,—suppose, for example, that it is written on a sheet of letter paper,—you have it before you, and two servants, perhaps, come into the room to witness the will, and the testator desires that they should not read any portion of the will by glancing over that part which is above the signature, and that has induced a man frequently to fold down the will so as to hide from the witnesses the portion above the signature, and in doing so they have folded down the signature itself. And, my lords, it has been held that as the statute requires that the signature, not the will, should be made and acknowledged in the presence of the witnesses, unless they have seen the signature the will is void. Now, my lords, that was never the intention, and with your lordships' permission I propose to amend that state of the law in this manner, by enacting that if the signature of the testator be in its proper place, and it is not proved to have been placed there after the witnesses affixed their signatures, and if the testator at the time acknowledges the instrument to be his will, that that shall be sufficient. My lords there is another improvement, if your lordships should think proper to concur in it, that I propose to introduce. The statute requires that the witnesses should sign in the presence of the testator. And my lords it has very often happened, that when a man is making his will in extremis—when he is lying in bed, and is incapable of being moved, but still in a state of perfect capacity of mind—it has frequently happened that witnesses who have come round the bedside and witnessed the execution of the will, and seen it signed by the testator, all due solemnities been observed, in order not to disturb him, have retired to the adjoining room, and there attested the will, and then the question has arisen,—is that, or is it not, a compliance with the statute, which requires that a will shall be signed by the witnesses in the presence of the testator? Now, my lords, in order to meet the difficulties of the case—with a natural desire to give effect to men's wills, where there is no fraud, and where the statute has been substantially complied with, the Courts have made this distinction, that if the witnesses sign in such a position, in an adjoining room, that they are within the line of light, so that the testator, if he liked, might see them (although nobody pretends that he did see them), the will is good, but if they happen to retire a little way beyond the line of light, the table, for example, being out of view, and they all sign the will, then the will is void. Now, my lords, what has been the consequence? Why, my lords, this—that juries have not been found who would, though upon their oaths, find a will so signed to be void. They would not find a will to be void, though it was clear that the testator was not in a position in which he could have seen the witnesses sign. It will not be, perhaps, so easy to persuade some of my noble and learned friends that I have provided a satisfactory remedy, although I have often and anxiously taken the subject into my consideration; but, my lords, this is no hasty conclusion of mine. I have no doubt some of my noble and learned friends will think that I have not provided in the most satisfactory manner for the solution of this question; but what I propose to provide is this, that where witnesses, without fraud, and as part of the same transaction, without quitting the house or place where the will is signed, do sign a will after seeing the testator sign it, all due solemnities being observed, that shall be held to be a valid will. Now, my lords, no doubt it may be said that this would open a door to some fraud or to a substitution of one will for another. My lords, these are not the dangers, after all, which we have to avoid. It may be said that because the dangers have not occurred these laws have prevented them. But the law has not stuck at fraud; the law has destroyed a man's which was open to no substantial objection. The law has not prevented the frauds which, whenever the parties have been determined to carry them into execution, they have been able to do so in spite of it. And, as I am addressing your lordships upon the subject, and speaking of future measures, I would draw your lordships' attention to a measure as to wills, which may require the attention of this and the other House of Parliament. The statute of the 1st of Queen Victoria for the first time imposed the same solemnities upon the disposition of personal estate as, in the time of Charles II. (with variations), were imposed upon the disposition of real estate; and it was said,—how very absurd is it that you cannot dispose of half an acre of land without three witnesses, and yet you may dispose of 100,000*l.* of personal estate, which is ever fluctuating, without any witnesses at all. Yet, people do not desire every day to alter their testamentary dispositions, but may make variations in the disposition of their personal estate by codicil or by legacy to be payable out of their personal estate, however large it may be; but now no man can make the slightest alteration in his will, he cannot give 5*l.* nor alter a certain legacy, without calling in two witnesses. It was said of a great man that the faults which we denounced in him died with him; but I might say with greater truth that owing to the difficulties which the law throws around them many codicils die even in thinking. These are points, however, which we must consider hereafter. The noble and learned lord then concluded by moving the second reading of the Bill.—Lord BROUGHAM stated that he had no objection to give a second reading to the whole of this Bill. He entirely approved of the course which his noble and learned friend proposed to take.—The Bill was then read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Thursday.

COUNTY COURTS.

THURSDAY, March 25.—Lord BROUGHAM said that last session there was a Bill before their lordships, and in which some progress was made, but the further proceeding had been purposely postponed, in order that the more important provisions of the measure might be fully considered during the interval—viz. those which related to the law of bankruptcy and insolvency. The County Courts Act had afforded incalculable relief in the cases of solvent debtors, but considerable evils still existed in cases of insolvency. Great advantages had arisen from the measure brought forward by his noble and learned friend (Lord Lyndhurst) in 1842. That measure was extended to the country before the establishment of the local courts. It was the original plan of the Bill of 1833, which had never passed into law, that the local courts should have jurisdiction in bankruptcy and insolvency as in actions of debt and cost; but as the Bill of 1842 established County Courts of Bankruptcy, before the new County Courts came into existence, the result had been that they had had two systems. Small creditors, in the country especially, felt the inconvenience of the present system very greatly. He knew a case in Leicester where there were eighteen creditors, and not one appeared to prove, as some of them would have had to travel a distance of 100 miles. The measure he was about to lay on the table had for its object to remedy this evil, by the consolidation of the two systems, so as to make the County Court Judges, in the manner proposed by the commissioners in 1841, go round their districts, with a view to work the different fiats at the residences of the parties interested.

The Bill was then read a first time.

LAW OF WILLS AMENDMENT BILL.

THURSDAY, March 25.—The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of this Bill, and said that he had omitted from the Bill the second and third clauses, which he had explained the night before, so as not to endanger the passing of the first and most important clause. He should, however, lay on the table a separate Bill containing the other two clauses.—The House then went into committee on the Bill.—Lord CRANWORTH thought such a measure was necessary, in consequence of the decision of the Courts. The clause in the late Lord Langdale's Bill was very plain and clear, requiring that the signature of the testator should be placed at the foot or end of his will. Where the signature was a long way off it might be right to decide that it invalidated a will; but some of the decisions had been quite revolting, for it had been held that, if the signature was an inch below the writing of the will, the instrument was void. The Bill then before the lordships provided that, "if the signature should be so placed as after, or following, or under, or beside, or opposite to the end of the will, so that it should be apparent that the testator intended to give effect to the writing in the will by his signature," it should be valid. He thought that by all these enumerations fresh difficulties would be created. Some one would find some other way in which it could be done, and he suggested that the clause should be simplified by the omission of the enumerating words.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said the language provided for all the cases in which the Courts had decided that the signature so placed rendered the will void.—After a few words from Lord LYNDHURST, which were inaudible, the Earl of ELLENBOROUGH suggested that a committee should sit to-morrow to settle the phraseology in a satisfactory way.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said he had gone carefully, studiously, and elaborately through the subject; and he believed the phraseology to be accurate.—Lord BROUGHAM thought his noble and learned friend ought to feel much obliged to the noble lords who had brought the objection under his notice, because it would give him an opportunity of reconsidering the points which had been raised, and which he could deal with at a future stage of the Bill. He (Lord Brougham) would deprecate the sending of the Bill before a select committee, inasmuch as the result would only be to delay, without improving the measure.—The other clauses were then agreed to, and the House resumed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

COMMON LAW FEES REGULATION BILL.

WEDNESDAY, March 24.—Mr. BOUVERIE moved that the House should go into committee on this Bill.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said the Government could not give an unqualified support to the Bill. There were some alterations they wished to introduce.—After a conversation the House went into committee. Some of the clauses were postponed, the remainder were agreed to, and the House resumed. The Bill was ordered to be recommitted on Friday.

COMMON LAW FEES REGULATION (SALARIES).

The House went into committee on this subject, and the resolution was agreed to.

CORRUPT PRACTICES AT ELECTIONS BILL.

Mr. V. SMITH (in the absence of Lord J. Russell) moved the second reading of this Bill.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL believed the Government did not intend to object to the passing of this Bill, and he should not offer any obstacle to the second reading. He, of course, reserved to himself the liberty to propose amendments in committee.—The Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Friday.

FEES OF COMMON LAW OFFICERS.

Mr. WALPOLE gave notice, to move for leave to bring in a Bill providing for the payment of the salaries of common law officers out of the Consolidated Fund, and for the regulation of common law fees.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

IT is remarkable that so few cases in this branch of the law should occupy the Courts. When we reflect upon the number and variety of matters that are placed under the jurisdiction of Magistrates, and the many thousands of cases decided by them every month, in which an appeal lies from their decision, we cannot but be astonished that those appeals should be few. The fact certainly speaks trumpet-tongued on behalf of those courts, in which justice is administered promptly and cheaply, and argues, with the evidence of a fact that cannot be denied, that practically a non-legal Magistracy to dispense law is not so great an absurdity as it appears. The reason for this is, that the Magistrates are usually guided in questions of law by their clerk, and in questions of fact their common sense is, perhaps, a better guide than the lawyer's learning. unfrequency of appeals is equally creditable to them and to their legal advisers.

One case only, and that in Criminal Law, was reported last week. Reg. v. Rowlands, 18 Law T. Rep. 346, was an indictment for a conspiracy to violate the provisions of 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, s. 3, and it was held to be sufficient if it followed the words of the statute, and charged the defendants with "conspiring by unlawfully molesting" the hired workmen of A. "to force the workmen to depart from their hiring and employment," without stating the specific means of molestation.

Sir JOHN PAKINGTON, we understand, purposes to proceed with his Beer Houses Bill in the new Parliament. We are also informed that a measure for the general regulation of Highways and Turnpikes is contemplated by the present Government, should they continue in office after the elections.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

The Great Northern Railway Company v. The Manchester, &c. Railway Company, 18 Law T. 344, was a question on the construction of an agreement made between the two companies, as to the right of running engines and carriages over each other's lines. No term was specified over which the agreement was to extend, excepting in one clause, which limited to three years the engagement made by that clause. The agreement, with that exception, was held to be permanent, and not revocable at the will of either party, although no mention was made of successors. "The word 'successors,'" said Vice-Chancellor PARKER, "was not a word which was at all material when dealing with rights to be conferred on, or acknowledged to be made to, a body corporate. The word 'company' meant a body which was to exist for ever."

A question as to whether a society for certain purposes was a joint-stock company requiring to be registered, was raised in Bear v. Bromley, 18 Law T. Rep. 347, reported from Nisi Prius. The society consisted of 100 members, who held shares of 40*l.* each. The society made loans to its members, which were given to the highest bidder. The premiums paid for the loans and the fines for non-payment of instalments, were paid into the funds of the society. Lord CAMPBELL reserved the point.

PUBLIC POLICY v. PRIVATE POLICY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In addition to the objection against policies issued by certain modern offices, on the ground of their expressed indisputability on the score of fraud, may be added another, to which public attention might usefully be drawn, viz. that many such policies are expressed to be payable, "death by duelling or by the sentence of the law" to the contrary notwithstanding. Now in Amicable Society v. Bolland, 4 Bligh, N.S. 199, it was stated that if a man insuring his own life were to introduce a stipulation that the policy should be payable in such event, it would be void, as against public policy; though in consequence of Schwabe v. Clift, 2 Car. & K. 134, the point cannot be declared entirely free from doubt. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Warnford-court, March 29, 1852. J. M.

WINDING UP.

MADRID AND VALENCIA RAILWAY.—On Friday, 19th, before Master Blunt, the inquiry into the claims of those shareholders entitled to participate in the dividend of 15s. were further gone into, and all the cases finally settled. This completes the protracted process of "winding up" the company, which has been going on since Jan. 1850. It is understood that the payment of the 15s. per share will, including costs, absorb the 25,000*l.* in hand. Further assets under the estate are expected to be realised under the agreement of compromise effected with the directors, and from which an additional dividend will accrue, but these latter transactions are likely to extend over two or three years to come.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.—The report of the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies to the Board of Trade for the year 1851, has been printed in a Parliamentary paper. There were 211 companies provisionally registered in the year. The number completely registered in the year was 63. The number provisionally registered and not completely registered was 187. The fees received at the head office in London in the year amounted to 3,178*l.* 17s. 10d.; and at Dublin (the branch office), 113*l.* 11s. 3,292*l.* 8s. 10d.

GLOUCESTER, ABERYSTWITH, AND CENTRAL WALES RAILWAY.—On Friday, the 19th inst. the inqu..., calling on the directors to account for the 40,000*l.* entrusted to them, was resumed before Master Tinney. Mr. Williams, clerk at Glyn's; Mr. Hawker, the secretary; and Mr. Hill, the solicitor of the company, were examined at length, and eventually the Master allowed the charge as against the directors, giving them three weeks to file a discharge.

THE GOLD MINING MANIA.—It appears, from the returns of the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, that no fewer than fourteen gold mining companies were registered during 1851, up to Dec. 31. Their titles were: Anglo-Californian Gold Mining Company, Agua Fria Gold Mining Company, Australian Gold Mining Company, Quartz Rock Mariposa Mining Company, Golden Mountain of Mariposa Mining Company of California, Australian Gold Amalgamation Company, Bathurst Gold Mining Company of Australia, East Mariposa Gold Quartz Mining Company, Royal Gold Mining Company of Australia, Ophir Gold Mining Company of Australia, Ave Maria Gold Quartz Mining Company, Australasian Gold Mining Company, Royal Australian Gold Refining and Mining Company, and London and Californian Gold Quartz Crushing Company. The return does not embrace the gold mining companies projected since December last.

PETITIONS, ORDERS, MEETINGS, APPOINTMENTS, CALLS, &c.

[Announced, issued, and made, during the past week.]

Arigna Iron and Coal Company.—Creditors to come in and prove. (Gazette, March 23.)

British and American Steam Navigation Company.—Call of 66*l.* per share, on 1st of April.—Rose.

Universal Gaslight Company.—Further call of 5*l.* per share, on 29th of March.—Rose.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

A donatio mortis causâ is now-a-days extremely rare; the reader will, therefore, peruse with more interest the case of Stainland v. Willott, 18 Law T. Rep. 338, in which it appeared that a person, supposing himself to be dying, transferred to another as a gift some shares in a company. But he did not die, although he never recovered his senses, and continued a lunatic. It was held not to be a good gift mortis causâ, and that the transferee held the shares only as a trustee for the lunatic, and was bound to retransfer them. In this case the defendant was severely reprimanded for taking the transfer with the aid of his own solicitor only, and without calling in the aid of the solicitor to the donor to protect him. The case is well worth reading, as an excellent review of the law on this subject, and we especially recommend it to students.

The new LORD CHANCELLOR has reversed the decision of Vice-Chancellor BRUCE, which we reported some time since, in Letts v. London Corn Exchange, 18 Law T. Rep. 340, where the plaintiff, rector of the parish of St. Olave, was entitled by statute to 2*s.* 9*d.* in the pound upon the annual value of all houses in the parish in lieu of tithes, and the company had taken down a number of houses and built the Corn Exchange on their site, and agreed with the rector to pay him 90*l.* a year in lieu of such tithes, which was received by him from Lady-day to Christmas 1837, when he died, and the plaintiff, his successor, claimed the tithe upon the annual value of the Corn Exchange. The Court below held that this property was liable only to the extent of its previous value as houses. But now, upon appeal, the LORD CHANCELLOR reversed the decision, and held that the tithe was payable upon the present value.

In Briggs v. The Earl of Oxford, 18 Law T. Rep. 341, the LORDS JUSTICES have held that an agreement by the persons beneficially interested in the equity of a redemption of a wooded estate which had been made the subject of a settlement, that no person having a limited interest should apply any of the wood to his own purposes until the corpus of the estate had been freed from incumbrances, was a valid agreement, and did not trespass against the law of perpetuity.

The case of Paterson v Scott, 18 Law T. Rep. 343, is of unusual interest in the Law of Wills. A. by will directed that his debts and testamentary expenses should be paid out of the fund thereafter provided for payment thereof. He then devised his real estate to trustees for sale, and directed them, out of the proceeds, to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and to hold the residue on certain trusts. He then bequeathed his personal estate, after payment of debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. The personal estate was held to be the primary fund for the payment of debts. Also, that the doctine of marshalling was applicable in favour of legatees and annuitants. "If, though specifically devised, the land is made subject to all debts, that distinguishes the case, for there is a double fund; and as by that denotation of intention the creditor has a double fund—the land devised and the personal estate—he shall not disappoint the legatee." This was a dictum of Lord ELDON, and the Court of Appeal has now confirmed it.

In the law of Landlord and Tenant, there is another case reported from Nisi Prius. Apartments were held under this agreement, that plaintiff "should hold the premises until one of the said parties shall give to the other of the said parties six calendar months' notice in writing." It was held by Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. that the tenancy might be determined at any time by six months' notice, and that it was not necessary that the expiration of the tenancy should be at the same time of the year that it began. (Doe dem. King v. Grafton, 18 Law T. Rep. 347.)

The liability to Legacy Duty under the following circumstances was decided in Reg. v. Sir D. Norreys, Bart. 18 Law T. Rep. 352. A. having an annuity for life, assigned it to B. and his heirs. B. died intestate in the lifetime of A. It was held that the annuity descended to the heir-at-law, and did not pass to the next of kin, and that therefore the administrator was not chargeable for duty in respect of it.

Soar v. Dalby, 18 Law T. Rep. 352, was a case of some importance in the Law of Mortgages. A mortgagee agreed with the mortgagor to receive the rents of part of the property in payment of interest, and he continued to do so till the death of the mortgagor. This was held not to constitute him mortgagee in possession of the whole property. He was called upon, under the circumstances detailed in the report, to account for the rents and profits of the whole property, but the Court held that he was accountable only for that portion of it which was actually in his possession.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

THE County Courts Extension Bill is sent down to the Commons. What is its chance of passing during this doomed session we know not, but we trust that an effort will be made to run it through its stages. Most of its clauses have already received the sanction of the present House of Commons, therefore there is no need for again discussing them.

An interesting case as to the liability of assignees in insolvency was reported in Re Williams, 18 Law T. Rep. 350. An assignee had put the funds of the estate in a bank which failed, and the money was lost. It was held that if the same care of it was exercised by the assignee as if it was his own, and there was no negligence, and he did not deviate from the ordinary course of business or practice, and debited himself with those funds as an ordinary account, he was not liable.

COUNTY COURT IMPROVEMENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Your exertions to obtain the introduction into the County Courts Amendment Act, of a clause entitling a successful suitor to recover from his opponent the whole amount of his attorney's charges, induce me to call your attention to another evil, very similar to that which the clause in question is intended to remove, viz. that of fees for paying money out of court, being chargeable against the party taking it out.

It appears to me, that no reasonable argument can be adduced in support of such a practice, but that all the expenses necessarily incurred in litigation, ought to be borne by the losing party, and as the justice of this principle will, by the clause I have alluded to, be admitted so far as regards the attorney's charges, I hope you will urge its extension to the case of court fees.

Another desirable reform would be, that attorneys should be recognised throughout the proceedings in these courts, instead of being, as at present, entirely passed over on every occasion, except when appearing at the trial.

An attorney may enter a plaint, but if notice of set off, or of a special defence is given, it is sent to the plaintiff: if the defendant submits to the demand, he is only expected to pay into court the debt and the amount of court fees, without any fee for the attorney; and even if the attorney conducts the case at the hearing, and money is afterwards paid into court upon the judgment, notice is sent not to him but to his client. In fact, the system is, in this respect, consistent throughout, for after having advanced perhaps some pounds in payment of court fees, the attorney cannot receive a shilling out of court as attorney in the cause, nor without producing a written order, signed by his client, just as any mere messenger who is sent for the money must do.

Why should not an attorney in these courts be allowed to stand in the place of his client in all stages, and for all the ordinary purposes of the suit, just in the same manner as he does in the Superior Courts? If you will agitate this question you will be doing good service to the Profession and to the public. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

C. J. G. EILOART.

BAILIFFS' FEES.

IN answer to the question put by your correspondent "B." in your journal of last week, as to the high bailiff's fee for possession under an execution for costs on a warrant to give possession of a tenement, there can be no doubt that he is only entitled to the possession money on the amount of the costs alone, and certainly not on the amount of the rental and costs jointly. The new scale of fees declares that the bailiff for keeping possession of the goods till sale, shall be entitled to sixpence in the pound on the amount for which the execution issues per day; and inasmuch as the execution issues for the costs alone, the possession-money can clearly only be charged on that amount. THE LAWYER.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—In Crabbe v. Moxey, 18 Law T. Rep. 346, the Court refused to appoint a guardian ad litem to infant defendants, without their appearance in court, observing that it was not an unmeaning form, it being desirable they should be shewn to be under the care of the appointed guardian. In the next case, Carwardine v. Wishlade, 18 Law T. Rep. 346, which was a similar application, the Court remarked that "the costs of appointing a guardian on the motion of counsel were actually greater than the costs of doing it by appearance in court or by commission. It was desirable this should be generally known." The costs of each mode of appointment are stated in the report.

COMMON LAW.—In O'Brien v. King, 18 Law T. Rep. 352, where a cause had been struck out of the list, none of the parties being present when it was called on, the Court consented to restore it, no injustice being done. A point in evidence is reported in Nott v. Fitzgibbon, 18 Law T. Rep. 351, a letter addressed by plaintiff's attorney to defendant was read by plaintiff's counsel, for the purpose of proving existence of a correspondence, and as an inducement to defendant's answers, but the jury were told by the judge not to pay any attention to anything stated in the letter. It was held that, even with this caution, the letter was inadmissible, for it was impossible to say whether the jury might not have been influenced by its statements. A letter read is evidence of the facts stated in it or of nothing.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

A QUESTION under the Ship Registry Act was decided in Cato v. Irving, 18 Law T. Rep. 345. In a ship belonging to the port of Liverpool, A. had forty and B. sixteen shares. The ship sailed from Liverpool under the command of B. who, at Sydney, sold ship and cargo to C. having brought with him an authority from A. to sell his shares. The ship was then registered at Sydney in C.'s name. Before this sale, and while the ship was at sea, A. mortgaged his shares in the ship and all future freight to D. who had not notice of the power of attorney, and a memorandum of this mortgage was entered in the Liverpool register. The ship was freighted at Sydney by C. sailed for England and arrived at London without having been to Liverpool. On its arrival D. took possession of it and the cargo, giving notice of his claims, and afterwards the agents of C. took possession. C. had no notice of the mortgage at the time of the sale to him. In this state of affairs it was held that D. (the mortgagee) was entitled to forty-eight shares in the ship and of the net freight (after allowing C. his expenses) to the amount of his mortgage, with interest and costs.

Again there are several bankruptcy cases. In Re Cheetham, 18 Law T. Rep. 343, it was held that the Court of Appeal cannot order the payment of money out of the Bankruptcy Court unless the application be made by way of appeal from a commissioner. Ex parte Cross, 18 Law T. Rep. 348, was an important decision as to reputed ownership. It was held that where the articles in the possession of the bankrupt are of such a peculiar nature as to cause inquiry whose property they were, such as pictures placed in a room which customers frequented, to whom it was stated that they were not the property of the holder, the rule of reputed ownership does not apply. In Re Ashlin, 18 Law T. Rep. 348, the Court ordered a bankrupt to be prosecuted by the assignees for fraudulently altering his books, and held that he was not entitled to protection until his last examination. In an Anonymous case, 18 Law T. Rep. 349, Mr. Commissioner AYRTON decided that there was no jurisdiction to annul with consent of creditors, save under sect. 230; but if every creditor consents, the order will be made at the risk of the petitioner. In Re Nowlan, 18 Law T. Rep. 349, an agreement was avoided by which, after a composition made with the other creditors whom he had deceived as to the facts, the bankrupt had agreed with a debtor, who had a judgment debt, for a mortgage of his leasehold premises. In Re Shelley, 18 Law T. Rep. 350, it was held that a petitioning creditor might buy up an overdue bill, in order to have a debt sufficient to sue out a commission, provided he gives full value for it; and in Re Shelley, 18 Law T. Rep. 350, an insolvent, against whom a commission of bankruptcy issues within two months from the filing of his petition, and pending the hearing, may be discharged by the Insolvent Court, although the issuing of the commission has the effect of diverting his estate out of the provisional assignee.

ASSURANCE CHRONICLE.

[The great interest and importance of this subject to Solicitors, who transact the greater portion of the Assurance business of the United Kingdom, suggests the utility of a brief record of the doings of the various candidates for their favours. The proceedings of every office will be impartially given, if sent.]

PROFESSIONAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

ON Wednesday, the 21th, the annual meeting was held at the office, No. 76, Cheapside. The chair was taken at one o'clock by Major Stones. From the report it appeared that the total sum assured during the year 1851 was 176,680*l.*; the number of policies issued, 611; and the increase of annual income from new premiums, 5,807*l.* 9s. 6d. The directors have endeavoured to extend the business of the company by the establishment of effective agencies in Newcastle and Sunderland, and by the formation of a local board of management in Dublin. An influential public meeting was also held in the month of October last, in Birmingham. The directors have vested Jacob Montefiore, esq. one of their body, with the means and authority for establishing agencies in various parts of our Australasian colonies. By such and similar proceedings the directors have succeeded, with eight per cent. only paid up on a fully subscribed capital of 250,000*l.* in creating an annual income, which, on the 31st of December last, amounted to 15,000*l.* from life premiums alone, exclusive of a large yearly return from instalments and interest on loans.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

On the 17th instant, J. Tiplady, esq. Durham, was appointed the Deputy Clerk of the Peace for Durham, in the place of the late Walter Scruton, esq.; and on the same day the Lord Lieutenant (Marquis of Londonderry) nominated Mr. Tiplady to the office of Registrar of the Court of Chancery, at Durham, to supply the vacancy also occasioned by Mr. Scruton's decease.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

CASES IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—A return to Parliament has been printed shewing that on the 21st ult. there were 644 appeals and other matters standing for hearing in the Court of Chancery.

Assizes.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

SHREWSBURY, March 18.—Mr. Baron Platt opened the commission about three o'clock yesterday. Mr. Justice Wightman was not able to arrive here till this morning. The business is very light. There is not one cause for trial, nor has a single venire been returned. Such an event is unparalleled. From the documents to which we referred in our report from Oxford, it appears that in the seventeenth century the average entry here exceeded ninety causes at each Assizes, and that from the beginning of this century down to the abolition of the Welsh judicature in the reign of George the Fourth the average was upwards of thirty; that from 1789 to 1849 they ranged about fifteen; and that certainly from 1789 down to the end of 1851 there is no instance of an assize without a cause. Nor is there any tradition or other the remotest reason for supposing that such an event ever before occurred since commissions of assize were first issued. Lest it might be fancied that preparations might have been made for the trial of several causes, but that the parties compromised since they came unto the assize, we have inquired and learned that not a single venire (that is, the first writ for the summoning of a jury) has been returned. At Oxford, though there was but one cause, there were three venires, but here there is neither cause nor venire.

The calendar contains the names of only thirty-four prisoners, and the offences are not of a very serious character.

HEREFORD, March 20.—The commission was opened here this afternoon with the usual formalities. The business is expected to be very light. There are two venires returned; but it is thought there will not be a cause for trial. The calendar contains the names of only twenty prisoners, and the charges against them are not of a very serious character.

HEREFORD, March 22.—The business here is lighter than usual. There are on the civil side only two causes. The calendar for county and city contains the names of twenty-seven prisoners. At post-hour all the cases except seven were tried, and it is considered certain that all will be disposed of early to-morrow.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

BURY ST. EDMUND'S, March 22.—The Chief Justice and Mr. Serjt. Adams arrived in this town on Saturday afternoon, when the commission was duly opened, and this morning both Courts proceeded to the despatch of business, Lord Campbell presiding in the Crown Court, and Mr. Serjt. Adams in the Nisi Prius Court. The entry of causes is but a meagre one, the cause list containing only eight causes, one of which alone is marked for trial by a special jury. With one exception the common jury causes are of the most ordinary description. The calendar, on the other hand, is very heavy, both in regard to the number of prisoners and the character of their alleged offences. There are 54 prisoners, and the charges embrace 4 cases of murder (3 of which are instances of death produced by poison), 5 of arson, 3 of rape, 3 of concealment, 4 of burglary, 5 of highway robbery, 2 of forgery, 3 of malicious wounding, 3 of night poaching, 2 of manslaughter, 1 of abduction, and a few minor offences.

HOME CIRCUIT.

KINGSTON, March 23.—The commission for the county of Surrey was opened at this place on Monday, and to-day business was proceeded with in both courts, Mr. Baron Parke presiding on the civil side, and Mr. Justice Coleridge in the Crown Court. There are 33 prisoners for trial on the Crown side, and 44 causes are entered at Nisi Prius, six of which are special jury cases.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.

WARWICK, March 22.—The cause list contains an entry of 13 causes only, several of which are undefended. The Lord Chief Justice Jervis took his seat at ten o'clock this morning, and all the common jury causes, except one, have been disposed of. None of them presented any feature of public interest.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

LIVERPOOL.—The calendar is very heavy, containing the names of 113 prisoners. Of these 7 are charged with murder, and 1 with an assault with intent to murder, 8 with manslaughter, 5 with cutting and stabbing, 4 with rape, 14 with burglary, 48 with robbery with violence, 4 with feloniously placing stones on a railway, 4 with bigamy, 2 with coining, 3 with forgery, and 5 with larceny and other offences. The cause-list, it is said, is good. The list is not yet published, but rumour assigns an entry of 35 causes to the Salford Hundred, and 54 causes to the West Derby Hundred, of which it is said 19 are marked for special juries.

THE NEW RECORD REPOSITORY.—The walls of this long-needed building are now above forty feet above the ground, and are sufficiently high to develope the character of the building, which is of a late massive perpendicular kind. The present portion is intended to be the centre of the structure, which, when completed, will be flanked by towers. The interior of the building is divided into a series of moderate-sized chambers, evidently with the intention of obtaining security from fire,—so as to limit the volume of fire in case a fire should happen anywhere. So far as the walls develope the form and arrangement of the chambers at present, it appears that they are made to communicate one with the other, besides there being an access to each one from a central passage.

MATTERS DISPOSED OF IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—FROM 1841 TO 1852.—By a return to the House of Commons it appears that the appeals, re-hearings, causes, exceptions, further directions, pleas, and demurrers, in each year for the last ten years, were as follow:—

2nd Nov. 1841 to 1st Nov. 1842		7,325
1844	1845	7,584
1845	1846	7,725
1847	1848	8,332
1848	1849	8,697
1850	1851	8,274

The business despatched by the Lord Chancellor, included in those totals, was as follows:—

1842	218
1845	118
1846	153
1847	270
1848	219
1851	110

On the 21st Feb. 1852, the matters remaining to be heard were as follow:—

Lord Chancellor	27
Lords Justices	20
Master of the Rolls	77
Vice-Chancellor Turner	124
Vice-Chancellor Kindersley	165
Vice-Chancellor Parker	231

INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT PARTNERSHIPS.—A Bill in the House of Commons, bearing the names of Mr. Slaney, Mr. Sotheron, and Mr. Tufnell, has been published, "To Legalise the Formation of Industrial and Provident Partnerships." The object of this Bill is to enable working men to form societies to carry on joint trades, and to legalise such societies already in existence. The promoters of this measure propose to enact, that "It shall be lawful for any number of persons to form themselves into a society for the purpose of maintaining, relieving, educating, endowing, or otherwise benefiting themselves, their husbands, wives, children, or kindred, or for attaining any other purpose or object for the time being authorised by the laws in force with respect to friendly societies, by carrying on or exercising in common day labour, trade, or handicraft, or several labours, trades, or handicrafts, and that this Act shall apply to all societies already established for any of the purposes herein mentioned, so soon as they shall conform to the provisions thereof." Then the Bill provides for the regulation of such "Industrial and Provident Partnerships," as they are called.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1852.

MAKING LAWS.

THEY who have never tried to construct a law can form no conception of the difficulty of so wording it as clearly to express the intention and to make provision for all that it is designed to embrace and to exclude. The framer is required to anticipate, not merely facts, and possible combinations of facts, but the doubts and quibbles of construction which ingenuity might start. It is easy to complain of the wordiness of a statute, but very difficult to avoid it.

A remarkable instance of this has just been afforded by no less accomplished a Lawyer than the LORD CHANCELLOR. In the spirit of a practical reformer, his Lordship was desirous of amending a defect in the law that regulates the mode of executing a Will. That law requires that it shall be signed on every page, and "at the foot or end thereof." Nothing could be seemingly more simple than this—it is brevity itself: some of our more radical law reformers, who would express a law as they write a letter, would have pronounced it the beau ideal of legislation.

Yet, upon the meaning of these few and apparently unmistakeable words, many questions have already arisen, which have produced much costly litigation, elicited some contradictory judgments from the Courts, and rendered many hundreds of Wills invalid. The point soon came to be mooted, what was the foot or end of a Will, or of any document? Clearly it could not be anywhere following it on the same paper. Thus, no person would assert that, if the Will were written on a sheet of paper and occupying the first page, a signature on the last page would be at "the foot or end thereof." Thus, then, it becomes a question of degree—of distance—of space. This conclusion attained, forthwith there necessarily followed a chaos of conflicting opinions as to the precise measure of space that would constitute a signing within the Act. The Ecclesiastical Courts construed it strictly: the Court of Chancery was more liberal. In such a conflict, it was impossible to say what Will was safe; and the LORD CHANCELLOR has come to the rescue with a measure to settle the question, by enacting that a Will shall not be rendered invalid by a defect in form, if substantially well executed.

But even Lord ST. LEONARDS great practical experience in writing law books has not enabled him to frame a short and simple law to effect his purpose. He has drawn a Bill, which now consists but of a single section, designed to render quite clear the manner in which a Will shall be executed. He finds that he cannot obtain his object by any description as an affirmative enactment, and so he is compelled to attain the end imperfectly by taking the various adverse decisions, and overturning them; that is, by enacting that the modes of signing, which by those decisions were declared to be insufficient, shall not be deemed to invalidate a Will.

Some of the other Law Lords objected to this mode of meeting the difficulty, but it is remarkable that none of them suggested any more practical method of overcoming it.

It was then proposed to submit the Bill to a select committee; but this was objected to, on the curious assertion that they would be sure not to agree upon the words in which the law should be expressed, so that the question would be no nearer a solution than before.

If this singular instance of the difficulties of law-making does not convince the reader that it is not a work for which anybody is competent who chooses to set up for a Legislator, let him take a pen and a sheet of paper, and try to put into words, whose meaning shall admit of no question, a simple direction as to the manner in which a Will shall be executed, and, having worded it, let him see how many holes he can pick in his own draft. After that he will perhaps be more lenient in his judgment upon, and more choice in his selection of, those to whom the task of constructing laws is confided.

THE ATTORNEYS' TAX.

WE fear that the distinction we last week endeavoured to draw between exacting pledges from candidates as to general questions, and as to particular grievances, was not sufficiently understood, and therefore we revert to it, for it is a point of considerable importance, the objection to pledges generally having occurred to the minds of many members of the Profession and restrained them from the only course by which justice is likely to be obtained.

We fully admit the impropriety of pledging a candidate to anything beyond principles, on any subject that affects the whole community, even in relation to a particular tax, provided that tax is one which is imposed fairly upon all, because it is impossible to anticipate what circumstances may arise to make change inexpedient.

But it is otherwise with a tax specially imposed upon a class. That is an injustice which no circumstances can render expedient, no State necessities justify; its existence is a wrong, the redress of which can never be unseasonable, never unwise, never to be deferred for the convenience of any person, or party, or Government. It is no answer to the demand for relief to say that the state of the revenue will not admit of it, that there are other taxes more urgent for repeal. If the revenue is deficient, it should not be made up by inflicting a tax upon one class, but by making all contribute in their fair proportions. The first duty of a Government, desirous of imposing taxes equitably, will be to repeal all taxes that are imposed inequitably, and to supply the deficiency thus occasioned by an equitable tax.

Therefore it is, that this case of a special tax upon a particular class is an exception from the general rule as to the impropriety and inexpediency of exacting pledges. Its right or wrong, its fitness or unfitness, its retention or repeal, do not depend upon any circumstances, or time, or season, or convenience, but are the same at all times and under any circumstances.

Thus, it would be wrong to exact a pledge from any candidate to vote for the repeal of the Income Tax, because circumstances may arise which might make its retention necessary, and being a tax imposed upon all having a certain amount of ability to contribute to the necessities of the State, its existence is not a question of right and wrong, justice and injustice, but only of expediency and propriety. But the Attorneys' Tax is inflicted upon a small class as an addition to the other taxes which they pay in common with their fellow citizens, and therefore the Attorney may rightfully insist upon those to whom they give their support at the elections distinctly pledging themselves to vote for the removal of the injustice that is thus done to those whose services and votes they are asking, nor can any candidate, who admits the injustice of such a special tax levied upon a small class, with any grace object to give a formal pledge to vote for its repeal, whatever the desires of Government or the requirements of party.

If he should hesitate, ply him with the arguments we have suggested.

CORRUPT PRACTICES AT ELECTIONS.

THE success that attended the St. Albans inquiry has suggested a new plan for the discovery and punishment of corrupt practices at elections, which will probably prove more efficient than any thing that has yet been attempted.

Hitherto the practical difficulty in the attainment of this object has proceeded from two causes: first, the unwillingness of either candidate or party to incur the cost of a petition, the expenses of pursuing the inquiry in London, and the limitation of that inquiry to the particular charge in the petition, excluding investigation of general corruption: second, our absurd law of evidence, which permits a witness to refuse to answer questions that might subject him to prosecution, instead of protecting his evidence and compelling him to answer.

When there was a real and earnest desire to discover the very truth, these difficulties were speedily and easily removed. Instead of bringing up witnesses to London, a Commission of Inquiry was sent down to the accused borough, and instead of sanctioning the plea of personal danger as an excuse for not speaking out, the more rational course was adopted of indemnifying witnesses who freely answered against any personal liabilities by reason of such evidence.

Why should not that, which has thus been found to promote the discovery of truth in one case, be made the general law of evidence and adopted in all cases? But this by the way.

A Bill is now before the House of Commons, which purposes to extend the provisions, that were specially enacted for the purpose of the St. Albans inquiry, to all cases in which the House of Commons shall be of opinion that an inquiry should be made into corrupt practices alleged to take place at elections. Without further trouble, and by virtue of this suggested law, her Majesty is empowered to appoint two or more Commissioners, for the purpose of making such inquiry. The Commissioners are to appoint a secretary, and so many clerks, messengers, and officers as may be thought necessary by one of the Secretaries of State, and to pay them such salaries as the Treasury may direct.

The Commissioners are to hold their inquiry in the borough, or within ten miles thereof, and to do so "by all such lawful means as to them appear best, with a view to the discovery of the truth, and for such a period retrospectively as they think proper," and in what manner "the last election of members or a member have or has been conducted, and whether any corrupt practices have been committed at such elections or any of them; and if so, whether by way of the gift or the promise of the gift of any sum of money or other valuable consideration to any voter or voters, or to any other person or persons on his or their behalf, for the promise or the giving of his or their vote or votes, or for his or their refraining or promising to refrain from giving his or their vote or votes at any such election, or for his or their promising or undertaking to procure the votes of other electors at any such election, or whether by the payment of any sum of money or other valuable consideration whatsoever to any voter, or to any other person on his behalf, before, during, or after the termination of such election, by way of head-money, or in compliance with any usage or custom in such city, borough, or place, or how otherwise, and whether any sum of money or other valuable consideration whatsoever, has been paid to any voter, or to any other person on his behalf, after the termination of any such election, as a reward for giving, or for having refrained from giving his vote at such elections, or any of them."

Such is the extensive range of the proposed inquiry, and the names of persons proved to be guilty are to be reported to Parliament.

The 7th section gives to the Commissioners full powers to send for persons and papers. The 8th indemnifies persons implicated in corrupt practices, who may be examined, and shall make a faithful discovery; and the Commissioners are to give a certificate of such faithful discovery, which is to be a protection to the person against all actions or other proceedings then pending or thereafter taken against him for such practices. The inquiry is to be upon oath: appearance to a summons from the Commissioners is to be compulsory; false evidence is to be punishable as perjury; and the expenses are to be paid by the Treasury.

This Bill receives the support of the Government, and is to be made law before the dissolution; it will be in operation at the coming General Election, and it is right that our readers should remember what are the liabilities that will be incurred by any resort to the practices which of old time have too much prevailed in many of the cities and boroughs. They cannot now escape detection and punishment.

COUNTY COURTS AMENDMENT BILL.

This Bill has gone down to the Commons, having been much improved in its progress through the Lords. The provisions empowering the Lord Chancellor to direct accounts, inquiries, evidence, pleas, and answers, to be taken by Commissioners in Bankruptcy and Judges of the County Courts, remain unaltered, and it is a very valuable feature of the Bill that it empowers witnesses to be examined vivâ voce. The 8th section is important to our readers. It is as follows:—

8. So much of the 13th and 14th Vict. c. 61, s. 6, as provides that the expense of employing a barrister or an attorney shall not be allowed on taxation of costs unless by order of the Judge, is hereby repealed; but the Judges of the County Courts shall from time to time determine in what cases such expenses shall be allowed in taxation, giving public notice of their determination, to be affixed to the walls of the court-house wherein they sit.

The 9th section is that which we have already given in extenso, empowering the Lord Chancellor to appoint five of the County Court Judges "to frame a Scale of Costs and Charges to be paid to Attorneys in the County Courts, to be allowed as between Attorney and Client and as between Party and Party." This scale of costs is to be approved by three Judges of the Superior Courts of Common Law, and laid before Parliament. The costs are to be taxed by the Clerk of the Court, "and in case upon such taxation it shall be alleged by the Attorney whose costs are under taxation, that his client has agreed to allow any costs other than those which would be allowed upon such taxation, any such costs shall not be allowed unless such agreement be in writing and signed by the parties sought to be charged therewith. But the Judge of such Court shall have power to review such taxation; and direct that a greater or a smaller sum shall be allowed in the particular circumstances of the case than is allowed by such clerk."

The 10th section is also one of those which we have so long sought to procure to be enacted, as being essential to the due administration of justice in the County Courts. At present, whether disputed or not, the plaintiff is obliged to prove his debt. The section before us provides that the summons shall inform the defendant that, if he intends to dispute the demand, he must give notice in writing to the plaintiff or his Attorney six days before the day of hearing, and that if no such notice be given the defendant shall not be allowed then to dispute the debt, but that judgment shall be given for the plaintiff upon proof of service of the summons; with power to the Judge to adjourn the hearing and allow the defendant to defend, if he shall be satisfied that justice between the parties shall so require.

The next section is equally an improvement. It enacts that no cause is to be set down for trial unless the summoning officer has certified that the defendant has been duly served with the summons.

The 15th and 16th sections remove a difficulty that had arisen as to the hearing of appeals. They provide that appeals may be heard in term or out of term, and empower the Judges to make orders regulating appeals.

The 17th section gives power to the Court or a Judge at Chambers to make an order entitling plaintiff to costs in cases where concurrent jurisdiction is given to the Superior Courts, or where the Judge had certified that there was sufficient reason for bringing such action in the Superior Courts.

The 18th section affords additional protection to officers against actions.

The 19th proposes that the Lord Chancellor shall frame a scale of fees to be taken by County Clerks for Equity business under this Act.

The 21st section provides for a more effectual auditing of the Clerks' accounts in Insolvency.

The 23rd section repeals the 91st section of the County Courts Act, which relates to practitioners, and in lieu thereof the 24th section provides thus—

24. It shall be competent for the parties to any suit commenced in any of the said courts to appear to prosecute or defend the same on his or their own behalf personally, or by his wife, or by a clerk or servant bonâ fide in his actual employ, or by an attorney properly concerned therein, and retained and instructed by either of such parties, or by a counsel instructed by any such attorney, but by no other person.

The 27th section limits the salaries of Judges to 1,500*l*. and of Clerks to 700*l*. per annum.

The 28th and last section practically abolishes Assistant Clerks, by providing that "no clerk of a County Court shall henceforth be appointed for more than one district in which a Court is holden."

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, March 29.—The Law of Wills Amendment Bill was read a third time and passed, on the motion of the Lord Chancellor.

DIGEST OF THE STATUTORY AND CRIMINAL LAW.

Tuesday, March 30.—Lord Brougham, in presenting a petition, of which we heard neither the prayer nor the place from which it came, availed himself of the opportunity to ask the noble earl at the head of the Government a question relative to the last report of the Commissioners of Common Law, and the intentions of the present Government to form a digest, first of the statutory and then of the criminal law. He had put the same question to his noble friend near him, the head of the late Government, but had never been able to extract from him an answer. After stating that the commission had already cost the country more than 60,000*l*. he insisted on the expediency of enabling it to bring its labours to a close by prolonging them for a certain limited time, so that the country might not lose the good money which it had already expended. He, therefore asked, first, whether the commission was to be continued, and next, whether the Government intended to form such a digest as he had already mentioned.—No answer was given to the question.

Thursday, April 1.—Lord Lyndhurst reminded their lordships that, in a statement with which he troubled them the other night, he complained of the great expense attending the administration of estates of persons found lunatic under commission. He had prepared a Bill for the purpose of remedying that evil, and proposed now to lay it on the table.—The Bill was read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

Friday, March 26.—The Attorney-General explained the scope and objects of the measure, the whole merit of which, he said, was due to the late Government. Among the charities embraced by this Bill were 21,000 the income of each of which was less than 20*l*. a-year, and upwards of 13,000 with less than 5*l*. a-year. To charities of this kind the machinery of the Court of Chancery was wholly inapplicable, since it would absorb such small properties, which were therefore entirely unprotected. In order to appreciate the remedy proposed, it was necessary to bear in mind the existing state of the law, which mainly depended upon the statute of Elizabeth, by which the control over all charities was given to the Court of Chancery. From that time down to the year 1786 nothing was done in the way of legislation. Sir Frederick then gave an exposition of the various Acts of Parliament and reports of commissioners and committees from that date down to the year 1851, when a Bill was brought into and passed the House of Lords, but did not reach the Commons until too late a period. The Bill before the House adopted the recommendations of the commissioners of 1839, and followed out the provisions of Lord Lyndhurst's Bills of 1844, 1845, and 1846. It proposed to establish a board of five commissioners, two of them to be paid, power being given to the Lord Chancellor to appoint a third paid commissioner. This board was to have no jurisdiction over charities, only powers of supervision, control, and advice; and it was proposed that no suit or proceeding should be instituted in respect to any breach of trust with reference to charities without the consent of the board. It was proposed to give jurisdiction in respect to small charities to the County Courts and district Courts of Bankruptcy. Provisions were inserted to enable trustees and others interested in charities to obtain the advice of the commissioners; and persons acting under such advice would be indemnified, though the decision of a Court should hold the advice to be erroneous. The commissioners would have power to send questions relative to charities under 30*l.* a-year to County Courts and district Courts of Bankruptcy, and to interfere and stay proceedings which they might think improperly conducted, and, by way of check, they would have no control over the Attorney-General acting ex officio. It was proposed to tax charities having 10*l.* a-year and upwards 2d. in the pound, no charity to pay more than 50*l.* This rate, it was computed, would raise 8,500*l.* a year, a sum sufficient for the support of the Board and its staff. The Bill would exempt from its operation the universities, collegiate and cathedral churches, the British Museum, and institutions supported wholly by voluntary contributions.—Sir A. Cockburn spoke warmly in favour of the Bill, and mentioned instances of gross abuse of charitable trusts.—Mr. Alderman Thompson protested strongly against subjecting Christ's Hospital, and other great charitable establishments in the metropolis, to the provisions of the Bill, and moved that it be referred to a select committee.—Sir R. Inglis seconded the motion, and claimed the exemption of the Royal Literary Fund. He admitted the expediency of legislation upon this subject; but this could be done without interfering with the great charities of London. — Mr. Alderman Sidney thought there was nothing derogatory in subjecting the royal hospitals and other great charitable institutions to inquiry; he would not exclude the universities, believing that all charitable trusts ought to be inquired into.—Sir W. P. Wood observed, that there seemed to be a misapprehension as to the powers of the commissioners, who would have no further control over the charities than that the latter were required to furnish statements of their accounts, which the commissioners had the power of investigating.—Mr. Freshfield supported the amendment.—Mr. Goulburn should give to the principle of the Bill his best support. Its provisions for the trial of cases obviated his objection to the former Bill. After some remarks by Mr. J. A. Smith and Mr. P. Howard, Lord J. Russell said he could not support the amendment, which would cause delay; but circumstances had been stated with reference to the royal hospitals which deserved consideration. He doubted the expediency of exempting them altogether; but perhaps some clause might be framed by which they could be protected from unnecessary interference. The amendment was withdrawn, and the House went into committee on the Bill; but the chairman immediately reported progress.

MILITIA BILL.

Monday, March 29.—Mr. Walpole moved that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, himself, and the Secretary at War, do prepare and bring in a Bill to amend and consolidate the laws respecting the militia —for which leave was given on the 20th of February. There were, he observed, three classes of objectors to a militia. One said, our defences were sufficient as they were; but Mr. Walpole shewed that while our army was very little larger than that of Belgium, notwithstanding the dimensions of our empire, in case of a sudden incursion not more than 25,000 men could be brought to bear upon any one point; and that our ships in commission at home consisted of only nine of the line, five frigates, one sloop, and seventeen steamers. Others said that there was no immediate necessity for preparation; but hasty preparations, while less perfect, would aggravate panic. The time of preparation and of action ought not to be simultaneous. The third class of objectors urged that we should increase our regular army. This would add greatly to the permanent expense, and both army and navy were instruments of attack as well as of defence, so that an augmentation of either would rouse suspicion and jealousy. The militia was a national institution—a force familiar to the country; we had actually at this moment a militia, for the law was only suspended. The militia had, moreover, done good service to the country, and in assuming the character of soldier, the militiaman did not renounce that of citizen. After a short review of the history of the militia laws, Mr. Walpole proceeded to develope the plan proposed by the Government; namely, first, to raise, if possible, without abandoning the ballot, a force of 80,000 volunteers, to be drilled and trained under the regulations of the 43 Geo. 3; 50,000 only to be raised the first year, and 30,000 the second year, the period of service to be five years. Secondly, it was proposed to raise these men by bounties of 3*l.* or 4*l.* either to be paid down at the time, or at the rate of 2s. or 2s. 6d. per month, the volunteer being at liberty to take it in one way or the other. Thirdly, with respect to the officers, it was proposed to dispense with the qualifications required by the 43 Geo. 3, in regard to all officers below the rank of major, and generally to consider the having been in the army equivalent to qualification. Fourthly, the Bill provided that the number of days' training required in the year should be twenty-one, the Crown having the power to extend the period to seven weeks, or to reduce it to three days. Lastly, with respect to the embodiment of the men, it was not proposed to make any alteration in the existing law. The expense required for bounty and equipment would be about 1,200,000*l.*; but if spread over five years, it would be about 240,000*l.* a year; except that during the first year the cost of equipment would raise the expense to 400,000*l.* including (as Mr. Walpole afterwards intimated) the clothing. This being a national defence, it was intended that the expense of the equipment, arms, and bounty should, save in districts which should not provide the proper quota, be borne by the public purse.

District Courts of Bankruptcy Abolition Bill.—On Thursday Lord Brougham's Bill was printed by order of the House of Lords to limit the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy, to abolish the Courts of Bankruptcy for the country districts, and to give to the Judges of the County Courts jurisdiction in matters of arrangement and of bankruptcy in certain cases. There are thirty-two sections in the Bill, and in addition to the same, there is what his lordship is pleased to call a "paper of observations explanatory of the objects of the Bill," extending to seventeen folio pages. It is proposed to appoint a "chief commissioner," of the Court of Bankruptcy, and to make alterations. The "eventual" annual saving is estimated at 67,370*l.* There is a portion of a provision of this Bill which might be introduced into another Bill on County Courts, which has already passed the Lords, and is now in the House of Commons. It is to the effect that no judge of any County Court is to be allowed to practise as a barrister-at-law. It is proposed to empower the Lord Chancellor by this Bill to appoint additional judges, not exceeding "fifteen." The 11th of October is fixed as the time when the Act, if passed, shall come into force.

Court of Bankruptcy.—The annual statement of the accounts for the year 1851, announces that 100*l.* were paid under the orders of the Lord Chancellor, 3,912*l.* under the orders of the Vice-Chancellors, and 202,818*l.* under those of the commissioners. On the dividend account the sum of 618,253*l.* was transferred, and 600,236*l.* paid out. The balances standing to the credit of the accountant are as follows:—General cash account, 112,865*l.*; bankruptcy fund, 1,270,819*l.*; unclaimed dividends, 303*l.* (in cash); chief registrar's account, 18,416*l.*

The Court of Bankruptcy.—Last year the per centage on assets of bankrupts' estates (as appears from a return just printed by order of the House of Lords) was 25,801*l.* 4s. 9d. and the amount of stamp duties for proceedings in bankruptcy, 12,626*l.* 8s. 10d. The interest on the bankruptcy fund account was 39,269*l.* 15s. 11d. Under the head of "Sundries, by registrar of meetings and others," 1,010*l.* 14s. 6d. and the payment in by Mr. Seton, clerk of her Majesty's Hanaper, 1,085*l.* 19s. 6d. The salaries paid were 63,082*l.* 18s. 1d. The compensations in the year were 21,426*l.* 17s. 4d. The retiring annuities, 2,333*l.* 6s. 8d. and the expenses, travelling, &c. and bank remuneration, 4,137*l.* 4s. 9d.

Beer and Spirits.—Mr. Hume has obtained some returns, which were yesterday printed, of the number of persons licensed for the sale of beer and spirits in each Excise collection in Scotland, in each year from 1831 to 1851, and similar returns for England and Wales; also in respect to the number of persons licensed for the sale of beer to be drunk and not to be drunk on the premises in each Excise collection in England and Wales during the same years. In Scotland, in 1831, the number licensed for the sale of beer and spirits was 17,611, and last year the number was only 14,672. In England, in the first year, the number was 50,547, and last year it had reached 60,579, to sell beer and spirits. In 1831 there were 30,978 persons licensed to sell beer to be drunk or not drunk on the premises (there was no difference made till 1835), and last year the number licensed to sell beer to be drunk on the premises was 37,598, and not to be drunk on the premises 3,293.

Suitors in Chancery Relief Bill.—This Bill (as amended in committee) has been printed. It contains fifty-one clauses. The principal provisions are directed to the reduction or abolition of fees, the payment of salaries from the consolidated or suitors' fee fund, and the collection of fees. All fees will be paid into the suitors' fee fund. The offices of Clerk of Hanaper, Secretary of Decrees, one of the gentlemen of the Chamber, the Chaff-wax, the Sealer, and their deputies, are abolished, and the compensations to be allowed them prescribed. The duties of the subpœna and affidavit offices will be performed in future by the clerks of records.

Friendly Societies.—The reports of the Registrars of Friendly Societies in Scotland and Ireland (presented to Parliament) have just been printed. In Scotland it is stated, on a rough estimate, that the registered societies distribute about 20,000*l.* annually in sickness, and that about 30,000 of the population are enrolled as members. The registrar is of opinion that many of the societies are not proceeding on sound principles. In Ireland it appears that the returns furnished shew that during the respective periods covered by them there had been expended in respect of deaths the sum of 115*l.* 2s.; sickness, 13*l.* 0s. 6d., and a total expenditure of 225*l.* 18s. 7d. It is stated that "the great excess in payments in respect of deaths over those in respect of sickness may be in some measure explained by its being stated that a sum of 72*l.* was paid in respect of deaths by one society, which does not provide relief in cases of sickness."

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

The powers of churchwardens and the rights of parishioners were brought under discussion in the Court of Chancery, in the case of Woodman v. Robinson, 19 Law T. Rep. 8. The ratepayers had formally voted in vestry resolutions to warm the church, by introducing warm air or water-pipes under the floor. The churchwardens proceeded to carry out these resolutions of the vestry. A single inhabitant of the parish, rated to the church-rate, filed a bill against the churchwardens, to restrain them from executing the intended works, alleging that the placing of hot pipes in the soil would engender noxious gases, dangerous to the health of the plaintiff and others attending the church, and that the churchwardens had not applied for a faculty from the ordinary. The Court refused the injunction.

The Court of Q. B. has decided that the orders of the Poor-law Board are binding upon the auditor and the overseers, as well as upon the guardians. Therefore, in Reg. v. Greene, 19 Law T. Rep. 9, where the guardians had appealed against the disallowance by the auditor of the salary due to an assistant overseer and collector of rates appointed by them, and the Poor-law Board had reversed the disallowance, it was held that at the next audit the auditor and overseers were bound to make the payment. In the same case, it was also decided, that the effect of sec. 61 of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, is to take away from the vestry this power of appointing an assistant overseer, where the guardians have already, in fact, appointed one under an existing unrescinded order of the Poor-law Board.

From the Oxford circuit, a point is reported of considerable interest, upon the construction of the 1st section of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, which gives to the Court power to amend variances. It occurred in an indictment for false pretences. The pretence alleged was that defendant went to B. on behalf of the prosecutrix and served a certain order of affiliation on one C. and said that he was entitled to receive, for serving the said order, the sum of 5s. The evidence was, that prisoner said he had been with the order to B. to serve C. and left it with the landlady where C. lodged, he being out, and it was held that the evidence did not support the averment. It was held also not to be such a variance as the Court had power to amend, that power being limited to "the name or description of any matter or thing" named or described in the indictment. (Reg. v. Bailey, 19 Law T. Rep. 11.)

Expenses of Bailing Prisoners.—Mr. Mullings, M.P. in an address of some length, brought under the notice of the Court at Gl[illegible] Sessions, a complaint which had been laid [illegible] the Cirencester bench of magistrates by a man named Midwinter, under the following circumstances:—Midwinter's son had been committed to the county prison for trial, but bail had been granted by the magistrates, and Midwinter proceeded to the county prison to procure the liberation of his son. While at the prison he stated he was referred to Mr. Brown, an attorney, although the necessary steps for the liberation of his son had been previously taken; that he subsequently obtained his son's release, but that he was charged a fee of 6s. 8d. by Mr. Brown, and also a fee by the magistrates' clerk, Mr. Commeline, which he had been led to expect he should not have been called upon for. Such being the facts of the case, Mr. Mullings thought the officers of the gaol had been guilty of an irregularity in giving Midwinter the name of an attorney to whom he was to apply; and that according to the scale of fees to be paid, Mr. Commeline ought not to have made any charge in this case. An inquiry, it seems, was made, when it appeared that Captain Mason, the governor of the gaol, had merely stated to Midwinter, in answer to his inquiry where he could find a county magistrate (knowing that Mr. Wintle, one of the county magistrates, and Mr. Brown were coming to the gaol to bail out another prisoner that day), that if he called upon Mr. Brown he would ascertain what time a magistrate would be at the prison, and that Midwinter inquired as he went out of the officer at the lodge where Mr. Brown lived, and that officer having some time since had a fancy card given him by Mr. Brown, merely for him to examine the printing, he had, without any idea of a recommendation, handed over the card to Midwinter as his best instruction where to find Mr. Brown. The 6s. 8d. which Mr. Brown had received he charged Midwinter as a fee for the part he took in going with him to Mr. Wintle. After some discussion, the Court arrived at the opinion that no blame whatever attached to the officers of the prison. With respect to the other subject of complaint, it appeared that inquiry had been made of Mr. Commeline, and he had stated that he always charged the fee he had on this occasion, considering himself entitled to it; but the opinion of the Court was against that view. No motion was, however, made by Mr. Mullings.

TITHE COMMISSION.

The following is a copy of the report of the Tithe Commissioners to her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, dated January 31, 1852, (For the year 1851):—

"Tithe Commission-office, Jan. 31.

"Sir,—It is our duty to report to you the progress of the commutation of tithes in England and Wales to the close of the year 1851.

"We have received notice that voluntary proceedings have commenced in 9,634 tithe districts; of these notices none were received during the year 1841.

"We have received 7,070 agreements, and confirmed 6,778; of these none have been received, and none confirmed during the year 1851.

"7,020 notices for making awards have been issued, of which 51 were issued during the year 1851.

"We have received 5,583 draughts of compulsory awards, and have confirmed 5,366; of these 51 have been received, and 106 have been confirmed during the year 1851.

"We have received 11,639 apportionments, and confirmed 11,530; and of these 296 have been received, and 254 confirmed during the year 1851

"In 12,141 tithe districts, as will be seen from the above statement, the rent-charges have been finally established by confirmed agreements or awards.

"809 altered apportionments were made by the tithe commissioners up to the 31st of December, 1851, of which 619 were confirmed.

"At that date exchanges of glebe lands were effected in 100 places, and 36 such changes were in progress.

"At the close of 1851 we had confirmed 13,160 distinct mergers of tithes or rent-charges.

"In our last report we submitted to you, for the consideration of the Legislature, that, to prevent delays, agitation, and expense, it might be expedient to deal with a few parishes in which the tithes belong to the landowners, or moduses or tithes of small value remain to be commuted, in a more summary manner, instead of by those regular processes by which the bulk of the tithes have been hitherto commuted.

"We stated that there were probably 100 cases in the north of England in which it would be impossible to complete a formal commutation at an expense amounting to less than from 50 to 100 years' purchase of the annual value of the rent-charge.

"We are aware that these cases must be disposed of before the work of commutation is complete, or before any Act declaring tithes to have ceased to exist can be passed; but we feel most reluctant to subject the parties to an expense which must inevitably be considered disproportioned to any benefit obtained.

"Up to this point we have the satisfaction of feeling that the business of commutation has been conducted with general tranquillity and harmony, and we are very unwilling that a work hitherto considered beneficial to all parties should close with any instance of individual hardship.

"The additional powers which we require are wholly for the purpose of preventing expense to the parties and the public; and we are of opinion that if these powers should be granted in the manner pointed out in our last report, tithes might be prospectively extinguished by one and the same Act.

"Assuming that the existing commission will expire with the session of 1854, we think we should by that time be able to present a report shewing how the tithes of each parish or township in England and Wales have been dealt with.

"If, in consequence of litigation before the Superior Courts, or from other causes, the tithes of any parish or district remain uncommuted, we would place such tithes in a separate schedule; and, with this exception, all others might be finally extinguished, and courts of justice precluded from entertaining claims for them.

"The Act itself would be sufficient notice to all tithe-owners whose tithes may not have been already commuted. If, notwithstanding the notices already given, and the inquiries repeatedly made, any claims to tithes should still be outstanding, a further opportunity would thus be given for effecting a commutation, and it would only be the neglect of the parties themselves if any tithes should be extinguished without an equivalent.

"We have the honour to be, Sir, your very obedient servants,

"Wm. Blamire,
"Thomas Wentworth Buller,
"G. Darby.

"To the Right Hon. Sir George Grey, bart. M.P. &c."

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

The reader will remember the decision, some few months since, that where an agreement had been made with a landowner for the purchase of his land for a railway at a fixed sum to be paid, on consideration of which he withdrew his opposition to the Bill, and the railway was afterwards abandoned, it was held that he was entitled to specific performance of his contract, although the quid pro quo had neither been given nor was required. For the sake of justice, which was violated by that decision, we are pleased to see that the Lords Justices have, upon appeal, reversed the decision, and in Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 2, have refused specific performance, and left the landowner to his remedy at law for damages. Lord Cranworth expressed some doubt whether there was an absolute contract at all; if it was not, in fact, conditional upon the railway being made.

In Peters v. The Dublin and Wicklow Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 12, the company's special Act had provided, that where contracts for land were in existence at the time of the passing of the Act the value need not be assessed as there directed, a mere notice to treat did not come within the exception.

WINDING UP.

Two little points of practice are to be noticed. In Re The Arigna Iron and Coal Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 8, the costs of opposing an order to wind up were refused to a party who had been present at a meeting at which it had been unanimously resolved that the affairs of the company should be wound up, and on which occasion he did not express any dissent from the proposition, but afterwards opposed the order.

In Re The Pennant, &c. Mining Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 8, the Court sanctioned an arrangement by which a notice of appeal had been withdrawn upon terms of paying the costs out of the estate.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

It will suffice merely to direct attention to the case of Mortimer v. Watts, 19 Law T. Rep. 3, relating to the powers conferred upon trustees by certain provisions in a will. It cannot be shortly stated; but it will be read with interest.

In Trotter v. Vining, 19 Law T. Rep. 6, the question was as to a self-constituted trust. A. the wife of B. was entitled to an estate in her own right. Proceedings were taken against C. to recover it. He compromised the matter by paying a sum of money, which B. received, and invested in his own name, but regularly paid the dividends to his wife, and spoke of it as belonging to her. B. died, and the fund was held to be in trust for her separate use.

LATE CASES ON THE LAW OF LANDLORD AND TENANT.(a)

In accordance with the intimation contained in our last essay on the above subject, we now resume it in the consideration of the law relating to distress, and the recent decisions thereon. And here we may remark that of the various remedies which the law affords to the landlord for the recovery of rent from his tenant, that by distress is at once the most ancient and the most summary in its nature. Lord Coke recommends it, in preference to others, as the most plain and certain. It is defined by Blackstone to be the taking of a personal chattel out of the possession of the wrongdoer into the custody of the party injured, to procure a satisfaction for the wrong committed. The thing itself taken by this process is also frequently called a distress. For all services a distress may be made of common right; for distresses were incident by the common law to every rent-service, and by particular reservation to rent-charges also, but not to rent secs, till the stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, extended the same remedy to all rents alike, and thereby in effect abolished all material distinction between them. (Com. Dig. tit. "Distress," A. 1.) So that now we may lay it down as a universal principle that a distress may be taken for any kind of rent in arrear, the detention whereof beyond the day of payment is an injury to him that is entitled to receive it. A distress may also be made not only for the rent of land and leases, but also for the rent of any part of a house, as a single room or apartment therein, if it be the subject of a particular demise. And even if such an apartment be let furnished, a distress may be made for the whole rent reserved, because in contemplation of law it issues wholly out of the part of the demised premise, which belongs to the realty. (Newman v. Anderton, 2 New Rep. P.C. 224.) But a landlord has no right to distrain for double rent upon a weekly tenant who holds after a notice to quit. (Sullivan v. Bishop, 2 C. & P. 859.) And a landlord has no right to distrain, unless there be an actual demise to the tenant at a fixed rent; and therefore, where a tenant was in possession under a memorandum of agreement to let on lease, with a purchasing clause, for twenty-one years, at the net clear of 63*l.* the tenant to enter at any time on or before a particular day; it was held that this only amounted to an agreement for a future lease, and that no lease having been executed, and no rent subsequently paid, the landlord was not entitled to distrain. (Dunk v. Hunter, 5 B. & Ald. 322.) The only remedy in such a case is by an action for use and occupation.

In another case where, under an agreement for a lease at a certain rent, the tenant was let into possession before the lease was executed; it was held that the lessor could not during the first year distrain for rent, for there was no demise, express or implied. (Hegan v. Johnson, 2 Taunt. 148.) The plaintiff who had entered on the premises under an agreement for a lease admitted a charge of half a year's rent, in an account between him and his landlord. It was held that this constituted him a tenant from year to year, and liable to distress. (Cox v. Bent, 5 Bing. 185.) But where the plaintiff entered a farm under an oral agreement for a lease for ten years; though the time of paying rent was settled, it did not appear what was the amount to be paid; the lease was never executed, but the plaintiff occupied according to the terms of the professed lease, and paid a certain rent for two years. It was held that the lessor might distrain. (Knight v. Bennett, 3 Bing. 361.) Where the occupier under an agreement for a lease at a certain rent pays the rent, he becomes tenant from year to year on the terms of the agreement, and the landlord may distrain. (Main v. Lovejoy, 1 Ry. & M. 355.)

At common law, it was not every reservation, though nominally of rent, which constituted a rent properly so called, and therefore nothing is distrainable within the statute of Geo. 2, already referred to, which is not such a reservation as would have been at least a rent-seck at the common law. Thus, in replevin, the defendant avowed, under a distress due from the plaintiff to him, upon an assignment of a lease for years to the plaintiff, in which assignment there was no clause of distress; it was held that this was not a rent for which a distress lay, there being no reversion in the defendant. Curiâ,—"There are two ways of creating a rent. The owner of the land either grants a rent out of it, or grants the land and reserves a rent: there is no such thing as a rent-seck, rent-service, or rent-charge, issuing of a term of years." (Bro. Det.e, pl. 39; ——— v. Cooper, 2 Wils. 375.)

If a person seised in fee grants out a lesser estate, saving the reversion of rent, or other services, the law gives him, without any express provision, remedy for such rent or services by distress. (2 Bac. Ab. 106.) But for a rent which issues out of an incorporeal inheritance, the reversioner cannot distrain; as if I have a right of common in another man's soil, and I grant it to A. reserving rent, if the rent be behind I cannot distrain the beasts of A. because that the right of common, which every man has, runs through the whole common. The king is, however, an exception to this rule; for he, by his prerogative can distrain upon all lands of his lessee. (Woodf. Land. and Ten.)

A person who has not the reversion cannot distrain of common right; but he may reserve to himself a power of distraining, or the reservation may be good to bind the lessee by way of contract, for the performance whereof the lessor may have an action of debt. (2 Bac. Ab. 106.) Thus, if the assignee of a term surrender to the original lessor, though he reserve a sum in gross to be paid annually, he cannot distrain for that or the original rent, but he may have an action of assumpsit for such sum in gross. (Smith v. Mapleback, 1 T. R. 441.) If a lessee for years assign his term, rendering rent, he cannot distrain for it without a particular clause for that purpose, because he has no reversionary interest. The only remedy that the assignor has is by an action on his contract. (2 Lev. 80; Co. Litt. 292; Cooper's case, 2 Wils. 375.) A termor who lets to an under-tenant cannot, after his term has expired, distrain for rent, if the latter refuses to acknowledge him as landlord, although he still retains the possession. (Burn v. Richardson, 4 Taunt. 720.) A devisee may distrain for rent devised to him out of the lands, if the land be charged with a distress, and not otherwise. (Shep. Touch. 439.) For a rent granted for equality of partition by one coparcener to another, or for a rent granted to a widow out of lands whereof she is dowable in lieu of dower, or for a rent granted in lieu of lands upon an exchange, the grantee may distrain without any provision of the parties, though he have no reversion; the law giving him a distress in these cases, lest the grantee should be without remedy. (Co. Litt. 169.) But if a man grant rent over to another, after arrearages incurred, he cannot distrain for such arrearages, because they are by the grant divided from the freehold of the rent. (Ognel's case, 4 Rep. 49; Dixon v. Harrison, Vaugh. 40.)

A mortgagee, after giving notice of the mortgage to the tenant in possession, under a lease prior to the mortgage, may distrain for the rent in arrear at the time of the notice (although he was not in the actual seisin of the premises, or in the receipt of the rents and profits at the time it became due), as well as for rent which may accrue after such notice, the legal title to the rent being in the mortgagee. (Wood v. Tate, 2 New Rep. C. P. 247; Brad. on Dist.)

A receiver appointed by the Court of Chancery may distrain for rent, where he sees it necessary, and need not apply first to that Court for a particular order for the purpose; because, as that Court never makes an immediate order, but appoints a future day for a tenant to pay, it might be an injury to the estate to wait till that time, as it would give the tenant an opportunity to convey his goods off the premises in the meantime. (Pitty v. Snowden, 1 Atk. 759; Hughes v. Hughes, 3 Bro. Chan. Cas. 87.) If, however, there be any doubt who has the legal right to the rent, then the receiver should make an application to that Court for an order, as he must distrain in the name of the person who has that right.

One joint tenant may distrain alone; but then he must avow in his own right and as bailiff to the other. (Pullen v. Palmer, 2 Mad. 73, 150, S.C.; 3 Salk, 207.) One of several joint tenants may sign a distress, if the others do not forbid him. If they, when applied to, merely decline to act, that will not prevent him from proceeding. (Robinson v. Hoffman, 3 C. & P. 234.) One tenant in common may distrain for his share of the rent upon the terre-tenant holding under him, and another tenant in common, where such terre-tenant has paid the whole rent to the other tenant in common after notice not so to pay it. (Harrison v. Barnby, 5 T. R. 246.) One of several co-heirs in gavelkind may distrain for rent due to him and his companions, without an actual authority from his companions. (Leigh v. Shepherd, 2 B. & B. 465.)

A man may distrain cattle without any express authority, and if he obtain the assent of the person in whose right he did distrain, his assent will be as effectual as his command could have been, if such assent shall have relation to the time of the distress taken. (2 Leon. 196; Gilb. Dist. 32.)

By the common law, the executors or administrators of a man seised of a rent-service, rent-charge, rent-seck, or a fee-farm, in fee-simple or fee-tail, could not distrain for the arrearages incurred in the lifetime of the owner of such rents. It was therefore enacted by stat. 32 Hen. 8, c. 37, s. 1, that the executors and administrators of tenants in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life, for rent-services, rent-charges, rent-seck, and fee-farms, may distrain upon the lands chargeable with the payment thereof, so long as such lands remain in the possession of the tenant who ought to have paid such rent or fee-farm, or of any other person claiming under him by purchase, gift, or descent. By sec. 3 of the same statute, it is enacted that if a man have in right of his wife any estate in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life, or of or in any rents or fee-farms, and the same rents or fee-farms shall be due and unpaid at the death of his wife, such husband may distrain for the same arrearages in the same manner as if his wife had been living. By sec. 4 it is enacted that if any person have such rents or fee-farms for term of life or lives of other persons, he, his executors, or administrators may distrain for arrearages of such rent incurred at the death of the cestui que vie, in the manner as if such cestui que vie had been still living.

This statute is a remedial law, and extends to the executors of all tenants for life, as well to those executors who, before the statute, were entitled to an action of debt, as to those who had no remedy whatever. (Hool v. Bell, 1 Lord Raym. 172.) So that Lord Coke's idea, that the preamble concerning the executors and administrators of tenant for life is to be intended of tenant per auter vie, so long as cestui que vie lives, seems to be too narrow. (Co. Litt. 162, b.)

Where, however, a tenant for life of a rent-charge confessed a judgment which was extended by elegit, and the tenant for life dying, the conusee distrained, and in replevin avowed for the arrears incurred in the lifetime of the tenant for life, upon demurrer the distress was holden to be bad, and not warranted by the statute: first, because the case of the conusee is not enumerated in it; secondly, because he comes in in the post, and not under the tenant for life. (Poole v. Duncombe, Bull. N.P. 57.) Neither is the executor of a grantee of a rent-charge of divers years, if he so long live, within the statute. (Powell v. Killick, Bull. N.P. 57.) Lord Coke says, "If a man make a lease for life, or a gift in tail, reserving rent, this is a rent-service within the statute:" from whence it may be inferred that he thought that a rent reserved upon a lease for years was not within it; for the landlord is not tenant in fee, fee-tail, or for life, of such a rent; and it is the executors of such tenants only who are mentioned in the Act. However, in trespass, where it appeared that the defendant had distrained the plaintiff's goods for rent due to his testator upon a lease for years, Lord Chief Justice Lee held it to be within the statute, and the defendant obtained a verdict. (Powell v. Killick, Bull. N.P. 57.) This statute does not extend to copyhold rents, but only to rents out of free land. (Appleton v. Doyley, & W. 135.)

The statute in question is applicable to cases where the representative might have sued in debt at common law, as well as to those where he had no remedy. But if a tenant for life or in fee reserve rent upon a lease for years, although the rent follows the reversion, and, therefore, the owner cannot be said to hold it for years, yet he is not tenant of it in fee or for life, in such manner as the statute requires. (Prescott v. Boucher, 3 B. & Ad. 849.)

By the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 37, it is enacted that it shall be lawful for the executors or administrators of any lessor or landlord to distrain upon the lands demised for any term or at will, for the arrearages of rent due to such lessor or landlord in his lifetime, in like manner as such lessor or landlord might have done in his lifetime. Sect. 38 enacts that such arrearages may be distrained for after the end or determination of such term or lease at will, in the same manner as if such term or lease had not been ended or determined; provided that such distress be made within the space of one calendar month after the determination of such term or lease, and during the continuance of the possession of the tenant from whom such arrears became due. Provided also, that all and every the powers and provisions in the several statutes made relating to distresses for rent, shall be applicable to the distresses so made as aforesaid.

A landlord's right of distress formerly ceased at the expiration of the lease; but the stat. 8 Anne, c. 14, ss. 6, 7, enabled him to distrain for six calendar months afterwards, provided his title continued, and the distress was made during the tenant's possession; which possession, it has been decided, may be with the lessor's permission, and of part only of the demised lands. (Nuthall v. Staunton, 6 D. & Ry. 155.) It has been held that where, by the custom of the country, or by agreement, the tenant is entitled to the use of the barns for a certain period after the expiration of the lease, to house the last year's crop, the demise is to be considered as having continuance for this purpose during such occupation, and, therefore, that the crops are distrainable, though the lease has expired more than six months. (Bevan v. Delahay, 1 H. Bl. 5.)

As regards the things which may be taken under a distress, this process being anciently considered merely as a pledge in the hands of the lord to compel the tenant to perform the service or duty, could not at common law be sold, but was to be restored in the same plight to the owner when such service or duty was performed, and nothing could be distrained unless it could be returned in specie and undamaged. It follows that money cannot be distrained unless it be in a bag, for then it may be identified. (Roll. Abr. 666, pl. 4; 2 Bac. Abr. 109.) So milk, fruit, &c. cannot be distrained; nor, till made distrainable by statute, could hay or sheaves of corn be the subject of a distress, unless they were in a cart. (Gilb. Law of Distress, 34.) As to the things, however, which may be distrained, or taken in distress, we may lay it down as a general rule that all chattels personal are liable to be distrained, unless particularly protected or exempted. (3 Black. Com. 7.)

By stat. 2 Wm. 3, c. 5, it is enacted that it shall be lawful for any person having arrear of rent, to seize and secure any sheaves or cocks of corn, or corn loose or in the straw, or hay being in any barn or granary, or upon any hovel, stack, or rick, or otherwise upon any part of the land or ground charged with such rent, and to lock up or detain the same in the place where the same shall be found, until the same shall be replevied or sold. By stat. 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 8, the landlord may take and seize as a distress for arrears of rent, all sorts of corn and grass, hops, roots, fruits, pulse, or other product whatsoever growing upon any part of the estate described, and the same may lay up, &c. on the premises, and in convenient time sell and dispose of the same towards satisfaction of the rent and the charges of such distress and sale. Provided that notice of the place where such distress shall be lodged shall, in one week after the lodging thereof, be given to the tenant.

Five different sorts of things were not distrainable at common law:—1. Things annexed to the freehold. 2. Things delivered to a person exercising a public trade, to be carried, wrought, worked up, or managed in the way of his trade or employ. 3. Cocks or sheaves of corn. 4. Beasts of the plough, and instruments of husbandry. 5. The instruments of a man's trade or profession.

By stat. 8 Anne, c. 14, it is provided that no goods shall be liable to be taken in execution, unless the party at whose suit the same is sued out, shall, before the removal of the goods, pay to the landlord the rent due at the time of the taking, provided the arrears do not amount to more than one year's rent; and in case the arrears exceed one year's rent, then the party paying one year's rent may proceed to execute his judgment; and the sheriff is empowered and required to levy and pay to the plaintiff as well the money so paid for rent as the execution money.

Having considered the principles regulating the law of distress, we now proceed to the examination of the several cases recently determined on this important subject.

The landlord's remedy of distress for rent due before the commencement of a tenant's imprisonment, is not extinguished by the tenant's petition and discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, though the amount of rent was inserted in the schedule as a debt due to the landlord, and the distress was not made until after the discharge. The judgment confessed under sec. 8 of that statute operates to protect the insolvent from the ordinary remedy of a creditor by action, but does not extinguish the remedy by distress. That remedy is restrained by sec. 58. (Phillips v. Sherill, 14 L. J. 144, Q.B.) A distress cannot be made at common law, after the tenancy has been determined by notice to quit, though the rent may have become due before such determination, and an avowry for such rent must, therefore, be framed so as to bring the case within the 8 Anne, c. 14. (Williams v. Stiven, 15 L. J. 321, Q.B.) Though growing crops seized under a fi. fa. are protected from distress at common law, yet if the execution creditor, by reason of his claiming some things distrainable at common law, is driven to rely on the statute of 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, he is bound to bring himself in his pleading within the provisions of that statute; and therefore, in an action of trover for pigs, swine, wheat, straw, and other goods, &c. the defendant (the landlord of a farm) justified under a distress for rent, and the plaintiff, in his replication, set out a fi. fa. on a judgment recovered against M. C. (the tenant), and an assignment to him (the plaintiff) by the sheriff of all the crops, under an agreement by which the plaintiff agreed to use and expend the produce on the farm, according to the custom of the country, and alleged that the wheat, straw, &c. seized was the produce of the crops, and that the pigs and swine were kept to consume the straw and produce, under the provisions of the statute and the agreement. Held ill, for not shewing that there was no covenant or written agreement between the landlord and tenant within the third section. Secondly, the plaintiff's agreement, as set out in the replication, being that he would not sell or dispose of or carry off from the farm any straw, &c. except such as M. C. had a right to sell or dispose of in case the execution had not issued. Held, that the replication which did not negative that the straw, &c. was straw which M. C. had a right to dispose of, was, for this reason, also ill. Thirdly, the plea having stated the possession of M. C. the replication as to the residue of the goods, &c. stated that M. C. at the time when, &c. was in possession of part only, and not of the whole of the said farms, and the said residue was not the said part of the farm in the possession of M. C. Held ill, as being either an argumentative denial of M. C.'s possession, and of the cattle, &c. being on the farm, or an informal new assignment. (Hutt v. Morrell and Another, 16 L.J. 240, Q.B.)

To a declaration in replevin, for taking the cattle, goods, and chattels of the plaintiff, the defendant made cognisance as bailiff of W. M. and justified the taking for rent due to W. M. from the occupier J. T. (W. M.'s tenant). Plea in bar, that the premises in which the cattle, goods, and chattels were taken, were occupied by J. T. as tenant, at a yearly rent; that at the time of the making of the distress, J. T. was a "common public livery stable-keeper," and was used in his trade "as such" from time to time, to take in, to feed, to keep, and to clean all other persons' horses and carriages who placed the same with him; that it was necessary for the carrying on such trade that horses and carriages should be kept and taken care of on the premises, and that the cattle, goods, and chattels distrained were placed and remained on the premises to be managed and dealt with by J. T. in his said trade, as defendant well knew, &c. Held, that horses and carriages standing at livery may be distrained for rent. Semble, if articles are sent to remain at a place they are distrainable; if sent for a particular purpose, and the remaining at the place be an incident necessary for the completion of such purpose, they are not. (Parsons v. Gingell, Lewis v. Gingell, 16 L. J. 227, C.P.)

Where the sheriff seizes goods in execution, and assigns to the execution creditor, having notice that a year's rent is due to the landlord, though he may be liable to an action at the suit of the landlord, yet such landlord cannot distrain for his year's rent while the goods are in the possession of the sheriff or his assignee. Trespass, qu. cl. fr. of the plaintiff. Plea, entry to seize growing crops under a distress for rent. Replication, a previous seizure under a fi. fa. at the suit of the plaintiff against the tenant of the locus in quo, and an assignment to the plaintiff by the sheriff under it. Rejoinder, that the seizure was made after notice to the sheriff and to the plaintiff that a year's rent was due to the landlord, and that neither the plaintiff nor the sheriff paid such year's rent; wherefore the landlord (the defendant) distrained. Held, that the rejoinder was bad. Held also, that the replication was good, and was no departure from the declaration, which stated the closes to be the closes of the plaintiff; for, although the replication shewed a tenant from whom the rent was due at the time of the execution, yet such possession was consistent with the possession of the plaintiff at the time of the trespass. (Wharton and Another v. Naylor and Another, 17 L.J. 278, Q.B.)

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

We fear that the County Courts Amendment Bill, although sent to the Commons, and there undertaken by Mr. Fitzroy, will scarcely escape the fate to which all the projected Law Reforms have been condemned. An effort is to be made to carry it through, but unfortunately honourable members are just now thinking much more of their interests as candidates than of their duties as legislators.

The Absconding Debtors Arrest Act having, it seems, been frequently in requisition in the County Courts, and before the Bankruptcy Commissioners, Mr. Kerr, Assistant Judge of the Caernarvon District, has prepared for practical use a convenient little edition of it, in which he has given all the forms required for putting it into operation. It may be deemed a sort of supplement to Cox and Lloyd's Practice of the County Courts.

Insolvency cases alone offer themselves for notice this week. In Re Cronen, 19 Law T. Rep. 10, where partners applied for their discharge at the same time, and the petition of one was dismissed for suppression of property, his counsel was not permitted to examine the other partner (who was discharged), touching the partnership property.

In Re Bevan, 19 Law T. Rep. 10, Mr. Commissioner Law has arrived at the very important conclusion that an arrangement made in the Bankruptcy Court under the voluntary clause does not exclude the jurisdiction of the Insolvent Court.

In Rochford v. Hackman, 19 Law T. Rep. 5, A. had given a life interest in dividends to his son, and declared that if he should in any manner assign, incumber, or anticipate them, the bequest should cease, as if the same had not been mentioned, or if his son were dead. The son took the benefit of the Insolvent Act, and it was held that the life estate was forfeited, the parties in remainder entitled, and that it did not pass to his assignees.

The Charitable Trusts Bill now passing through the House of Commons, and which really has a prospect of becoming law even before this Parliament dies, contains some provisions interesting to the County Courts.

The 39th section of this Bill enacts that where "any charity of which the gross annual income for the time being shall not exceed 30*l*. shall be established or administered, or be applicable wholly or partially to or for objects or purposes within the district, or any two or more of the districts, of any district Court or Courts of Bankruptcy, or of any County Court or Courts, and the appointment of any trustees or trustee, or any other relief, order, or direction whatsoever concerning or relating to any such charity or the objects, management, application, or administration thereof, or the estate, funds, or property thereof," application may be made to such Court of Bankruptcy or County Court, who may hear the matter in open Court, and take such proceedings, and give such relief, and make such orders and directions," as the Court of Chancery might have given or made. And if the two County Courts have concurrent jurisdiction, the application shall be made to one of them only.

Where two Courts have concurrent jurisdiction, the Charity Commissioners are to direct which shall entertain the case; they are also empowered to direct cases within the jurisdiction of an Inferior Court to be taken before a superior tribunal in the first instance.

The district or County Court is not to settle a scheme or appoint trustees without previous notice by advertisement, and a copy of the scheme and order is to be transmitted to the Commissioners for registry; nor is any such scheme or order to be valid unless confirmed by the Commissioners, who may, if dissatisfied with any order, remit it for reconsideration, or transfer it to a Master in Chancery.

The orders of the Judge of the County Courts to be enforced as other orders under the County Courts Act.

An appeal is provided against the decision of the County Court.

The Commissioners, in case of doubt as to jurisdiction, may order what Court shall entertain the application.

The 50th section prohibits the County Court from trying any title.

Lands holden upon trust for a charity within the jurisdiction of the County Court may be vested in the Commissioners. A Deputy-Judge is not to have jurisdiction.

Orders regulating proceedings are to be made by the Lord Chancellor. The trustees of charities are to keep accounts and deliver them to the clerk of the County Court within whose jurisdiction they are.

The statement in the certificate of the Charity Commissioners of the amount of income of any charity is to be sufficient evidence for determining the jurisdiction. (Sec. 37.)

It would be interesting now to procure a list of the charities under 30*l*. annual value, which will thus be placed under the jurisdiction of the County Courts. Will any of our readers supply us with this information as to their own districts?

COUNTY CLERKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The suggestion of one of your correspondents to exclude clerks of County Courts from practising in other branches of their Profession, is as impracticable as it would be unjust and undesirable. It may be all very well for those particular districts and places where there is a salary of 400*l*., 500*l*., or 600*l*. per annum, but if you inquire into the circumstances of a great many of the courts, you will find respectable attorneys (and there can be no doubt that clerks should, for the sake of the courts, the public, and the Profession, all be such) hold the office who do not realise more than 30*l*. or 40*l*. per annum, --sometimes less therefrom. What kind of clerks should we have to take office upon a salary which will certainly be given in proportion to this? I am rejoiced to see that attorneys and their clients are to be placed upon a proper footing in respect to their costs in our courts. Every clerk who understands the interest and respectability of his court will rejoice in this, and it is for the mutual interests of clerks (who have been very unjustly treated) and attorneys that they should care for each other.

COUNTY COURTS.—COMMITMENTS OUT OF THE DISTRICT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—As you have always used your influence to promote the efficiency of the County Courts, I take leave to address you, on the subject of what I conceive to be a defect in the Act establishing the Courts (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95), in the hope that it may be remedied. In all cases of execution where the party or his goods are out of the jurisdiction of the Court, the high bailiff of the Court has to send the warrant, together with a warrant under his hand, to the clerk of the foreign court for execution within that district. It is to this method of executing commitments that I wish to draw attention. In many instances the defendant is unknown to the bailiffs of the foreign court, and thus escapes being arrested; and he may wander from one district to another with impunity, and disregard the process of the Court. I am acquainted with a case where, notwithstanding that two concurrent warrants were issued in different districts, the defendant could not be apprehended. He does not stay in one place for long together; and if a fresh warrant were to be issued to-morrow and sent to the district where he is then likely to be, it is more than probable that he could not be arrested there. This is exceedingly annoying to plaintiffs, and moreover is very expensive also; and so long as the present method of dealing with commitments such as these under consideration is suffered to continue, so long will defendants be improperly protected. When a plaintiff has obtained a judgment, every reasonable facility should be afforded to him to prosecute it; and he ought not to be prejudiced because his debtor happens to be dishonest and unprincipled. The remedy I propose is to allow the bailiffs of the Court issuing the commitment to execute it, in whatever district the party may be, provided that he originally dwelt or carried on business in the district of the Court from which the warrant issued. Or, if this should be considered rather too extensive a power, the plan I mention might be advantageously exercised within a limit of twenty miles of the Court. A somewhat similar course used to be pursued in many of the old Courts of Requests, and was found to answer. The bailiff holding the warrant had to go before a justice, and make oath that he believed the party to be within the district for which the justice acted, whereupon the justice indorsed the warrant, authorising its execution within his district; and thus authorised the bailiff seldom failed to execute the warrant. In the case I have mentioned there is no doubt that if such a power had existed in the County Courts, the defendant would have been arrested long since, and the plaintiff saved considerable expense.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

ONE case only in Equity Practice was reported last week. It relates to the Trustee Act. A certificate of the Master had been obtained under the 38th section for the appointment of new trustees, and for a vesting order. The question was, what was the proper course under the 39th section to obtain confirmation of the certificate and consequential directions. The Court held that it may be done upon a motion, without petition. (Re Evan's Settlement, 19 Law T. Rep. 9.)

In Re Catherine Hand, 19 Law T. Rep. 12, where A. an unmarried girl, between sixteen and seventeen years old, had, since her father's death, with consent of her guardian, resided with her sister and B. her husband, the Court granted a habeas corpus on the application of B. alleging that she was detained from her family by a third party by means of fraudulent representations, the Court holding that B. stood to her in loco parentis.

We may at once state that the LAW TIMES editions of the Law Reforms now in progress will be published as soon as possible after they become law. The Practice of the Common Law, as regulated by the Procedure Bill, has been undertaken by R. MALCOLM KERR, Esq. Barrister-at-Law, and the Chancery Reform Acts, by OWEN TUDOR, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

We have before us a copy of the Bill for regulating "the fees of certain officers in the Courts of Common Law, and to make provision for their pay ment by salary." It abolishes the office of Clerk at Nisi Prius in the Court of Q. B. and of Associate in the Courts of C. P. and Ex., and provides that their duties shall be performed and fees received by the Marshals of the said courts respectively, to whom also the records, &c. are transferred.

The Clerks of Assize, Judges' Clerks, and Crier, Marshal in the Q. B., Marshal in the C. P., and Marshal in the Ex. are to keep an account of all fees received by them, and render a quarterly account of them to the Treasury, which is to fix the annual amount to be receivable by such officers for their own use, and the balance is to be paid into the Treasury.

The 5th section empowers the Treasury to abolish fees wholly or in part, and to fix salaries for the officers, to be paid out of the consolidated fund. No additional person is to be employed in any such offices without the consent of the Treasury. Salaries are to be paid quarterly, and accounts are to be laid before Parliament.

With respect to the Marshals of the Puisne Judges, the Treasury is empowered to order that all the fees now payable to them shall be abolished, and to fix a sum to be paid to them in lieu of fees, such sum to be fixed for each of the circuits with regard to the ordinary extent and duration of the duties of the Marshal on such circuit, and to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund.

The Treasury is to certify the number of Masters required in each of the Common Law Courts.

Where any officer omits to perform in person the duties of his office (unless arising from temporary and unavoidable causes), the Treasury is to stop the salary and require all the fees received to be paid over.

The fee of 6s. 8d. payable to the Marshal on the entry of each cause is abolished, as well as all other fees and payments on circuit for the use of the Judges, and also the fees of Marshal's Man and Judges' Bailiff.

This Bill, we believe, is preparatory to a provision which it is proposed to introduce into the Procedure Bill, substituting a stamp upon proceedings for all fees of court.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In your paper of Saturday last I observe, under the heading "Faculty of Advocates," an intimation, quoted from the Scotsman, to the effect that the faculty had at a meeting "resolved, without a division, that those of their body who have once been Lord Advocate or Solicitor-General ought to retain precedence at the Bar, and appointed a committee to report as to the best method of carrying out this resolution;" and that the effect of that arrangement "is to place the late Lord Advocate and Solicitor-General in the position of leaders over all the members of the Bar, except their successors in office and the Dean of Faculty."

The statement contained in that paragraph is erroneous. The matter of precedence is at present under the consideration of a committee of the faculty; and whatever may be the resolution to which the faculty will come upon the report of that committee, precedence has not as yet, at least, been conferred on the late Lord Advocate and Solicitor-General.

The paragraph in the Scotsman is altogether unauthorised; and the editor refused to insert in the succeeding number of that paper a correction of the misinformation. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

A MEMBER OF THE FACULTY OF ADVOCATES

Edinburgh, March 25, 1852.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE reader is doubtless aware that as a general rule a surety is discharged by time being given to the principal. An extremely interesting question, arising out of this rule of law, has just been decided by the new Lord Chancellor, and was reported last week. The facts were these. A. (principal) and B. (surety) became bound to C. for payment of 400*l.* of which sum, by agreement between A. and B., the latter was to have 120*l.* B. repaid to C. that sum before the time limited by the bond for payment of the 400*l.* After the bond became due C. accepted from A. a note of two months for the remainder, on a parol agreement that the note was not to be considered as a discharge of or substitute for the bond. A. died insolvent. B. filed a bill against C. for a declaration that, under the circumstances, he might be released from the bond, or for an injunction to restrain proceedings on it. He was held not to be discharged. The LORD CHANCELLOR observed—"All the cases prove that if, after the execution of an instrument, a security is taken which might operate as a discharge of the surety by giving time, if the remedy is preserved as against the surety, there is no discharge;" and in this case the evidence was that the remedy had been expressly reserved. (Wyke v. Rogers, 19 Law T. 1.)

A point in the law of Principal and Agent is reported from Nisi Prius. A broker of the city of London is bound to enter the contract in his book forthwith, or to deliver a correct note of it to both buyer and seller, and is liable to his principal for any damage if he neglects to do so. And where he makes out a contract, and does not enter it, but delivers the bought and sold notes to the parties, and they so vary that an action cannot be maintained on the contract, he is liable for the damages occasioned by the invalidity of the contract and the costs unsuccessfully incurred by his principal in endeavouring to enforce it (Sivewright v. Richardson, 19 Law T. Rep. 10.)

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Assizes.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

TAUNTON, March 31.—The commission for holding the Assizes in the county of Somerset was opened here yesterday evening by Mr. Justice Erle. The calendar in point of crime is extremely heavy, as will be seen by the summary of the offences charged:—Murder, 9; manslaughter, 2; maliciously wounding, 3; arson, 6; assault and robbery, 7; burglary, 7; rape, 4; uttering forged notes, 1; uttering counterfeit coin, 1; stealing a post-office letter-bag, 1; sheep-stealing, 1; house-breaking, 4; bestiality, 2; assault, with intent, &c. 1; obtaining by false pretences, 1; larcenies, 39; misdemeanours, 4; total, 93. The cause list would appear to be very slight, only 11 cases, and only two of them marked for special juries.—Mr. Justice Erle this morning attended Divine service, and afterwards opened the Crown Court and disposed of some of the prisoners. Mr. Justice Talfourd did not arrive till this evening, having been in the court in Bodmin till twelve o'clock last night.

POST-OFFICE REGULATIONS FOR BOOK PACKETS.—During the preceding week the business at the General Post-office has materially increased, in consequence of the great facilities now afforded to publishers of printed books (works of every description), magazines, reviews, prints, maps, &c. and to the public at large, to forward them to and from every part of the United Kingdom through the post at the following reduced rates of postage, viz.— For packets not exceeding 1lb. in weight, 6d.; up to 2lb. 1s.; and not exceeding 3lb. 1s. 6d.; and so on, 6d. being charged for every complete pound or fraction thereon. No packet must exceed two feet in length (nor contain any letter, open or sealed), and the postage must be prepaid in full by affixing the proper number of stamps outside. One of the great advantages of this new arrangement is that prints and maps can be sent through the post-office on rollers, or markers for books, or whatever is requisite for the safe transmission of literary works and objects of art. The same may also be forwarded to Ceylon (either British or foreign) by the monthly India mails from Southampton vid Egypt, at the rate of 1s. per lb. British prices current, commercial lists, &c. may now be transmitted by packets or private ships direct to Denmark at the rate of 1d. each, and periodicals at 2d. per ounce up to 16 ounces. A box is about to be opened at St. Martin's-le-Grand specially for book parcels, so as to prevent the confusion they would make in the usual letter-boxes and newspapers. The advantages of the above facilities will be the cause of a great increase in the circulation of periodical works, which hitherto could not be sent through the Post-office, except at a heavy rate. It is stated that a new fourpenny and sixpenny stamp is shortly to be issued from the Stamp-office, which will save much trouble in the number of stamps required to be affixed on parcels.—Observer.

ARRANGEMENTS WITH CREDITORS UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY ACT.—On Saturday last Mr. Commissioner Fane delivered the following remarks upon this subject.—His Honour took occasion to observe that henceforward he would not attempt to act upon the clauses in question unless the parties interested should first put the case into a workable form by the assistance of the official assignee of the court, or of an efficient solicitor. He had found by experience that unless this were done debtors and creditors were only involved in expenses without being able to effect any object. In this case it was proposed to guarantee the payment to the partially secured creditors of a sum of 8s. 6d. in the pound upon that portion that was unsecured; but there was nothing to shew what that portion would be, as it was not proposed to sell the property held by the creditors. It would be impossible to carry out a petition thus brought before the Court, and he would not attempt to do so. What was the consequence in such cases? Creditors were brought together in large numbers (here there were eighty in that position) upon a fool's errand, and heavy costs were incurred to the debtor's estate. It was not his duty to throw out suggestions, but he had a floating idea in his mind that creditors should appoint some two persons to act for them, and give them power to have the proposal of the debtor modelled into a workable shape before its presentation to the Court. He thought it was the duty of the debtor's solicitor and the official assignee to see that petitions were thus presented, but, as he had said, it was no part of his duty to throw out suggestions; all that it was his duty to say at present was, that he would not attempt to act on the arrangement clauses in any case where the petition did not come before him in a workable shape, very different to that in which they generally came before him.

THE NEW WILLS ACT.

The following is the New Wills Act as it has gone down to the Commons. We must confess that it is neither very succinctly nor very clearly expressed, and yet we cannot suggest an amendment that would improve it—such is the difficulty of describing in words the precise form in which an act shall be done :—

1. That where by 1 Vict. c. 26, it is enacted, that no will shall be valid unless it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator, or by some other person in his presence, and by his direction: every will shall, so far only as regards the position of the signature of the testator, or of the person signing for him as aforesaid, be deemed to be valid within the said enactment, as explained by this Act, if the signature shall be so placed at or after, or following, or under, or beside, or opposite to the end of the will, that it shall be apparent on the face of the will that the testator intended to give effect to the writing signed as his will by such his signature, and that no such will shall be affected by the circumstance that the signature shall not follow or be immediately after the foot or end of the will, or by the circumstance that a blank space shall intervene between the concluding word of the will and the signature, or by the circumstance that the signature shall be placed among the words of the testimonium clause or of the clause of attestation, or shall follow or be after or under the clause of attestation, either with or without a blank space intervening, or shall follow, or be after, or under, or beside the names or one of the names of the subscribing witnesses, or by the circumstance that the signature shall be on a side or page or other portion of the paper or papers containing the will, whereon no clause or paragraph or disposing part of the will shall be written above the signature, or by the circumstance that there shall appear to be sufficient space on or at the bottom of the preceding side or page or other portion of the same paper on which the will is written to contain the signature; and the enumeration of the above circumstances shall not restrict the generality of the above enactment; but no signature under the said Act or this Act shall be operative to give effect to any disposition or direction which is underneath or follows it, nor shall it give effect to any disposition inserted after the signature shall be made.

2. The provisions of this Act shall extend and be applied to every will already made, where administration or probate has not already been granted or ordered by a Court of competent jurisdiction in consequence of the defective execution of such will, or where the property, not being within the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts, has not been possessed or enjoyed by some person or persons claiming to be entitled thereto in consequence of the defective execution of such will, or the right thereto shall not have been decided to be in some other person or persons than the persons claiming under the will, by a Court of competent jurisdiction, in consequence of the defective execution of such will.

3. The word "will" shall, in the construction of this Act, be interpreted in like manner as the same is directed to be interpreted under the provisions in this behalf contained in the said Act of the first year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria.

4. This Act may be cited as "The Wills Act Amendment 1852."

We may here observe, that the writer of the article on this subject, that appeared last week, has evidently per incuriam spoken of signing a will at the end of each sheet, as if that were the requirement of the law, and not merely a form adopted in practice by cautious Solicitors, for better security against fraud. Our skilled readers will have detected the inadvertence of expression; to others, we would say, that the practice alluded to by our contributor, although not strictly necessary, is a proper one to be observed, especially where a will is written on several sheets of paper.

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLDS.

This Bill, as amended by the Committee, is before us, and as it will probably become law very nearly in its present shape, a sketch of its principal provisions will be interesting to our readers.

The enfranchisement is to take place immediately after the next admittance, from whatever cause, excepting only that of a trustee for sale.

Enfranchisement is to be thus effected.

Upon application, in writing, by any Lord or Tenant, to the Commissioners (unless some special directions are made by them), two valuers are to be appointed, one by the Lord, the other by the newly admitted Tenant, with power to appoint an umpire, whose decision is to be final; but if such umpire shall not give his decision, and deliver particulars thereof in writing to the Lord and Tenant, within forty-two days after the matter has been referred to him, the Commissioners are to act as umpire, and their decision is to be final. If the Lord or Tenant shall not appoint his valuer within twenty-eight days after admittance, and payment of the fines and fees thereon, the Commissioners are to appoint a valuer for him.

The valuers are to proceed thus :—

8. The valuers, sole valuer, or umpire shall proceed to determine the value of the manorial rights and incidents of tenure from which the lands proposed to be dealt with are to be enfranchised, and shall determine the compensation to be received by the lord for such enfranchisement in a gross sum of money; and the valuers shall frame a schedule of valuation or award, shewing the amount of compensation from and to be assessed upon the tenant, in respect of the several manorial rights and incidents of tenure from which the lands are enfranchised, and which amount shall be either paid in money forthwith after the completion of the enfranchisement, or, if the said Commissioners shall so direct, the same shall remain as a first charge, under the provisions of this Act, on the lands enfranchised, until the expiration of such time from the day of such completion as the said commissioners shall appoint, but not exceeding in any case ten years; and that interest at the rate of four pounds per centum per annum shall be payable thereon from the time of such completion as aforesaid half-yearly until full payment thereof: Provided always, that such enfranchisement may, at the discretion of the commissioners, on the application of the lord or tenant, be made for all or any of the considerations for which a commutation or enfranchisement may be made under the said recited Acts or any of them, and shall be paid and applied in like manner: Provided also, that where any portion of the consideration for enfranchisement shall be for the extinguishment of rights to timber and trees, such rights shall not vest in the tenant until such portion of the consideration assessed for such rights to timber and trees shall have been paid, or duly secured by a certificate of charge, under the provisions of this Act.

Valuers may, by consent, include agreements and statements of the parties relating to the rights of either. Questions of law or of fact may be referred to the Commissioners, who are to confirm and register the schedule of valuations and award. In making the valuation, the facilities for improvement, the customs of the manor, and all the incidents of the tenure, are to be taken into account, and due allowance made for them.

We can find no provision in the Bill for the form in which the compensation is to be given, whether in one sum or by a rent-charge upon the land enfranchised; but the form of the enfranchisement deed, which is set forth in the schedule, is framed so as to be applicable to either. We premise, therefore, that the Commissioners are to determine in what manner the compensation shall be paid. Sections, however, provide that the Lord and Tenant may agree that the rent-charge shall be confined to portions of the entire property enfranchised, and that a charge under the Act shall be a first charge, and have priority over all mortgages and incumbrances (tithe rent-charge excepted).

This will be extremely unjust if it applies to existing mortgages. But we have some doubt whether the intention is not to except them by a proviso at the end of this section (13) that "notwithstanding any such charge, any moneys already invested, or any moneys previously secured or charged thereon, may be continued on the security of the same, notwithstanding the imposition of the said charge under this Act." If this proviso refers to mortgages generally, and not merely to those of investing trustees, it ought to be more clearly expressed.

The charge is to be made by certificates of the Commissioners, to be called a Certificate of Charge, and is to state the amount, and the time, place, and manner of payment, either of principal or interest. These certificates are to be transferable by endorsements, and to pay the same stamp duties as mortgages or transfers.

Trustees are empowered to lend money on Certificates of Charge.

If the consideration be not duly paid, the Lord may take possession of the land charged.

The Steward is to be compensated for his "trouble about such enfranchisement, and for the extinguishment of his office with respect to such lands," such sum as the Commissioners may direct; or, if no direction by them, "such sum as will amount to one set of fees, or surrender and admittance for each of the tenements included in such enfranchisement, such fees to be calculated according to the reasonable custom or usage prevalent in the manor whereof such lands shall be parcel," and to include the deed of enfranchisement.

A series of necessary provisions follows, for ascertaining the title of the Lord, the identity of lands, and empowering the Lord to purchase lands in certain cases, and, if he has a limited interest, to charge the purchase-money on the manor.

Interest in arrear on rent-charges is to be recoverable as rent in arrear on a lease.

Where the Lord is a tenant for life, the Commissioners are to apportion the enfranchisement consideration between him and the reversioners.

The Act is not to extend to mines, minerals, fairs, rights of warren, piscaries, &c. unless with express consent in writing of the Lord; nor to copyholds for lives where the tenants have not a right of renewal.

Such is an outline of the principal provisions of this important measure. There are, of course, many minor ones for regulating the machinery, which it would be impossible to describe within our limits.

Upon the whole, it appears to be well adapted for the end designed. The introduction of the novel plan of certificates of charge, which are to be transferable securities, suggests some advantageous applications of a similar scheme, to which we will hereafter invite the reader's attention.

A plan has occurred to us, by which the proposed enfranchisement might be greatly facilitated through the medium of the Law Property Assurance Society, and which we also purpose to submit to the consideration of the Profession.

THE ATTORNEYS' TAX.

At length there is a fair prospect of success. A combination of favourable circumstances offers, at the present moment, chances for obtaining the justice so long desired such as have not occurred before, since we first roused the Attorneys to action, five years ago. A new Ministry, a new Chancellor of the Exchequer, an impending dissolution, the Law Officers of the Crown friendly to the cause, are facts from which the most favourable results may be anticipated. Mr. Disraeli has a considerable surplus of revenue to deal with, and he will not be averse to purchase a little—nay, not a little—popularity, with a body of persons who possess the largest influence at the elections,—by whom, in fact, the elections are conducted, and who will not be ungrateful to him for the boon which his predecessor denied, even in defiance of the repeated votes of the House of Commons. Both the Attorney and Solicitor General are heartily enlisted in the cause, and we know that the latter has promised, if relief should not be given to us now, himself to introduce and carry through the Commons, early in the next Parliament, a Bill for the entire relief of the Attorneys from the iniquitous impost to which they are subjected. A most satisfactory interview has been had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who heard patiently the representations of the deputation, and made many inquiries that indicated an interest in the question, and a desire to be fully informed as to its merits. Although, as a matter of course, nothing was promised, there was enough to create an impression among those who were present that something would be done, provided it could be done with safety.

Now, it is obvious that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, however inclined to serve us, cannot do so against the many other clamorous claimants upon his bounty, unless some pressure be put upon him from without, so that he may be able to shew cause for preferring one claim to another. Hence the urgent necessity for a flood of petitions praying for relief. The Easter Holidays will just afford time for getting them up in every part of the country, so that they may be poured into the House immediately on its reassembling, after the recess. All will depend upon promptitude in this. They must be presented before the budget, or, as in past sessions, they will come too late. Their very purpose and use is to remind the Government of the grievance, in time for its being taken into account when the financial scheme for the year is being framed. After that is done, they are of very little service; for it could scarcely be expected that the entire budget should be reconstructed for the sake of one tax, however unjust, nor, save in a very uncommon state of parties, such as existed two years ago, and which is not likely to occur again, would the House of Commons be induced to sanction such a mode of proceeding. It was the delaying of the question until the end of the session that was the real cause of its double defeat. Had those divisions taken place before the budget instead of after it, even Sir Charles Wood could not have dared to exclude it from his list of taxes to be repealed. Let us learn a lesson from experience, and now more wisely moot the question before Mr. Disraeli has brought out his budget. But to do this, not a day must be lost in any locality, for the preparation, signing, and despatching of a petition. Remember that the days of this Parliament are numbered, and that whatever is to be done, to be well done must be done quickly.

Again we subjoin instructions for petitions.

Write the following on a sheet of paper. Get all the Attorneys in your town and neighbourhood to sign it, or as many of them as you can. On or before the 17th of April, despatch the petition by post, writing upon it, "Petition to Parliament," to one of your representatives, either county or borough, being careful to leave it open at the ends, or it will be chargeable with postage.

The following short form will suffice:—

To the Honourable the Commons of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The humble petition of the undersigned Attorneys practising at , in the county of Sheweth,

That your Petitioners are subjected to a Poll Tax in the form of a Certificate Duty, which they pay in addition to the taxes imposed upon them in common with the rest of the community.

That such a tax is oppressive and unjust, and your Petitioners pray your Honourable House to repeal the same.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

Longer forms are useless, for these petitions are never read. They are thrown into a basket, and in the report of the Petitions' Committee they all appear together under the general title of "Repeal of Certificate Duty:" so that eloquence and argument are quite wasted in them.

COMMITMENTS.

It is high time that something should be done to induce Magistrates to be more cautious in committing for trial on criminal charges. At every Assizes and Sessions cases occur in which there is no evidence whatever against the prisoner, who has perhaps been subjected to the degradation and ruin of imprisonment in a gaol, without any proof of guilt that could be listened to for a moment in a Court of Justice. We know that this has been lamented by many of the Judges; that complaints have been made by them of the improper commit tals that are brought under their notice; and that it is the desire of most of them that some plan should be devised, to prevent so grievous an abuse of the forms of justice.

At the Assizes just concluded, we witnessed some extraordinary instances of this recklessness of the power of sending men to gaol for trial on charges that could never be sustained. A respectable man, who had dealt for years in Taunton market, priced some fowls in the basket of a woman, who named the price at 3s. per couple. The fowls belonged to a man who was at her side, and he had already bargained for them with another person at 3s. 6d. a couple. The first man insisted upon his bargain with the woman, and took up the fowls as being a purchase by him according to the custom of the market; the owner collared him; his wife and cousin came to his assistance, and took the fowls from him: there was a struggle, each party claiming them, and then the owner charged the buyer with stealing them; and all the three were actually committed for the larceny by a foolish magistrate. Of course, the Judge immediately dismissed the case.

The very next trial at the same Assizes was no less remarkable. The prisoner was seen to take a spade out of a brook by a witness, to whom the prisoner went, and told him that he had found it; asked if he knew whether any person had lost a spade, and requested, that if he should hear any inquiry, he would say that he (prisoner) had found one. The spade had been lost from a field in the neighbourhood. On this evidence the prisoner was charged with stealing it, and committed for trial, and kept some weeks in gaol. He was instantly dismissed from the bar, and told that there was not a stain upon his character, and the Judge made some comments upon the committing magistrate, which he well deserved.

These are not solitary, nor rare, cases. They are familiar to every judge, and to all who practise, whether as Counsel or Attorneys, in the Criminal Courts. With whom the fault rests, whether with magistrates or their clerks, we know not; but this we know, that it is a terrible oppression, a source of immense mischief to the community, and that its result is, to ruin the unfortunate victim, and, probably, by unjustly charging him with theft, to make him a thief.

The duty of magistrates, in committals, we propose to consider in another article; but it is time that something should be done to stay the evil. The Home Secretary should send to all of them a Circular, describing their duties, and urging more caution. But something more than this is required. We want an Officer of the Crown, whose duty it should be to revise all the depositions immediately that a prisoner is committed, with power to direct the discharge of all against whom there is no case for a conviction; to order further inquiries, when the case appears to call for them; and to direct a prosecution to be conducted in due form by Counsel and Attorney, where he deems it a fit case to be sent to trial. This would be a perfect remedy, and a great improvement generally in the administration of criminal justice.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

The following extraordinary and most disreputable documents have been forwarded to us. The first is a printed circular, by one Mr. Nixon:—

"The County Courts and their Extension. From the great increase of cases brought before the County Court Judges, and the probability of the present Act of Parliament being extended to larger amounts, and embracing matters of equal importance with those of the superior Courts of Law; Mr. Nixon, who has been in practice for Twenty Years, and had considerable experience in the County Courts, has determined to appropriate a portion of his time, personally, to the business of the last mentioned Courts, upon such terms as will meet the views of the tradespeople and others, and satisfactory to himself.

The expense of Law has for many years past been a prevention, and indeed denial, to the equalization of justice—to obviate that difficulty, the County Courts were instituted, and whether they have met the views of the Public and the Legislature, is not here a matter of inquiry—we must take them as they are—Mr. N.'s object is to point out to the public, the method of obtaining cheap law, with, it is to be hoped its concomitant, justice; and with this intention, he proposes to transact the business of the Tradespeople and the Public in the County Courts by an individual Annual Subscription of One Guinea. For this subscription Mr. N. undertakes to advise and to attend the County Courts on the days of hearing, for Plaintiff or Defendant, on Summonses or Orders pro or con, thereby dispensing with the usual fee payable by the client, to him as the Attorney for the respective parties, as allowed by the Act of Parliament, Mr. N. thereby looking to the adverse party only for the costs.

J. E. Nixon.

Offices,—17, Wellington-square, King's-road, Chelsea.

Offices in London, 13a, Red Lion-square."

The other is an advertisement, which appeared in The News of the World, of the 28th inst. We know not, however, whether the worthy James Brent, Esq. is a real or a sham Lawyer. In the latter case he should be watched, detected in his practices, and prosecuted:—

"Cheap Legal Advice and Assistance.—Send me 13 postage stamps and a plain statement of your case, and I will give you a legal opinion thereon, and directions how to proceed. Send me copies of the examinations, on which the prisoner was committed for trial for any felony or misdemeanour, and I will draw up and arrange the best line of defence. Charge, 7s. 6d. or send me full instructions, and I will prepare your Will for 3s. 6d.—Address, by letter, James Brent, Esq. 12, Lucas-street, Commercial-road East, London."

HOUSE OF LORDS.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN LUNACY.

Lord LYNDHURST made an interesting statement in moving for returns as a basis for extending the provisions of the Act passed in 1842 for the better administration of the estates of lunatics. It appeared that of all the parties engaged in an inquiry into the state of mind of any alleged lunatic—the solicitors and counsel, the commissioners, and even the jury—not one is interested in shortening the duration of the inquest. It is also an evil without corresponding good, that the inquiry always relates to the state of mind of the alleged lunatic at a long period past, as well as at the moment of inquiry: yet the finding is not conclusive on any person of the fact of lunacy, and any debtor may controvert the finding in a court of law by separate evidence in his own cause: surely it would be better to leave it to the discretion of the commissioners to narrow the limits of the inquiry. At present the jury is one of twenty-four, and a majority must agree: but the jurors are not of the character of a grand jury. It had been proposed on the one hand to do away with the jury, on the other hand to do away with the commissioner, and try by a judge and jury at the regular assizes; but Lord Lyndhurst disapproved of both suggestions; he thought no tribunal so fit as that of a jury of sensible ordinary men, to judge whether the lunatic is capable of managing his affairs; and he thought that a trial at assizes would often be of disastrous effect on the lunatic's mind; he proposed to retain the present tribunal, but to dispense with a jury in all cases where it is not specially demanded on behalf of the alleged lunatic. Referring to the case of Mrs. Cumming, and to the legal decision just given by the Lords Justices of Appeal on her right to traverse the verdict affirming her lunacy, he said he would propose to abolish the right of traverse as a matter of course, and to make it subject to the discretionary control of the Lords Justices. The cost of managing a lunatic's estate is greatly exaggerated by the cumbrous mode of acting. Nothing can be done without application to the Lord Chancellor and the payment of ruinous fees. He would propose to enable applications in the first instance to the Commissioners in Lunacy, and to make the steps more ready and inexpensive.—The LORD CHANCELLOR received with pleasure the various suggestions made; they nearly all appeared to him worthy of very serious consideration. The first and main object should be one which he feared had often been the last thought of, the securing of a sufficient maintenance for the lunatic.—Lord TRURO also expressed his pleasure to hear that Lord Lyndhurst had prepared some legislative propositions; many of his observations were founded on suggestions made by Lord Truro himself.—The returns were ordered as of course.—Lord LYNDHURST afterwards brought in a Bill on the subject, and it was read a first time on Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

POOR LAW COMMISSION.

Sir JOHN TROLLOPE has obtained leave to bring in a Bill to continue the Poor-law Commission for two years.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

In reply to Mr. MOORE, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL said, that though he was desirous of proceeding with this Bill with as little delay as possible, yet as he wished to have it fully discussed, and as he understood that certain persons were preparing some amendments, he should consent to postpone the Bill till after the recess; but he should fix it for the first day after the re-assembling of the house.

POOR RATING.

TUESDAY, April 6.—Mr. G. A. HAMILTON then obtained leave to introduce a Bill to continue the exemption of inhabitants from liability to be rated, as such, in respect of stock in trade or other property to the relief of the poor.

LOAN SOCIETIES.

On the motion of Mr. G. A. HAMILTON, leave was then given to bring in a Bill to continue and amend the laws relating to loan societies.

COURTS AT WESTMINSTER.

Mr. HEADLAM asked whether there was any intention on the part of the Government to allow any public money to be expended in providing new Courts at Westminster.—Lord JOHN MANNERS said that three or four months ago the late Government commenced the fitting up of temporary courts to replace those which had been removed. Those temporary courts were nearly completed, and would be kept for the reception of the judges next term. The fitting up of these courts did not preclude the general question of the maintenance of the courts at Westminster, or their removal, on which subject he was not authorised to express any opinion.

SUITORS IN CHANCERY RELIEF BILL.

The House went into committee on this Bill. Sir H. WILLOUGHBY said this measure was called the Suitors in Chancery Relief Bill, but he did not think the suitors in Chancery would get much relief by it. However, as the Bill was before the committee, he would try to make something out of it. It was proposed that a number of persons who had been paid by fees should in future be paid by salaries. They should take care that they gave salaries of a specific amount, and that they did not give salaries calculated on an average amount of fees for three years, of which they knew nothing. If they did not use proper caution, the same thing might occur as had formerly occurred in the case of the sworn clerks. He proposed as an amendment to the clause on this subject that those parties should be paid by salaries according to an amount to be fixed in a schedule annexed to the Act.—Mr. MULLINGS agreed in the principle that had been suggested by his honourable friend, but he must go further than that. He knew the complaints that were made with respect to the payments that were made to certain individuals who had been officers of the Court of Chancery, some of whom were receiving 7,000*l*. a-year, and it might be deemed desirable if, in the present case, the names of the parties could be inserted, with the salaries affixed to each of them.

COUNTY COURTS FURTHER EXTENSION BILL.

On the order for the going into committee on this Bill, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL suggested that as two-thirds of this Bill went to make the judges in County Courts Masters in Chancery, and as the Chancery Commission had recommended the abolition of the Masters' offices, it would be inexpedient to press a measure that went to make sixty new Masters in Chancery. He hoped the hon. and gallant member would postpone his Bill until the general measure of Chancery reform had been laid on the table.—Sir A. COCKBURN would concur in the recommendation of his hon. and learned friend, if he could hold out any definite or speedy prospect of the Chancery Reform Bill. — The ATTORNEY-GENERAL could not give a distinct answer on that subject, seeing the peculiar circumstances in which the Government and Parliament were placed. There was no doubt but that it would be brought in at the earliest possible moment.—In answer to a question from Lord R. Grosvenor, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL could not say when the Chancery Reform Bill might be expected.—Mr. WAKLEY could not understand, as both Bills had come from the Lords, why the Attorney-General should object to this one. In his opinion the best course would be to abolish the Court of Chancery altogether.—Capt. FITZROY said that the Bill, or one precisely similar, had passed the House last session, and therefore until more grave reasons were given than they had heard from the Attorney-General, he would persist with his motion.—Mr. J. STUART said that the Lords' votes announced a second County Courts Extension Bill. Looking at this fact and the report of the Chancery Commission, he hoped that the hon. and gallant member would not press his Bill.—Sir G. STRICKLAND hoped his hon. friend would persevere, as experience told him that hopes of reform in the Court of Chancery were generally fallacious. This Bill was likely to be extremely useful, and would not interfere with the Chancery reform.—Lord R. GROSVENOR was also anxious that the Bill should be proceeded with, as his constituents were very anxious for its success.—Mr. MULLINGS thought that the best course would be to postpone the Bill.—Sir A. COCKBURN advised his hon. and gallant friend to adopt the suggestion just made, and allow the chairman to report progress, and leave the Bill to be reprinted, so that it would be ready to be proceeded with if a bill for a reform in the Court of Chancery, and abolishing the Masters was not brought in, in accordance with the recommendations of the Chancery Commission.—After a few words from Mr. V. Smith, Captain FITZROY consented to allow the Chairman to report progress, and would reprint the Bill, and fix a day for going into committee again.—The CHAIRMAN then reported progress, and the House resumed.

LUNACY PROCEEDINGS EXPENSES.—Lord Lyndhurst's Bill to diminish the expenses of proceedings under commissions de lunatico inquirendo has just been printed by order of the House of Lords. The object of the Bill is to extend the provisions of the Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 84, "with a view to lessen the expenses of administering the estates of lunatics." It is proposed to enact that after inquisition found, the Masters in lunacy should be empowered to make orders respecting the persons and property of lunatics. The Lord Chancellor is to be empowered to direct the matter of any lunacy to be exempted from the provisions of the Act. No orders of the Masters under this Act are to require confirmation except in certain cases, but are to have the same effect as if made by the Lord Chancellor. A Master may make a special report in order to be submitted to the Lord Chancellor. The Lord Chancellor is to make orders for carrying the measure into execution. There are ten concise clauses in the Bill.

POPULATION AND HOUSES.—A return to the House of Commons, obtained by Mr. Bouverie, of the population and houses in the counties and boroughs which return members to Parliament, has been printed. In the counties, the populations of Middlesex, South Lancashire, and the West Riding of Yorkshire are by far the greatest. These are respectively 1,886,576, 1,570,816, and 1,315,787. The number of inhabited houses in each is—Middlesex, 239,362; South Lancashire, 267,653; the West Riding, 352,423. In Rutland, the number of inhabited houses is only 4,588. Of the boroughs, the principal are—

OFFICE OF MESSENGER TO THE GREAT SEAL ABOLITION BILL.—The first report of the committee of the House of Lords, appointed to inquire into various offices, has been printed. It states that the office of messenger to the Great Seal is a sinecure, the duties being performed by a deputy. The average annual amount of the fees and allowances for performing the duties attached to this office is 451*l*.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

AN important question, under the Municipal Corporations Act, was raised in the case of Reg. v. Hammond, 19 Law T. Rep. 21. It was as to the meaning of the words "place of abode," in sec. 32. The voting-papers described the voter as of "Church-road, miller," his actual residence being in High-street, but his place of business being in Church-road. The Court held the place of residence to be wrongly stated, and the requirements of the Act not complied with. "We have been much pressed by the fact," said Lord CAMPBELL, "that in the present case the defendant was as well known by his place of business as by his place of residence; but if we were to hold that the place of business is sufficient, we must lay down a general rule upon the subject, which, if unqualified, would, in many instances, defeat the object of the Legislature; and if qualified with the condition that the candidate is as well known by his place of business as by his place of residence, might lead to great uncertainty and much litigation. We think it the safer and better course to conclude that the Legislature used the words in their plain and ordinary sense, and required that the voting-paper shall contain the candidate's place of residence, by which in all cases he may be easily identified."

CONSTABLES' CHARGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I beg to acquaint you, for the information of your readers who are magistrates and magistrates' clerks, that the questions so long debated, and upon which a diversity of practice has prevailed throughout the kingdom since the passing of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, as to what parish is liable to pay the constables' charges in summary proceedings, and under what circumstances they can be included with the other costs of such proceedings, are likely to be set at rest during the present session by the important Bill introduced by Mr. Deedes "for amending the laws relating to the appointment and payment of parish constables."

On the notice being given that such a Bill was to be brought in, I communicated with Mr. Deedes, and subsequently, at his request, sent him the clauses following, which remove the doubts alluded to, with others, and which are, I understand, inserted in the Bill ordered to be printed, viz.:—

A. That the fees to parochial constables, not being paid constables at a salary, shall in all cases (except where charged by law upon the county-rate, or recovered or received from any other person) be a charge upon the poor-rate of the parish in which the offence was committed or matter arose, the constables employed being in all cases those appointed for such parish.

B. Orders to be made on overseers for the fees quarterly in a form given.

C. Costs of prosecuting vagrants by any constable (if not recovered from the offender) to be a charge on the poor-rate upon a like order. (See repealing clause I.)

D. Recovery of amount of order for constables' fees from overseers, or their successors, before justices, by a proceeding under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43.

E. Constables' charges to be included with other costs in all proceedings before justices out of Quarter Sessions, independently of the ultimate charge on the poor-rate, if not recovered from the parties; proviso, that, where a paid constable, the amount shall be retained by the clerk to the justices, and by him paid to the overseers of the poor.

F. Any constable whatever may recover his fees from parties before justices, as in clause D; proviso enabling justices to remit fees on account of poverty or other cause, and in case of a parochial constable, to order same to be paid out of poor-rate.

G. Recovery of amount of order for justices' clerk's fees from overseers in County Court of the district wherein clerk resides.

H. No stamp-duty on constables' appointments.

I. Repeal of 18 Geo. 3, c 19, ss. 4, 5, 9. (See clause C.)

Your practical readers will be able to judge of the importance of these clauses, and probably to suggest others, or amendments therein; but that there are many advantages to be derived from the enactments proposed, cannot be denied.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Newmarket, April 3. GEORGE C. OKE.

THE NEW MILITIA BILL.—The Bill to Consolidate and Amend the Laws relating to the Militia in England has been printed by order of the House of Commons. There are thirty-two sections in the Bill, which is to be discussed after the Easter recess. It is declared to be expedient, "for better fulfilling the purposes of the institution of the militia with as little disturbance as may be to the ordinary occupations of the people, that the laws for raising and regulating the militia should be amended." The Secretary of State may make regulations as to the qualification and appointment of officers. The number of militia to be raised is 80,000, of which 50,000 are to be raised in the present, and 30,000 in next year. Orders in Council are to be made with respect to quotas of counties and other matters connected therewith. The militia is to be raised by voluntary enlistment. The bounty is not to exceed 6*l.* and no periodical payment or allowance is to exceed after the rate of 2s. 6d. per month during the term of service for which the volunteer shall be enrolled. All volunteers are to be sworn and enrolled, and where the men cannot be raised, her Majesty in Council may order a ballot. Persons after thirty-five years are not to be liable to the ballot. There are provisions empowering her Majesty to order regiments to be formed and officered, and how the men are to be exercised. In case of invasion, or imminent danger thereof, her Majesty may raise the militia to 120,000 men. When an additional number of men is raised, her Majesty is to issue a proclamation for the meeting of Parliament within fourteen days. The militia of the city of London is to be raised under the 1st Geo. 4, c. 100. The bounties stated are to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund.

POOR-RATES.—A Blue-book, containing 362 pages of closely printed matter, has been published by order of the House of Commons. It comprehends the separate assessments made in the parishes and townships of England and Wales, for the relief of the poor in the year ending 7th July, 1851; the amounts and numbers of the assessments of which the annual rateable value is from 1*l.* to 10*l.* and upwards, together with the gross number of persons so assessed to the poor-rates. The number of persons entitled to vote at the municipal elections in England and Wales is 224,375.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT.—The guardians and other officers of the East, West, and City of London Unions, have recently presented memorials to the Home Secretary and to the Poor-law Board, complaining of the unjust, partial, and oppressive effect of the existing law of settlement and the rating for the relief of the poor, and praying for the introduction of a measure into Parliament for a more equitable distribution of these burdens. The memorials were forwarded by Mr. Alderman Sidney, M.P.; and the following answer has been received from the President of the Poor-law Board:—

Poor-law Board, Whitehall, March 30, 1852.

My dear Sir,—I have received the petition you have forwarded me from various present and past officers of the City of London Union, and have carefully read the same and examined the tables included therein.

The subject has been for some time under the consideration of this Board, and opinions have been obtained with reference to the general question of settlement, and removal of the poor from the inspectors under its directions, but it is so comprehensive, and requires so much consideration, that no steps can be taken at present to bring it under the consideration of Parliament.

I am, my dear Sir, yours faithfully,

JOHN TROLLOPE.

Alderman Sidney, M.P. Ludgate-hill.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

WINDING UP.

THE new LORD CHANCELLOR has decided his first winding-up case. In Ex parte Lawes, 19 Law T. Rep. 14, it appeared that the deed of settlement of a joint-stock company provided the mode by which a shareholder, parting with its shares, was to be released from subsequent responsibility. At meeting of the company, resolutions were passed permitting any of the shareholders to withdraw from the company on certain conditions. A. did not then avail himself of this privilege. At a subsequent meeting, the conditions of withdrawing were modified and altered, and in pursuance of these altered conditions A. sold his shares to a nominee, one of the directors of the company. The transfer was duly entered in the share register book, as required by the deed. A.'s executors were nevertheless held to be contributories.

In Ex parte Carpenter's Executors, 19 Law T. Rep. 20, it appeared that, in a railway company, shares were allotted, deposits received, and the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement executed. The directors appointed five of their number to be a finance committee, with power for any three to draw cheques. Cheques were drawn and the money applied to the purchase of shares in the market. The Master charged the members of the committee who had signed the cheques with the amount thereof, giving them liberty to discharge themselves by shewing a proper application of the money. The Court discharged the Master's order. It said, "The vice of the order is this, it assumed that the five individuals, where there was no cheque forthcoming, or the three where there were cheques, were the parties who, as between these persons and the company, are solely and ultimately chargeable with the moneys misapplied. . . . It seemed to him that all persons who were implicated in the transaction were jointly and severally liable."

PETITIONS, ORDERS, MEETINGS, APPOINTMENTS, CALLS, &c.

[Announced, issued, and made, during the past week.]

Camborne Consols Mining Company.—To appoint official manager on April 16. Creditors to come in and prove. (Gazette, April 6.)—Richards.

Oundle Union Brewing Company.—Call of 30*l.* on all contributories, to be paid on April 22.—Richards.

Patent Elastic Pavement and Kamptulicon Company.—Further call of 6*l.* per share on all the contributories, on April 26.—Tinney.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

THE case of Gooch v. Gooch, 19 Law T. Rep. 18, is a report of some further points arising upon the construction of the will described in 18 Law T. Rep. 231. Certain trusts in favour of a daughter's grandchildren were held to be void for remoteness. But then the question was, whether, in consequence of the limitations over being void, the gifts to the children of the daughter, and the survivor of them, were not also cut down and destroyed, and the MASTER of the ROLLS held them not to be so.

In King v. Malcott, 19 Law T. Rep. 19, where a lessee had died, the representative of the lessor filed a claim to have the estate of the lessee administered, and a portion of the assets impounded, to answer any future breaches of covenant in the lease, although there was no present breach. The application was very properly refused, Vice-Chanceller TURNER explaining the principle on which the Court interfered in such cases:—"In the general decree for the administration of a testator's estate, the usual reference to the Master is to take an account of all debts due to and from the testator. If the testator be a lessee, no debt is provable under that decree by the lessor, if there be no rent in arrear. But suppose rent afterwards becomes due, and that proceedings are taken by the landlord, a sum of money will be set apart to answer his demand. That arises, not from the right of the creditor to come in under the decree, but from the right of the executor to an indemnity out of the assets. The creditor becoming such after the decease of the testator on account of the covenant, is not a creditor at the time of his decease, and therefore is not entitled to come in under the decree."

In Renshaw v. Bean, 19 Law T. Rep. 22, the question was, as to what constituted an obstruction of ancient lights. Within twenty years the plaintiff had added a story to his house, and enlarged the old windows in the lower stories. Afterwards the defendant added another story to his house, which was on the other side of a narrow courtyard, and for which obstruction the plaintiff brought his action. It was held that such action would not lie, inasmuch as the act of the plaintiff had made it impossible for the defendant to obstruct the new windows, or the unprivileged portions of the old windows, without also obstructing the privileged portions.

In Fowlett v. Lee, 19 Law T. Rep. 23, furniture let to a tenant was held by JERVIS, C.J. at Nisi Prius, not to be liable to be seized under an execution against the lessor.

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Near to my place of residence there are a considerable number of manors and copyhold estates. The fines on alienation vary to a great extent: in some merely nominal, as 3s. or 10s.; but in others heavy,—in some instances, far from rare, amounting to two years' improved rent or value (namely, the actual rack rent) of the property.

In your number of Jan. 10, pp. 145, 146, in an article on compulsory enfranchisement now proposed, you mention the principle of the commutation to be "a valuation at fifteen years' purchase of the amount of the fine." I happen to have myself a small copyhold property in one of these heavy-fined manors, the alienation fine being two years' rack rent, but which has, in fact, only been paid twice during the last thirty years or so.

My land lets for 10*l.* a year to the occupying tenant; and, if I read your paragraph correctly, I should have to pay thirty years' full annual rent of the entire land. In that case, what becomes of my interest in it? It will, in fact, be a present to the lord of the manor of the estate itself—an injustice that can scarcely be contemplated. Thirty years' purchase is considered hereabouts a fair and full price for fee-simple lands in possession, by one having no previous interest at all in them.

The figuring stands thus. For the last thirty years (or I believe more, if it were worth while to search) I and my predecessors in title have enjoyed this estate in like way as many others of the same copyholders have held theirs, and the total amount of fines legally and properly payable have been, two of 20*l.* each (that is, each fine being two years' rent of 10*l.*), making 40*l.*; and leaving to me, for my own benefit, the rent for the other twenty-six years; and I have no prospect of having to pay any fine at all during the rest of my life (aged thirty-seven); while, on the proposed enfranchisement, my commutation would appear to be 300*l.*—viz. the fine of 20*l.* at fifteen years' purchase, =300*l.*; being, in fact, the full value (thirty years' purchase) of the estate itself, if freehold. My obvious course in such a case is, to let the lord of the manor take the estate, and sacrifice all I paid for it, or to let it run waste. If it is made optional with the copyholder to call for an enfranchisement, or to go on upon his present holding, the case may be different; but I take it the lords of manors are making this law, and they do not seem to forget themselves.

I draw your attention to this, and leave it in your hands. I should say fully one-half the manors in my county and the neighbouring ones have heavy fines, but in practice they are not often paid.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

A. B.

[Our correspondent misunderstood our proposition. We suggested fifteen years of the annual rent or fine, where such is paid. But where the fine is only on admission, then a sum equal to the amount of one fine. But the bill does not prescribe the terms of commutation. They are left to be estimated in each case by valuers.—Ed. L. T.]

Queries.

FEES.

Perhaps you or some of your readers can inform me what is the proper fee to pay a Master extra for taking an acknowledgment in the country to a deed for the purpose of having it enrolled in Chancery. The fee charged for taking an acknowledgment in town at the office is 6s. A Subscriber.

PREPARING LEASES.

Will any of your subscribers be good enough to inform me whether the solicitor of a lessor has not "the right" to prepare the leases, and by so doing oblige An Old Subscriber.

We resume the subject of distress for rent, in the examination of the cases recently decided on this point.

Where a broker, under a warrant from the landlord, authorising him to distrain the goods and chattels of the tenant, seized a fixture, which was afterwards sold, and the proceeds paid to the landlord, it was held, that the receipt of the proceeds did not make the landlord a trespasser, it not being shewn that he was aware of the illegal seizure. (Freeman v. Rosher, 18 L.J. 340, Q.B.)

In the year 1840, A. being the lessee of a warehouse and cellar, under a demise from B. and being also the lessee under C. of property comprising inter alia a vault, D. became tenant from year to year to A. of the warehouse and cellar, and vault, under an annual rent of 185*l.* made up of 140*l.* for the warehouse and cellar, and 45*l.* for the vault. On the 27th of October, 1845, A. became bankrupt, 92*l.* 10s. being at that time due as rent from D. to A. The assignees, upon being appointed, elected to take the property held under B.; and on the 26th of February, 1846, elected not to take the property held under C. At Christmas, 1845, rent to the amount of 114*l.* 7s. 6d. became due from A. to C. for which amount, on the 19th of February, 1846, C. distrained upon the goods in the vault held by D. who, to relieve himself from this distress, paid that sum to C. An action having been subsequently brought by the assignees of A. to recover the above sum of 92*l.* 10s. and also 35*l.* being one quarter's rent of the warehouse and cellar, due at Christmas, 1845, it was held that D. was not entitled in such action to avail himself of the payment of 114*l.* 7s. 6d. made by him to C. (Graham and Others, assignees, v. Allsop, 18 L. J. Ex. 85.)

A. the landlord of B. distressed on C. an under-tenant, for B.'s rent. After the formalities of a sale by auction had been gone through, and the goods of C. had been knocked down to a purchaser, A. by the consent of the latter, restored them to C. without receiving any portion of the price. It was held that B. was not entitled, as against A. to credit for what the goods nominally realized. (Keough v. Power, 2 Ir. Jur. 230, Q. B. of Ireland.)

The declaration in an action in the case against two defendants complained that they wrongfully and injuriously distrained upon the plaintiff's goods for more rent than was due; and also that they afterwards wrongfully sold the same for the alleged rent and the expenses of the distress. The defendants pleaded payment into court of 1s. and no damages ultra. The jury found for the plaintiff, damages 40*l.* There was no evidence given at the trial to connect one of the defendants with the acts complained of. It was held that no such evidence was necessary, as by the payment into court the defendant admitted a joint wrong, not only in respect of the alleged distress, but also of the subsequent sale, which was to be considered, not merely as matter of aggravation, but as an alleged substantive wrong. It was held, also, that case was a proper form of action; and that it was not necessary to allege in the declaration that the wrongs complained of had been done maliciously. (Leyland v. Tancred and Another, 19 L.J. 313, Q.B.)

It has lately been determined that a landlord cannot justify the breaking open the outer door of a stable to distrain for rent in arrear. (Brown v. Glen, 16 L. T. 341, Q.B.)

A notice of distress contained an inventory of certain articles which one intended to distrain, and concluded with these words, "and any other goods that may be found in and about the said premises, to pay the rent of the premises." It was held that such notice was bad. (See stat. 2 Wm. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 2; Kirby v. Harding, 16 L. T. 504, Ex.)

A landlord having distrained without complying with the provisions of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 111, s. 10 (Ir.), the tenant replevied, and the landlord served notice that he did not intend to proceed with that distress, and subsequently he again distrained for the same rent. It was held that, the first distress being illegal and void, the second distress made for the same rent was not illegal. (Clooney v. Watson, 3 Ir. Jur. 195, Ex. Ireland.)

There is no obligation upon a landlord when he distrains for rent, to state for what amount he distrains; and if he makes a false statement of the amount, that does not give the tenant a cause of action, unless it be accompanied with special damage, overruling Taylor v. Henniker, 12 Ad. & Ell. 488. Where a declaration in case alleged that the defendants took the plaintiff's goods as a distress for certain arrears of rent, to wit, 45*l.* pretended to be due, and, under that pretence, wrongfully sold the goods as such distress for the said alleged arrears of rent and the costs, whereas a small part only of the said pretended arrears was due; it was held that there was no express or implied averment, that more goods were sold than were necessary to satisfy the arrears actually due, and that the whole declaration disclosed no cause of action. (Tancred v. Leyland, 17 Law T. Rep. 53, Ex.) Where goods are taken as a distress upon the farm of a person bound to spend its produce thereon, these goods ought not to be sold with reference to that covenant, but should be disposed of for the best price, if at all, irrespective of any covenant to spend the same upon the premises. (Ridway v. Lord Stafford, 17 Law T. Rep. 80, Ex.)

The levying a sum of money by distress, beyond the amount of the rent due and expenses, is not the subject of an action for money had and received, but of a special action on the case, on the stat. 2 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 2, which directs that after sale of a distress, the overplus (if any) shall be left in the sheriff's, under-sheriff's, or constable's hands, for the owner's use. (Yates v. Eastwood, 17 Law T. Rep. 189, Ex.)

It has lately been determined that a landlord has a right to distrain upon his tenant at will. After the tenant at will entered into possession, there was an agreement for the lease of the premises, but no lease was ever prepared; on the back of the draft there was an endorsement made and signed between the parties. Rent had been paid, and a receipt given for the quarter's rent, and a distress also had been put in by the landlord upon the tenant. It was held not sufficient to alter the original tenancy at will into a tenancy from year to year. (Doe dem. Benson v. Frost, 17 Law T. Rep. 146, Ex.)

In the following case the premises were demised by A. to B. from the 25th of March, 1844, for a twelvemonth certain, and from thence until determined by a six months' notice from B. exp any quarter of a year, at the rent of 120*l.* per annum. It was held that the rent was payable yearly, and that A. could not recover in use and occupation for the quarter ending the 25th of December, 1845. (Collett v. Curling, 16 L.J. 390, Q.B.)

On the subject of fixtures it is perhaps necessary that we should say a few words before bringing this subject to a close. It may here be observed that the term "fixtures" is often used indiscriminately, and perhaps incorrectly, in allusion as well to those articles which are not by law removable when once attached to the freehold, as to those goods which are severable therefrom. In its correct sense the word "fixtures" signifies such things of a personal nature as have been annexed to the realty, and which may be afterwards severed or removed by the party who united them, or his personal representatives, against the will of the owner of the freehold. When the article annexed to the land is irremovable, it is viewed in law as part of the freehold, and is subject to all the rules and incidents of real property. (Chitt. Cont.) In any event the term "fixtures" naturally leads to an inquiry, first, what kind of annexation confers upon goods the character of fixtures? and, secondly, what particular rules or exceptions regulate the right of removal between persons standing in different relative situations towards each other in respect to the premises to which the goods have been united?

1. As regards the first of these points, it is to be observed that goods or even buildings of the most ponderous description, cannot fall within the operation of the law of fixtures if they are merely laid and rest upon the earth, without being let into it. The article must be fixed into the ground, or to some substance previously rendered a portion of the freehold, or it does not lose its personal nature. The mode of annexation is not, however, the sole criterion of the power of severance. In a case of doubt it is a good criterion whether the removal will cause any substantial injury to the freehold. (Avery v. Cheslyn, 3 A. & E. 75.)

2. Questions as to the right of fixtures principally arise between persons of three classes. 1. Between the heir and the executor of the party who put up or attached the article to the premises. 2. Between the executors of a tenant for life, or in tail, and the remainder-man, or reversioner. 3. Between landlord and tenant. The last only is the point with which we are here concerned. As a general principle, it is to be observed that the rule against severance is usually construed more strongly against the landlord than the tenant. It is not material in regard to the right of removal by a tenant whether he held for life or merely from year to year, &c.; and there is no distinction whether the tenancy is created by deed or parol agreement. Those fixtures that are removable must, generally speaking, be removed before the expiration of the tenancy, or its determination by forfeiture; although it seems if the tenant hold over even wrongfully after his tenancy has expired, he may sever and remove them while he continues in possession. (Minshall v. Lloyd, 2 M. & W. 456.) A contract on the subject of fixtures generally is ordinarily entered into between the parties. It has lately been decided that the mere removal and sale by a tenant, during the term of fixtures, which he does not immediately replace, but which can be replaced before the end of the term, is not in itself a breach of his covenant to repair and uphold the demised premises, and to deliver up the same at the end of the term, together with all things affixed thereto. (Doe dem. Burrell v. Davis, 15 Jur. 165; 16 Law T. 389, C. B.)

In bringing this subject to a close we shall ad-

vert to two or three miscellaneous cases which have been recently determined bearing on different points of the law of landlord and tenant. In Griffiths and Another v. Pullston, 14 L. J. 33, Ex. it was decided that a custom for an outgoing tenant to enter upon the land, and cut and carry away the growing crops after the determination of his tenancy, and to repair the fences until the crops are cut and carried, gives him possession of the land for that purpose, and not a mere easement; and therefore a subsequent tenant coming in under the landlord cannot maintain an action of trespass against him for entering upon the land for the purpose of cutting and carrying away the crops. In the following case a lessee applied to his lessor for a lease of a strip of land adjoining that which he already held. The lessor said he could not grant a lease, as the occupiers of other land had a right of way over it, but that the lessee might take it if he liked at his own risk. The lessor having inclosed it, it was held that it could not be considered inclosed for the benefit of the lessor, so as to become part of the demised premises, out of which the rent issued. (Doe dem. Baddeley v. Massey, 17 Law T. Rep. 221, Q B.)

The cases which follow have been decided in relation to stamps upon leases. The 4th section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76 (repealed by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), enacted that no lease in writing of any freehold, copyhold, or leasehold land should be valid, unless the same should be made by deed; but that any agreement in writing to let any such lands should be valid and take effect as an agreement to execute a lease. A memorandum of agreement, dated the 3rd of July, 1845, and made while that section was in force, whereby M. agreed to let, and B. agreed to take, certain premises from the 7th day of that month, for the monthly rent of 36s. to be paid every four weeks, was held to take effect as an agreement to execute a lease, and to be admissible in evidence without a stamp. (Burton v Rewell, 16 L. J. 85, Ex.) H. being seised in fee of certain land, contracted with B. to execute to him a lease of the land and a house to be built thereon by B. for ninety-nine years, at a rent of 9*l.* 5s. The house having been built, B. contracted with C. to sell him his (B.'s) interest in the land and house for 850*l.* which was accordingly paid. In order to effect this contract, B. procured an indenture to be made between himself, H. and C. whereby H. demised to C. the house and land for ninety-nine years, at the same rent. No mention was made in this instrument of the purchase-money. Held, that the lease was a conveyance within the Stamp Act, and that B. was liable to the penalties imposed by the 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, s 22, for omitting to set forth the purchase money. (Attorney-General v. Brown, 3 Ex. 662; 18 L. J. 336.) An instrument, not under seal, was executed by A. and B. whereby A. agreed with B. within twelve months then next, to demise to him by indenture certain lands, to hold same unto B. his heirs and assigns, during the lives of certain specified persons and the survivors, or for a term of thirty one years concurrent, at the rent of 32s. per acre, payable on the 25th of March and 29th of September yearly, during the demise, the first payment thereof to be made on the 29th of September next ensuing the date of the memorandum. The instrument then contained an agreement on the part of B. to perfect, at his expense, a lease, when required, with the usual covenants, clauses, and agreements in leases between landlord and tenant; and likewise that until such lease was perfected, to pay the said rent by the year on the days thereinbefore mentioned for the payment thereof. There was likewise an agreement on the part of B. not to alien, &c. without the consent of A. Held, that the above instrument was not a lease, but an agreement only, and was properly stamped as such (Wyse v. Beresford, 3 Ir. Jur. 226, Q.B. Ireland.)

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

The County Courts Bill has made no further progress. The Government has stated, in answer to a question put to them in the House of Commons, that it is not their intention to increase the salaries of the Judges and Clerks. Surely this is not fair dealing with them. Salaries were appointed for the performance of certain work. That work has been already doubled, and it is proposed to increase it yet further; but there is to be no addition to the remuneration. Is not this something like a breach of faith? If the Judges had been underworked before, there would be some excuse. But it was not so. They then worked harder than any other judicial officers in the employ of the public; and quite as much knowledge and ability were demanded for the accomplishment of their work. If their hard work is to be made still harder, it should be compensated by increased pay.

There is one Insolvency case to be noted. In Re Flynn, 19 Law T. Rep. 23, where an adjudication had been made on false evidence, the Court ordered that and the discharge to be annulled. It also permitted the insolvent to be examined on the rehearing, in order to disprove his former statement respecting his property.

Since the above was written, the Amendment Bill has gone into committee in the Commons, and found a very unwelcome reception. Mr. Fitzroy, who had taken charge of it, deliberately proposed to burke one half of it, by expunging all the clauses that had been inserted by the Lords, and which are, in fact, all that are of any value, and the Attorney-General proposed to expunge the other half, because the Chancery Reform Bill might possibly make them unnecessary. Thus, between the two, the whole measure was to be swept away. The end of the discussion was, that the Bill went through committee pro formâ, and the consideration of it was adjourned to some day after the recess, with the purpose scarcely concealed, of throwing it over for the session, to wait the Chancery Reform Bill, which is promised as something that may be expected at some future time. Indeed, we trust that with such intimations of hostility to its most useful provisions, it will be deferred until the next Parliament, when we hope it will find some more faithful and vigilant protector than it has yet found.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

Equity Practice.—A point in the practice of Appeal is to be found in Watkins v. Williams, 19 Law T. Rep. 13, namely, that objections to a decree, not raised upon the petition of appeal, cannot be taken on the hearing.

Some other points to be noted are contained in the case of Turner v. Turner, 19 Law T. Rep. 15. First, a reference, on a petition, to the title of an Act of Parliament is sufficient to give the Court and the parties notice of its contents, and it is not an objection that it is not set out. Secondly, where a petition of rehearing states too much, no part of the prayer being founded on that portion of the petition, it can only be objected to as a ground for costs on the petition coming on to be heard.

In the Law of Attorneys we find some further proceedings in a case upon Taxation of a Bill of Costs, which has been already reported and commented upon in 18 Law T. Rep. 192. It is unnecessary here to repeat the whole case; it will suffice to remind the reader that it was that of a solicitor who had a partner and was appointed executor of a will, and was authorised by the will to make professional charges. The affairs of the executorship were conducted by the firm, and three bills of costs were delivered to the executors, who drew cheques for the amount, which were handed by one to the other in his capacity of solicitor. The Court held the delivery of these cheques to be a payment of two of the bills, and refused taxation, such payment having been made more than a year since; but payment of the third bill having been made within a year, it was ordered to be delivered for taxation The firm then delivered a bill, not in the name of the firm, but in the name only of the partner who was not executor, and the petitioner applied for an order to the Master to treat the bill as that of the firm, and not of the partner only. It was held, however, that the Court could not do so, but could only order taxation of the bill delivered, and on which the claim was made; that it must be treated as the bill of the partner alone, and that if anything should be found to be due from him, it would be ordered to be paid to the executors. (Re Lethbridge and Another, 19 Law T. Rep. 19.)

In Pearce v. Cole, 19 Law T. Rep. 21, it was held that, inasmuch as a married woman can take no proceedings in a cause, but in the name and with the concurrence of the next friend, where a motion was made on her behalf and no next friend was named in the notice of motion, the Court will compel the solicitor who made it to pay the costs thereby occasioned.

Common Law.—Where three actions were brought, under Lord Campbell's Act, by separate plaintiffs, to recover damages occasioned by the deaths of three persons, which occurred from the same cause, upon the same occasion, the Court refused either to compel the plaintiffs to consolidate their actions or to stay the proceedings in two of them until the third should be decided. (Henderson v. Legaster, 19 Law T. Rep. 24.)

COMMON LAW PROCEDURE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The interest you take in the progress of judicious reform in legal matters, induces me to ask why a clause could not be inserted in the Common Law Procedure Bill, about to be passed, enabling assignees of choses in action to sue at law in their own names?

As the utility of such a power is undoubted, both as regards the transfer of that species of property and the enforcement of legal proceedings to realise it, it seems to me that the desired object could easily be effected, and with great propriety, at the present time, when such sweeping alterations in our Common Law proceedings are on the eve of enactment.

I believe the Legislature has already had the subject in contemplation, particularly as regards assignments of life policies; but it might not be amiss again to call its attention to it, as otherwise the numerous subjects which must at this period occupy the consideration of Government will doubtless cause this, as well as other improvements of an equal, if not greater importance, to be forgotten.

I am, Sir, &c.

ARTICLED CLERKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—When Lord Brougham introduced a clause into the County Courts Extension Act, permitting attorneys' clerks generally to advocate in County Courts, and to which great objections were made, I did then think that a clause might be reasonably inserted permitting articled clerks to advocate in those Courts, either during the whole or some portion of their articles. I am still of that opinion, and do think that the 21th section of the Act now in the Commons may be, without any injury or injustice to either the public or the profession, but with incalculable benefit to articled clerks, so altered as to include articled clerks.

I am led to write to you on this subject in consequence of observing that on Friday last the Lord Chancellor presented a petition from some articled clerks in Northumberland, as well as from a wish I have that the education of that class of law students should be more cared for, and that they should not be pushed upon the public, on the expiration of their articles, without any practical knowledge of their profession.

I think that were articled clerks so privileged they would in general not drive their study of the law to within a few months of the time appointed for their examination and admission, as is now the case; but would at once enter with spirit upon the study of that part at least of their profession, to the practice of which they would in such case be entitled, and which threatens to be the mainspring of every common law action. The Legislature would then be providing for the education of the Profession, in a manner which would effect more improvement in the student by the training necessary for half a dozen cases of advocacy, than the five years' teaching of a solicitor in practice.

When I state that my chief reason for writing this letter is to obtain your opinion on the subject, you will wonder at my having presumed, first, to state my own. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Query.

May I request any of your readers to inform me, through the medium of your valuable journal, what are the necessary qualifications to enable a person to practise as an attorney in the United States of America, and whether there is the same distinction in that country of the profession of law into barristers and attorneys as there is in this? Also, if a person duly qualified to practise as an attorney in this country can do so in the colonies; and if not, what is the qualification required, and what are the rules regulating the respective practices of barristers and attorneys? APPEALS FROM COUNTY COURTS.

Remanet from Sittings after Hilary Term.

Stocker and Others v. Truscott. From the County Court of Cornwall, at St. Austell.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Assizes.

BODMIN, March 26.—The commission for Cornwall was opened here yesterday by Mr. Justice Erle and Mr. Justice Talfourd, after which both the learned judges attended Divine service. The business of the Assize commenced this morning at nine o'clock, Mr. Justice Erle presiding in the Criminal Court, and Mr. Justice Talfourd at Nisi Prius. The business is heavier than we remember for many years past, there being no less than 15 cases for trial, of which 5 are marked for special juries; the average number of causes here being from 5 to 6. The calendar contains a list of 55 prisoners for trial, but the offences charged are for the most part of a slight character. They are—rape, 1; attempt to procure abortion, 1; arson, 1; burglary, 1; cutting and wounding, 8; bigamy, 1; stealing in a dwelling-house, 3; robbery, 1; concealment of birth, 1; riot, 3; assaulting constables, 2; larceny, 30; false pretences, 1.

THE SENIOR AND JUNIOR BAR

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—I had a motion to submit to the Court of Chancery (as a junior barrister) last Wednesday week, March 24. In court every day, and generally all day long, from the 24th of March till this evening, I have been unable to bring on the motion (which might have occupied twenty minutes) in consequence of the liberty of senior counsel to exhaust all their motions before we can introduce one. The point is not of sufficient importance to authorise the expense of a "Q. C." (my fee is only one guinea), and accordingly there is an absolute denial of justice. The Court is now risen for the vacation. The motions of the Queen's counsel are not yet exhausted. On the 15th of April they will continue their motions; they will then add to them all their new ones, and many, many days hence, I may have a chance of being heard. Meanwhile, my clients and the solicitors for all the defendants in the suit have now been nine days in court, and will be many more—charging for each day, and swelling up the costs—about a point which is so unimportant, and so sure to be granted by the Court after twenty minutes explanation, that one guinea is the fee for asking it. When the remedy is so easy, so instantaneous—namely, by having a paper of motions as of petitions, thereby saving all the expense of so many attendances and all the discomfort of such delay, to say nothing of my absence (at one guinea for nine days) from chambers, where business daily required me,—it is surprising that those in office will not, by one stroke of a pen, allow a remedy which is in every one's mouth and to which no one objects. In default of that, the Queen's counsel might at least be limited to two motions each seal, in lieu of two motions each day, which, as an aid to the outer Bar, is meant (I presume) for a joke.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Lincoln's-inn, April 2. RUSTICUS EXPECTANS.

CARE OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY FOR PROPERTY.—It will be observed, that by that time-honoured custom and fiction of law by which our Chancery is supposed to take care of all property that cannot take care of itself, the celebrated case of the old lady who has such a passion for cats is again before the public. It is not many weeks since Mrs. Cumming, of the mature age of seventy-six, and with the moderate fortune of something less than 500*l.* a year, was, upon solemn inquisition, formally found to be insane. The object of the inquiry was to take care of her property. It lasted sixteen days, employed a round dozen of lawyers, and abstracted from the property it was so anxious to protect no less a sum than 6,000*l.* . . . The Lord Chancellor now discovers, by a recent interview with the old lady, that her condition is at least sufficiently rational to justify her in demanding another inquisition. He expresses no opinion of her competence to spend her own money, but of her competence to dispute her own insanity he entertains no doubt whatever. Another inquiry is therefore ordered, and it is to be very economical, to save the law from reproach. A satirical perso might remark that economy has become necessary were it but to save the lawyers their fees; but it would on every account be well were occasion taken of this flagrant case to settle whether the principle of expenditure in future commissions of lunacy is to be regulated by the chances of discovering the truth, or to be lavish simply in proportion to the extent of the estate.—Dickens's Household Narrative.

THE ATTORNEYS' CERTIFICATE TAX.—The Cork Reporter says:—" By the following communication which has been received by the secretary of the Local Solicitors' Society from the Incorporated Law Society, it appears that the exertions of the Profession are in a fair way of being successful, and that after the lapse of a short time we will be in a position to congratulate them on the abolition of the certificate tax:—

" Incorporated Law Society, U K.
" Chancery-lane, London, March 30, 1852

" Dear Sir,—I have the pleasure to inform you that the President and several of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society attended the Chancellor of the Exchequer, by appointment, on Saturday last, the 27th inst and were favoured by the presence and support of Lord Robert Grosvenor, Sir Wm. Vorner, Mr. Cowan, Mr. Mullings, and Mr. Bremridge. The deputation was favourably received, and, after hearing their observations, the Chancellor of the Exchequer made several inquiries into the state of the profession, the increase of its number, the effect of recent legislation on their emoluments, and the effect of the tax on the different classes of practitioners. These inquiries having been answered by different members of the deputation, the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that he would give the whole subject his careful consideration, bearing in mind the decisions of Parliament already expressed, and the effect of the alterations in the law on professional emoluments, with a desire to come to a right conclusion on the merits of the case. It was understood that the financial statement will not be made until after the Easter recess The Bill will then be brought in by Lord Robert Grosvenor, seconded (as there is good reason to expect) by the present Attorney-General; both of whom, throughout the proceedings in Parliament, have so ably and kindly supported the claims of the Profession It is desirable that petitions in favour of the repeal of the duty should be presented by the different members representing such towns and districts as have not already petitioned, as soon as possible.—I am, dear Sir, yours very faithfully,

" R. MAUGHAM, Secretary."

POOR RELIEF ACT CONTINUANCE.—There is a Bill in the House of Commons to continue an Act of the fifteenth year of her present Majesty for charging the maintenance of certain poor persons in unions in England and Wales upon the common fund. The Act is to be continued until the 30th of September next, and to the end of the then next session of Parliament.

Mr. Philpotts, an attorney who was convicted of perjury at the Monmouth Assizes last year, and on whose behalf some legal points were reserved, has been committed to prison for twelve months, the objections having been overruled by the Court of Criminal Appeal.

REMOVAL OF THE LAW COURTS.

IN another page will be found the petition of the Incorporated Law Society, praying for the removal of the Law Courts to a site somewhat more convenient to those who have business there. Certainly nothing can be more *in*convenient than the present locality and the present courts. Situate a mile and a half from the nearest point of the legal district of London, and more than two miles from its furthest extremity, a large waste of valuable time is incurred in the mere going to and fro; and often it happens that papers, &c. are unexpectedly required while a cause is in progress, which cannot be procured from the office, even with the assistance of a Hansom paid a treble fee for fast driving. There is, besides, the positive annoyance to the Attorney, of being taken away from his office for the better part of the day, even if he has but the most trifling business to transact in either of the courts.

Their structure, also, is as inconvenient as their site. They are built as if it was intended that they should be as unaccommodating as possible. There is no place for the public. The Counsel intrude upon the reporters. The Attorneys are thrust into a well. The witnesses have no place at all, and, if ordered out of court, must catch cold in Westminster Hall. Nothing pleads on behalf of the present courts but antiquity. Now, we have a great respect for antiquity, if it is not preserved at the positive sacrifice of comfort and convenience; but when a mere sentiment is thrown into the scale against the convenience of the whole Profession and all of the public who have any business in the courts, we think that the former should give place to the latter. Therefore we are desirous that new and more commodious Law Courts should be erected in the more accessible neighbourhood of Lincoln's-inn-fields.

REAL RELIEF FOR THE LAND.

THE advocates of Radical Law Reform, when they talk so glibly of making land as easily and cheaply transmissible as personal estates appear to forget the true cause of the existing obstacles to such transmission; namely, the power which the law gives the owner to charge the estate for long periods with claims other than those of the person in possession, and to carve other lesser estates out of his greater one. So long as this almost unlimited liberty of charging an estate is sanctioned by the law, it will be impossible materially to diminish the cost of conveyancing, for before any conveyance can be safely completed it will still be necessary to investigate the title, so as to be assured that no such charge exists, or if there has been such a charge, that it has been properly removed, and that all necessary proofs are supplied of those events upon the contingency of which the charges were dependant. The mere contraction by a few folios of the language of the deed itself, will afford but a very trifling relief to the landowner. Hence, we are unable to share the sanguine hopes of those Utopian Law Reformers who look forward to conveyancing being effected by a piece of parchment the size of one's hand, at the cost of a few shillings, and of land bought and sold in the market by a transfer of this parchment as readily and surely as a bale of cotton.

But we do not, therefore, assert that the present system is incapable of improvement, and we venture to suggest two plans that have occurred to us, which would much facilitate the clearing of titles, and thus release a vast quantity of land now practically excluded from the market by reason of the difficulties in the title making the cost of conveyance almost as great as the value of the property itself.

In the first place, let there be a Court of Titles, similar to the Incumbered Estates Court in Ireland, only that application to it for assistance shall be voluntary. Give to this Court all necessary powers for clearing a title. Let it protect all persons absent, or under disability of any kind—ascertain the value of their claims, obtain payment thereof, and invest the proceeds for the use of the parties so entitled, whenever they shall be competent to receive it; and having thus removed all existing incumbrances, and determined all doubts, let the Court grant a certificate of title, which shall be unimpeachable, and the foundation of future title. Such a Court with such powers would be the greatest boon ever conferred upon the landowner.

And something might be done to facilitate conveyancing, even without resort to the machinery of such a Court. Let the law recognise, more fully than now in practice it does, the saying that possession is nine points of it. Let the right of charging it be so far restricted that all charges not accompanied with actual possession of the land itself shall be redeemable at a valuation, at the option of the actual possessor of the soil, by payment of that value in money, either to the party entitled to the charge, or into the Court of Chancery, in trust for such party, should he be under disability, or if it cannot be clearly ascertained who is entitled. This of itself would effect a vast improvement, by removing that principal obstacle to the easy transmission of land—the number and variety of charges which each owner is permitted to impose upon it. We see in its adoption no difficulties that may not be overcome by the exercise of a little ingenuity on the part of the framer of such a measure. It would be far more efficient for its purpose than a Registration of Deeds; and the construction of it would be a worthy exercise for the legislative genius of the present LORD CHANCELLOR.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

SEVERAL questions of interest to Municipal Corporations were determined by the Court of Error in the case of Jones v. Johnson, 19 Law T. Rep. 31. It is not necessary to repeat the facts; it will suffice to state the points decided. It was held that borough justices may make a rate at an ordinary meeting of the town council, and are not required, like county justices, to make their rates at a public meeting. It questioned the authority of the case of Woods v. Reed, 2 M. & W. 777, which decided that a rate could not be made for retrospective expenditure, and determined that a rate was good although it was to pay compensation to a former town clerk and certain legal expenses incurred. Thirdly, that a warrant of distress to levy a rate was not the less the act of the mayor because he had also signed it as a justice, but that he might act in both characters.

From the Circuits we have two criminal cases of considerable interest. Reg. v. Newall, 19 Law T. Rep. 31, was an indictment for perjury, committed on the hearing of a summons, charging a man with being the father of an illegitimate child. It was held by WIGHTMAN, J. that in such case it was necessary to give evidence of the charge made by the mother, either by the production of the original order made thereon, or by giving the defendant notice to produce the summons, so as to let in secondary evidence of it; and that it was not sufficient to produce the minutes of the proceedings by the clerk to the magistrates.

In Reg. v. Day, 19 Law T. Rep. 35, PLATT, B. reviewed the practice of receiving the deposition of an absent witness, under the provisions of sec. 17 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. It was held that, before such a deposition can be received, it must be proved affirmatively on the part of the prosecutor that it was taken in the presence of the accused, and that he, or his counsel or attorney, had full opportunity to cross-examine the witness; and that to afford him such full opportunity the examination must be taken, question by question, in his presence and in that of the magistrate, and that it is not sufficient to read over the statement of the witness previously taken and committed to writing in the absence of the magistrate. The accused must also be asked, if he has any question to put with reference to the statement of the individual witness. It was further decided in the same case, that it is not necessary that the witness whose deposition is used should be absolutely unable to travel: it suffices if his attendance would endanger his life.

Questions under the Health of Towns Acts have been singularly rare, considering the vast interests affected by them, and the number and variety of their provisions. The case of Reg. v. Cross, 19 Law T. Rep. 35, will therefore possess more than common interest. It was a question as to the election of a member of the Board of Health, and on the trial of the quo warranto before Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. it was held, that the office of chairman, who is Returning Officer, under the Act 11 & 12 Vict. c. 93, is judicial, and not merely ministerial. That the result of the poll, as certified by him, is final and conclusive. That the direction of the Act, that the Board shall meet at its office for the purpose of the election, is directory merely; and therefore, that when they had no regular office, they might meet at the office of the clerk.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Your article on "Commitments," in your paper of the 10th inst. mentions a case of an improper commitment for trial at the late assizes, arising out of a dispute in "Taunton market." I am anxious to have it clearly understood that it was not a Taunton commitment.

The prosecutor applied to me, and I certainly thought, on his statement, that he had been illused; but I at once told him that there was nothing like a felony in the matter, and that no magistrate of the Taunton bench would grant him a warrant. Accordingly, none of the proceedings took place in this division.

Allow me, however, in justice to the committing magistrates, to suggest that most probably the prosecutor afterwards materially modified his story; since he not only obtained first a warrant, and then a commitment for trial, but also ultimately a "true bill;" the latter being a conclusion to which the very intelligent grand jury would never case come, if the evidence before them, at all vents, had at all resembled that given at the trial.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

THE CLERK TO THE JUSTICES FOR THE DIVISION OF TAUNTON.

Taunton, April 12, 1852.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

WINDING UP.

Dale's case, 19 Law T. Rep. 25, is another decision upon calls. It appeared that by a call already made almost all the debts and expenses had been paid, but that the call was paid by the contributories in unequal proportions; that a further call was necessary, and had been made, each of the contributories who had already paid anything having credit given to him against the call for the sum so paid. Against this call the appeal was now made on various grounds of objection. But it was confirmed; the Lords Justices holding that it was quite unimportant whether the liabilities in respect of which the call was made were liquidated or not, or that if all the contributories had paid the call more money would be raised than was wanted to pay the outstanding debts and costs.

Vice-Chancellor PARKER has decided the important question, whether a bankrupt's certificate is a bar to liabilities under the Winding-up Acts. In Ex parte Chappell, 19 Law T. Rep. 29, the company was ordered to be wound up. Afterwards A. a shareholder, became bankrupt, and obtained his certificate. The Master placed him on the list of contributories, but the Court ordered his name to be expunged. "The Winding-up Acts," said the VICE-CHANCELLOR, "only appointed anothe mode of enforcing existing liabilities, and the calls now required to be paid by the bankrupt were in respect of a contribution really payable or due before the period of the bankruptcy."

In Ex parte Yelland, 19 Law T. Rep. 30, the company was registered. A. applied for shares and two were allotted to him. He paid his deposit and his name was returned as a shareholder to the registry office; but he did not execute the deed o settlement, which expressly provided that the liabilities and privileges of shareholders should commence on their execution of the deed. A. was held to be a contributory. "It appeared to him, said the VICE-CHANCELLOR, "that as A. had agreed to take shares, and had accepted them, h had authorised the company to put his name on the register without his execution of the deed."

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

A POINT of practice under the Copyholds Enfranchisement Act was reported last week. Where the tenant for life of a manor, in which lands were enfranchised, applied for the investment of the purchase-money paid into court, it was held to be the proper course to serve the commissioners with the petition, and the Court will order their costs to be paid by the petitioner, and added to his own, and deducted together out of the fund. (Ex parte The Bishop of Hereford, 19 Law T. Rep. 28.)

In Strutt v. Braithwaite, 19 Law T. Rep. 28, it appeared that by a marriage settlement an estate was conveyed to trustees on trust for husband for life, then to wife for life, and after decease of survivor, rents to be applied to the maintenance and education of the children until such child or children should attain twenty-one, and when and as such child and children respectively (if more than one) should attain twenty-one, then to convey the premises to such child or children in such manner, shares, and proportions, for such uses, &c. as husband and wife jointly, or the survivor, should appoint, and in default of appointment to convey same among such children equally. It was held that the power of appointment did not permit the exclusion of any of the children of the marriage, and that in default of appointment all the children, whether attaining twenty-one, or dying in their parents' lifetime or not, took equal vested interests in the estate in fee.

Where deeds were the evidence of title of two parties, on a bill of discovery to ascertain what had become of them, it was held that the defendant was bound to discover by his answer as to those deeds, even although it might be that the Court might decide at the hearing on some single point which would disentitle the plaintiff to a discovery. (Hambrook v. Smith, 19 Law T. Rep. 30.)

In Blennerhasset v. Monsell, 19 Law T. Rep. 36, a woman indebted by a judgment married, being at the time of her marriage entitled to a chose in action. She assigned it to a volunteer. The chose in action was not reduced into possession during the coverture. The husband survived the wife and took out administration. It was held that as assignee he could take only the surplus of the chose in action after payment of her debts. Also, that the statute of voluntary conveyances applies to the case of a conveyance to evade the creditors of a third person, as well as where it is made to evade the creditors of the debtor himself.

THE NEW WILLS ACT.

SIR,—As no one seems to be satisfied with the wording of this Bill, and no one seems to know how to improve it, and as you say it is neither very succinctly nor very clearly expressed, and yet you cannot suggest an amendment that would improve it - such is the difficulty of describing in words the precise form in which an act shall be done,—I ask, with due respect to the learned author of the Bill, why not get rid of the mystical words "at the foot or end thereof" altogether, and so let us fall back upon the law as it stood before, about which there was no difficulty or dispute? Thus, let the 9th section of the Act 1 Vict. c. 26, be repealed, and let it be re-enacted—

"That no will shall be valid unless it shall be in writing, and executed in manner hereinafter mentioned (that is to say), it shall be signed by the testator, or by some other person in his presence, and by his direction, and such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time, and such witnesses shall attest and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, but no form attestation shall be necessary."

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—Some points in the Practice of Lunacy, decided by the new LORD CHANCELLOR, were reported last week. In Re Chorley, 19 Law T. Rep. 25, his Lordship observed that in all ex parte applications for orders affecting the property of lunatics he should require the strictest evidence of title, and he called upon the Bar to assist him by directing his attention to any authorities in point, and to shew that the parties claiming are strictly entitled to what they ask. In Re Burridge, 19 Law T. Rep. 25, his Lordship refused an application for sale of a lunatic's reversion where it appeared to be required for payment of costs of the commission, and not for the benefit of the lunatic; and in Re Beavan, 19 Law T. Rep. 25, he disallowed the costs of parties interested in the lunatic's estate who had attended the inquiry without leave of the Court.

The extreme vigilance over the interests of suitors and desire to protect them against unnecessary costs which in these and many other cases have been exhibited by Lord ST. LEONARD'S, is highly to be commended, and should not pass unrecorded by a legal journal.

In Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 19 Law T. Rep. 28, an order had been made in the matter of the Trustee Act to transfer stock. In the affidavit of service the order was described as entitled of the cause only. A writ obtained on this affidavit was discharged for irregularity, on account of the difference between the title of the order and the description of it in the affidavit.

A point in the New Law of Evidence may be noted here. In Reg. v. Cross, 19 Law T. Rep. 35, Lord CAMPBELL held, at Nisi Prius, that the defendant in a quo warranto is a competent witness to prove his own qualification.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

WHERE money had been deposited in a bank, and the bankers agreed to pay three per cent. interest, and gave the depositor a deposit receipt with a memorandum at the foot "with three per cent. at fourteen days' notice," it was held not to support an allegation in a plea that the money was to be repaid to the depositor on request. The money so deposited consisted of notes of A.'s bank, payable at B. or in London. They were presented in London on the following day and dishonoured; but they would have been paid if they had been presented at B. the next day after they were deposited, the bank at B. being but a short distance from the bank at which they were deposited. The question was raised, but not decided, whether the bankers could set up the presentation and dishonour in London, in answer to an action for the money deposited. (Timmins v. Gibbins, 19 Law T. Rep. 31.) WILLIAMS, J. intimated his opinion to be that there was no laches on the part of the defendants.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

REMOVAL OF THE COURTS FROM WESTMINSTER TO THE INNS OF COURT.

THE following petition on this subject has been presented by the Incorporated Law Society:—

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of "The Society of Attorneys, Solicitors, Proctors, and others, not being Barristers, practising in the Courts of Law and Equity of the United Kingdom," incorporated by Charters of King William the Fourth and Queen Victoria.

Sheweth,—That evidence was taken before two Select Committees of your Honourable House appointed "to consider the expediency of erecting a building in the neighbourhood of the Inns of Court, for the Sittings of the Courts of Law and Equity, in lieu of the present courts adjoining to Westminster Hall, with a view to the more speedy, convenient, and effectual administration of justice," and which evidence is contained in the Reports of the Select Committee, bearing date respectively the 22nd July, 1842, and the 1st August, 1845.

That your petitioners find it proved, both by facts and by the opinions of the highest judicial officers, and other persons of great eminence and experience in the law, that the distance of the Westminster Courts from the law offices, and from the chambers of the barristers and solicitors, causes much delay in the administration of justice, and is thereby productive of great inconvenience to all classes of the Profession, and of great loss to the suitors of the courts.

That the Courts of Chancery sit at Westminster during two of the four Terms, and in the vacations in Lincoln's-inn, and that the Common Law Courts sit during all the four Terms and at the Sittings after Term at Westminster.

That, amongst other facts, it is shewn that little or no progress is made in the preparation of equity pleadings while the Courts sit at Westminster, and that during the same period the proceedings upon references in the Masters' offices, requiring the assistance of counsel, are totally suspended through the inability of counsel to attend them. It is also shewn that these causes of delay (which result solely from the distance of the Westminster Courts from chambers) are removed when the Judges adjourn their sittings to Lincoln's-inn; and it is shewn in like manner that the chamber business of the common law barristers is much hindered by the remoteness of the courts; and that their attendance on the judges at chambers, and on references pending before the common law Masters, and on consultations and conferences with attorneys and solicitors, is rendered difficult and uncertain; and that whilst the despatch of business thus urgently demands the attendance of counsel at or in the neighbourhood of the Inns of Court, the barristers are obliged to pass the greater part of their time at Westminster in comparative idleness, without the opportunity of employing their vacant intervals of time in any manner serviceable to the suitors or themselves.

That it is also shewn by such evidence that the attendance of the attorneys and solicitors at the Westminster Courts is subject to similar inconvenience and loss of time; that it draws them away, often for days together, from their various duties at their own chambers and the law offices, from their many engagements with clients, with counsel at chambers, with the Masters of the Courts, and with members of their own Profession, to the sacrifice of their own and others' time, to the delay of business, and to the great prejudice and inconvenience of their clients. That in consequence of such distance the principals are obliged to delegate to their clerks much important business which they would otherwise themselves superintend.

That the situation of the Westminster Courts is in many other ways at variance with the interests of the suitors: thus it is proved that Court business in Equity is transacted in a less perfect and satisfactory manner at Westminster than at Lincoln's-inn; —that books, papers, and information which may happen to be required from the public offices or from solicitors' chambers, during the hearing of a cause, and which are at hand in the latter case, cannot frequently be procured at the distance of Westminster. It is also shewn that the despatch necessary in urgent cases in drawing up the rules and orders of the Common Law Courts cannot be attained, and that the communication between the officers attending the Court and their offices is otherwise inconveniently interrupted.

That it is clearly proved that from these causes, and various other inconveniences of a like nature, arising from the situation of the Westminster Courts, the business of the law is done with more effort and waste of strength, with less accuracy, less precision, and less expedition than it might or ought to be, and that those evils diminish the relief whilst they increase the costs of the suitor.

That the present courts at Westminster, and the rooms and offices attached to them, are admitted by all to be inadequate to the purposes to which they are appropriated; and your petitioners submit that such inadequacy may well be now supplied, when the erection of new courts and offices is imperatively called for, and cannot be dispensed with.

That the Master of the Rolls and two of the Vice-Chancellors occupy only temporary Courts at Westminster; that the Court of Common Pleas has no Court in Term for the trials at Nisi Prius; and that the Queen's Bench and the Exchequer have no adequate Courts for the same purposes; that for want of better accommodation, consultations are frequently held in the robing-rooms and in the passages and avenues of the Courts; that those passages are dark and intricate;—that there are no rooms or places of waiting for jurymen, witnesses, and parties; that there is no library except a small one for the Equity Courts; no sufficient rooms for the Bar, and none for the attorneys; nor any sufficient consultation rooms.

That it is proved by the evidence of the Senior Masters in Chancery, and of others, that the offices of the Masters (independently of being separated from the Equity Courts) are wholly insufficient for the satisfactory transaction of business; and, by the evidence of the Senior Registrar in Chancery, that the Registrar's offices are so limited in space as not to afford a distinct room for each of those important officers.

That the offices of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery are very small and inconvenient; and that the whole of these offices and their contents, the books and accounts of the sixty millions of money now under the guardianship of the Court, and all the accounts of the past are (by the construction of the building, or otherwise) altogether unprotected from the casualty of fire; and that the records also in that part of the Registrar's Office, called the Report Office, the repository of the decrees and orders of the Equity Courts for centuries past, are in the same unprotected state.

That it appears by the evidence of Sir Charles Barry, the architect, that "the present plan for the new Houses of Parliament, if carried into effect, would leave no room whatever for any other public purpose," and that "no further space or increase of accommodation can be given to the Courts at Westminster without very much injuring his plan, as it regards the Houses of Parliament;" but that, if the courts were removed, "it would afford the means of making a very considerable improvement, both in the convenience and in the external character of the new Houses of Parliament."

That the facts before stated shew that a considerable outlay for providing accommodation for the Courts and the Chancery offices has become unavoidable; and your petitioners submit, that a remarkble variety of circumstances has combined to suggest the manner in which that outlay should be expended; namely, in a union of the Law and Equity Courts, and of the Masters, Accountant-General, Registrars, and other Chancery offices upon the same spot, in the vicinity of the Inns of Court.

That it is clearly established in evidence, that no public necessity exists for the courts of law being contiguous to the Houses of Parliament: it is shewn, that the judges are only called to attend the House of Lords when their Courts are not sitting at Westminster, and, that with reference to obtaining counsel on the hearing of appeals, and on Parliamentary Committees (besides that there is at present a distinct Parliamentary Bar), there is now no difficulty in obtaining the assistance of the ablest counsel, whether the Courts are sitting at Westminster or elsewhere; and it is the opinion of witnesses of the highest authority and weight, that no such difficulty would be experienced if the Courts were permanently fixed in the vicinity of the Inns of Court.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray that your Honourable House will take this subject into your early consideration, with a view to the adoption of such measures to meet the existing evils, as to your Honourable House may seem meet.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

EASTER TERM EXAMINATION.

The Examiners have appointed Tuesday, the 27th instant, to take the examination of the candidates for Easter Term. Sir Archer Denman Croft will preside.

In the printed List of Admissions, the numbers appear to be 168. Of these fifty-five were examined last Term, and others in previous Terms. A considerable number have given notice of examination only, and not of admission, which is a prudent and convenient course, because, if they should not be successful, their names will not be reiterated in the printed lists.

Allowing for the usual casualties, the probable number of candidates will be 100.—Legal Observer.

The Lord Chancellor.—It is with pleasure we are able to state that the Lord Chancellor, who for some time past has been suffering under an attack of influenza, has so far recovered that he will sit in his court this day (the first day of Easter Term) as usual.—Morning Paper.

We regret to hear of the illness of the noble ex-Lord Chancellor (Lord Truro). His lordship has been for some days confined to his bed. On Tuesday he was rather better.—Morning Paper.

At a sale of land held in Limerick, under the order of the Encumbered Estates Court, an estate, yielding a profit rent of between 700*l.* and 800*l.* sold for 12,620*l.* The incumbrances on the estate amounted to 20,000*l.*

During the past week the Incumbered Estates Commissioners paid out 66,000*l.*; making the total amount of funds distributed by them from the commencement of their duties, 2,041,000*l.*

Easter Term.—Yesterday, on the opening of the law offices after the holidays, the arrears for Easter Term, which commenced on Thursday, were exhibited. The present Term will be remarkable as the first in which the new Lord Chancellor (Baron St. Leonards) will preside at Westminster, and in which Mr. Justice Crompton will take his seat in Westminster Hall. The arrears of the three Common Law Courts, exclusive of Crown cases, number only 100. In the Court of Q. B. there are 55, consisting of 23 special cases and demurrers for argument, 17 enlarged rules, 13 rules for new trials, and 1 for judgment and 1 County Court appeal. In the Court of C. P. there are only 17 matters entered—7 demurrers, 3 enlarged rules, 6 new trials, and 1 for judgment. Whilst in the Exchequer there is 1 County Court appeal, 3 cases in the special paper for judgment, and 6 for argument, and 18 new trial rules for argument. In the Equity Courts there is a diminution in the number of the arrears.

The Court of Chancery.—It is stated that a meeting of the Equity judges will take place at the Lord Chancellor's residence to-day (Saturday) for the purpose of considering the new orders.

A LAW UNIVERSITY.

IT is, perhaps, as well that the homœopathic measure of Reform proposed by the Committee of the Benchers should have been rejected by the collective body. It would have accomplished little good, and it would have stood in the way of something better.

There is but one remedy for the present defective state of legal education. We must have a Law University, founded upon an enlarged and liberal basis, and embracing the whole Profession. Of that University all Lawyers should be required to be members; according to their destinations, whether their purpose is to become Attorneys or Advocates, so should be the curriculum of legal studies. For some short period a common education must be pursued for all. Then the student should be required to make choice which branch of the Profession he will adopt, and thenceforth his studies should be directed accordingly, and an appropriate examination should test his fitness for admission to practise that branch of the Profession which he has chosen. Nor should this examination for either branch be limited to legal knowledge; it should extend to other acquirements; it should be an essential condition to practise as a Lawyer, whether as Advocate or Attorney, that the candidate should have had a liberal, even a large, education: he should know something of the classics, be read in history, in science, and in the arts.

The object of requiring such an education is not so much because it is necessary to a knowledge of the law, but as affording that which, to an Attorney, is equally requisite, a guarantee, to some extent, for character. It is of the foremost importance that an Attorney should be an honest and honourable man, for no man is so trusted as he, none so exposed to temptation. The best security for honour, next to religion, is position in society, which makes a man fear to do what would damage his reputation and cast him down from the place he holds. A liberal education gives the taste and the manners that secure such a social position, and therefore it is that we so strenuously insist upon the propriety of adding to the present course of legal examination, a further inquiry into the general acquirements of the candidate, and especially into the literæ humanæ, including the classics. This great improvement might be introduced even into the existing plan, but it would most properly form a portion of the scheme for a Law University, that should embrace the entire subject of legal education, and include the teaching, the examination, and the admission to practise of all members of the Profession—Barristers, Attorneys, Proctors. As we have already intimated, we are not blind to the advantages that accrue from the facilities of access of the Bar gathering to it many men of rank and fortune, who do not resort to it with any purpose of pursuing it as a profession. But these advantages are more than counterbalanced by the obvious evils of having a considerable portion of the business divided among those to whom it does no service, while it deprives the real Barrister, the man who goes to the Profession to work in it and live by it, of that which would have just helped him to a maintenance while he is fighting his way upwards. A strict examination would limit the Bar to those who contemplate living by the Bar. In like manner a strict examination of the Attorneys as to general acquirement would prevent many persons from coming among them who, having no social position to maintain, are regardless of the rules of professional life, and whose conduct it is that usually brings discredit upon the Lawyers and upon the law.

Look into any neighbourhood, note who are the discreditable Lawyers of the locality, and it will be found that nine out of ten of them would never have obtained admission to the Profession, had the examination comprised an inquiry into classical and general acquirements.

THE JEWS' QUESTION.

THE very able judgments of the Barons of the Exchequer in the case of Miller v. Salomons have not in the least shaken the opinion we submitted to our readers when first the question was mooted; and it is pleasing to find that in this opinion we have the concurrence of so acute an intellect as that of Baron MARTIN. The elaborate and learned argument of Baron PARKE has not convinced us that in either point the views here stated were wrong. It will be remembered that the position we took was this:—An oath consists of two parts, the oath proper,—that is to say, the pledge to do or not to do,—that something is or is not;—and the sanction of the oath, which is only the form in which the person swearing attests his veracity. Now, the Legislature has provided that every man who is required to make oath shall do so in the form most binding upon his conscience. This can only mean that, while the substance of the oath is preserved, the sanction of it may be altered to suit the conscience of the swearer. Plainly the words in the oath in question, "on the true faith of a Christian," are the sanction, and not the substance, of the oath, and therefore may be altered so as to meet the conscience of the party called upon to take it.

To this argument the only answer is, that the Legislature has prescribed the very words of this particular oath, and that only the Legislature can alter them.

The reply is, that the Law has, in other cases, required an oath to be in a given form, and yet the statute that permits an oath to be taken in the form most binding upon the conscience has been held to permit of an alteration in the form so prescribed by the law; and there is no reason for making this oath an exception, especially as the fact is notorious and undisputed that the form of it was framed with especial reference to Roman Catholics alone, and was designed for their relief, and not for the exclusion of any other persuasion. But then, it is said, that in construing laws the Judges must look only to the words of the statute, and not to the intentions of the framers. True, so it ought to be, but so it is not always found to be. To take a recent instance. In construing the new Evidence Act, the Judges have been guided, in the exclusion of the wife from the witness-box, by the known intention of the House of Lords so to exclude her, although, according to the words as they stand in the statute, she is admissible. Besides, the statute in question is remedial, and therefore should receive the most liberal construction in favour of the object for which it was enacted.

CHANCERY REFORM.

LORD ST LEONARD's has produced the first instalment of the promised Chancery Reform, in a Bill for the abolition of the Masters' offices. We refer the reader to the report of the proceedings in Parliament for a brief sketch of the measure as propounded by the LORD CHANCELLOR to the House of Lords. Suffice it, here, to say, that it proceeds upon the principle of requiring the entire business of a suit to be conducted by the Judge, who is to hear the whole of it in person, and thus prevent the delay that arises from sending a cause from Court to Court, from the Judge to the Master, and from the Master back again to the Judge.

Since all the great authorities in Law Reform appear to be agreed, that this is the real remedy for the evils of Chancery, we are bound to lay aside the doubts that certainly present themselves to our own mind, as to the propriety of the proposed remedy. We must confess, however, that we cannot see how the work is to be done, if the Judges are to do it all. If their whole time is occupied now in merely hearing arguments upon the facts ascertained by others, and deciding the law, it perplexes us to conjecture how they are to get through the work at all, if, in addition to their present duties, they are also to do the work now done by the Masters, whose hands and heads are likewise fully employed. Certainly some small allowance must be made for the increased facility with which they will proceed to judgment, having heard all the facts of the case at the trial; but the time thus gained will bear no comparison to the increase of the work.

Nor are we quite convinced that it is desirable, even if practicable, that the same Judge should investigate the facts and decide the law. It is said that the Judges of the Common Law Courts do so, and hence the greater facility with which suits are settled there. But neither is such altogether the fact, nor is the result produced by the cause alleged. The Common Law Judges do not at once try the facts and decide the law. On the contrary, in nine cases out of ten, where there is a question of law, the facts are tried by a jury, and the law is decided, not by the Judge who tried the facts, but by other Judges, upon a statement of the facts by counsel. In Westminster Hall, where, in truth, the law is decided, the Judges always determine the law without trying the facts. Then, again, the delays in Chancery, as compared with the speed of a Common Law Court, are consequence so much of the procedure as of the nature of the questions to be determined. At Common Law we try a single issue. In Chancery, many issues are usually tried together. It is the necessity for having all parties interested in the subject-matter before the Court, so that the rights of all may be protected, that constitutes the true cause of the delay and expense of a Chancery suit. If, for instance, there is a question as to the title to an estate, upon which twenty different persons have charges, it would be clearly impossible to deal with it without ascertaining the precise amount of the claim of each; to do this each must be brought before the Court, and each must be heard, and a decision must be had upon the legal rights of each. This unavoidably occasions delays and expenses, and no alterations of procedure can materially diminish these, so long as the law with respect to charging property continues unchanged. That is the real defect, and there lies the true remedy. Some restrictions should be placed upon the power of charging property, as we suggested last week, or rather, perhaps, greater facilities should be given for *dis*charging it. Instead of permitting owners to grant estates in property to any but the actual possessor, let their right be limited to charging it with a liability, in the nature of a mortgage, which the person in possession should have a right at any time to pay off in money, leaving it to the law, after he has paid the money into court, to distribute it among the owners. This would be the true remedy for the grievances of Chancery, and the costs of conveyancing, and nothing less than this will give the redress demanded by the country.

We submit these views with great deference, for they are somewhat novel, and differ much from those adopted by other Law Reformers. But, as every contribution to the subject may help the end all have equally in desire, we could not refrain from hinting the doubts we feel of the success of the experiment about to be tried, and at the same time indicating what appears to us to be the true source of the mischief, and the true remedy that should be applied to it.

THE COUNTY COURTS BILL.

Acting upon the intimation of the Lord Chancellor, that the equity clauses of this Bill must be expunged until the Chancery Reform Bill is in operation, and it is seen how its provisions may affect the proposed new jurisdiction of the County Courts, Mr. Fitzroy has deferred the further progress of his Bill through committee until next week, that he may determine what course shall be adopted under these new circumstances, whether he shall abandon it altogether, or proceed with such portions of it only as relate to the improvement of the County Courts and of the procedure there. It seems that already the Bill has been subjected to considerable changes since it left the Lords, all of them made without discussion, and, as was the case last session, nobody knowing wherefore, or even the hand by which they have been effected, but still shewing the presence of a secret enemy, resolved that no real improvement shall be made, and maiming everything that might have a tendency to induce the country Attorneys to prefer the County Courts to the Superior Courts. It is very hard, that among the sixty-four Lawyers who have seats in the present House of Commons, not one can be found who will protect the interests of the Profession in the country. The Metropolitan Lawyers have many guardians in Parliament, and whatever they desire is promptly done. But let any thing be proposed for the advantage of the Profession in the provinces, and nobody looks to it or protects it against open or concealed enemies, and it is sure to be expunged or damaged in that convenient place for quiet jobbery to work its will,—the Committee. May they be more fortunate in finding friends in the next Parliament.

The clause relating to Advocates in the County Courts has been again materially altered, by whom, or how, or when, nobody knows. Certainly it is not improved, and it recognizes the very objectionable scheme of a Barrister practising uninstructed by an Attorney; in fact, doing the work, and therefore invading, the province of, the Attorney. On the other hand, it has expunged the provision that forbad an Attorney to invade the province of the Barrister by acting as Advocate for another Attorney; a very different matter, indeed, from conducting the case of his own client. The altered clause runs thus:—

21. And whereas, by the said Act passed in the 9 & 10 Vict. it was enacted, that no person should be entitled to appear for any other party to any proceeding in any of the said courts, "unless he be an attorney of one of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record, or a barrister-at-law, instructed by such attorney on behalf of the party, or, by leave of the judge, any other person allowed by the judge to appear instead of such party, but that no barrister, attorney, or other person, except by leave of the judge, should be entitled to be heard to argue any question as counsel for any other person in any proceeding in any court holden under that Act:" Be it enacted, that the said last-recited enactment be repealed; and that it shall be lawful for the party to the suit or other proceeding, or for an attorney of one of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record retained by or on behalf of the party, or for a barrister retained by or on behalf of the party, on either side, or, by leave of the judge, for any other person allowed by the judge to appear instead of the party, to address the Court, without any right of exclusive or pre-audience, but subject to such regulations as the judge may from time to time prescribe for the orderly transaction of the business of the Court.

This is a specimen of the manner in which the most important details of a Bill can be changed in committee, without the knowledge of the House, and, therefore, without discussion.

SKETCH OF THE SCOTTISH LAW COURTS.

PLEADING NOT SPECIAL.

ARTICLE SEVENTH.

The late Lord Abinger, in his impatience with those who ventured to depreciate the system of special pleading, once said, "Why not resort at once to the practice in Scotland of writing pamphlet in a popular manner upon the whole case?" The taunt had its sting, and to this day our best lawyers, bred up under our own stringent system, the perfect mastery of which may have been the labour of a lifetime, and is the staple of their own fame, do not scruple to comment on the alarming latitudinarianism of the Scotch pleaders—whose method, if the right one, no doubt covertly implies, that their own acquirements may be somewhat superfluous. An amusing illustration of this occurred no later than last session at the Bar of the House of Lords. Mr. Peacock was arguing a Scotch case on a Bill of Exceptions, and it was one of his points to make out, that a certain pleading, used in an Inferior Court in Scotland, which had been signed by one of the parties to a different suit, had been rightly admitted as evidence against that party at a jury trial as a declaration binding upon him. The following dialogue ensued—

Mr. Peacock.—My Lords, it is impossible such a document can be held to be a pleading. It seems nothing but a vague and rambling narrative. Thus it goes on to say, that he (who signed it) had been in the wars, and had received a wound in the leg! How can this be a pleading?

Lord Brougham.—It is all very well for you, Mr. Peacock, to say that. You are, of course, thinking of what a pleading is here. But in my time, I recollect, there used to be long quotations from "Shakspeare" in the Scotch pleadings. That was, to be sure, before the late changes, when written cases were used, and everything was urged in the way both of argument and illustration. They were, in fact, nothing but written speeches.

Lord Brougham here referred to the practice that prevailed till after the beginning of the present century, when "printed cases" used to be drawn up by the junior counsel, and submitted to the Court, oral argument being in little esteem. Lord Abinger, no doubt, had the old practice also in his eye. Of late, however, though there has been no approach to a direct admission of any fundamental error in principle on the part of our northern neighbours, the course of modern improvements sufficiently shews that, by gradually tightening and not relaxing their methods, they hope to save themselves much of the gratuitous raillery, inspired by the severe prudery of our own straitlaced and artificial system.

In describing the Scotch mode of pleading and its recent changes so far as they tend to reflect light on questions still unsettled here, it will best suit our purpose to give an outline of the state of practice as it stands under the last finishing touches given to it by the stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 36, reserving our observations on forms of actions and other incidental features of the system till afterwards.

The first step of the plaintiff is to issue a summons, which has always been in Scotland a formal document of a mixed nature, comprising not only all that is here implied by that name, but also what corresponds to our declaration. The Scotch, in fact, reach at one step what in our procedure is only attained by two. This summons, which was improved in form twenty-five years ago, still continued till the late statute to be somewhat vaguely and indefinitely drawn up. It was, however, theoretically divided into four parts. The first was the premises or narrative, which by way of inducement set forth the nature and extent of the demand. The second was the subsumption, which stated generally the refusal of defendant to satisfy the claim. The third was the conclusions, which specified the decree asked to be pronounced. The fourth was the will, which was the warrant to the bailiffs to serve the writ on defendant and cite him to appear on a given day. This summons was a writ which proceeded in the name of the Queen, and was addressed to the bailiff. To state briefly the pith of the form in an ordinary action of assumpsit, it would run thus:—"Victoria, &c. to (bailiff), greeting, whereas B. owes A. 100*l.* and although he has been often asked to pay he refuses, therefore he ought and should be decerned and ordained by our Court, &c. to pay the said 100*l.* Our will is herefore that you cite B. to appear before our Court on (a certain day), to see sentence pronounced, according to justice." In this form there used to be introduced and detailed under the first part the whole grounds of action, and simple allegations of fact were mixed up with a great deal of argumentative and irrelevant matter. The consequence was, that the summons was generally too vague and uncertain not to require a revisal, which was generally ordered by the judge of the first instance when it came before him. This new edition or revised summons was what was called a condescendence, and corresponded to our declaration. The condescendence, therefore, was invariably a mere reproduction of the summons slightly extended, and perhaps stripped of its surplusage, and as it came to be almost uniformly ordered by the Judge, the knowledge of this result had no other effect but to encourage a slovenly habit of framing the summons, since its defects could afterwards be so easily supplied. It is the practice for the attorney to draw the pleadings, except in cases of more than average difficulty, when they are sent to counsel for revisal. The evils of this loose and uncertain pleading were found to be too great, and the recent Act accordingly cut down the summons proper to the mere formal portions, and ordered to be added to it, and treated as part thereof, in future, what before constituted the condescendence. The document still retains its old name of a summons, though it is in reality our summons and declaration conjoined. It is divided into two parts,—the former comprising the names of the parties, the amount of money due or damages sought, or the redress claimed "in terms of the declaration hereunto annexed." This first part is not longer than our own summons. Then follows the declaration, or second part (called technically, the condescendence), which states in short and articulate paragraphs the facts, out of which the action arises. There seems to be no other rule for the framing of this pleading, than that it be restricted entirely to matter of fact, avoiding argument, and omitting no material allegation, the proof of which goes to the essence of the action. The statutory regulation indicates nothing more definite than this, and though it may be thought somewhat loose, yet in practice the judge of the first instance has so liberal a discretion in ordering amendments, striking out irrelevant matter, and giving costs, that this salutary control serves to keep the pleader as closely to the subject perhaps is practicable.

To the end of the summons and declaration must be appended what are called "pleas in law," which are in fact the naked propositions or principles in law, which are supposed to be applicable to the state of facts disclosed at length, and with full circumstantiality in the declaration. They resemble, in some respects, the points for argument, which are required to be marked on the margin of our demurrer-books. It must be confessed, that though perhaps there is a looseness in the authorities as to how these "pleas in law" ought to be framed, yet they are of considerable advantage in informing the Court on what precise ground the parties seek to stand. There is also a very quaint practice still adhered to, of adding at the end of these "pleas in law" these singular words: "under protestation to add and eik," as if the pleader had run out of breath before he had exactly finished all he was about to say, but claimed to do so at a future time.

It must not be forgot, also, that the plaintiff, when he files his declaration, leaves with it in the hands of the Court all the documents, deeds, and writings, upon which he founds. These are all marked by the clerk of the Court with his initials, and numbered separately, and an inventory accompanies them. Accordingly, when the defendant comes to prepare his plea, his attorney has nothing to do but to go to the clerk of the Court and give his receipt, in return for which he is allowed to borrow and peruse all these papers. In this way discovery is seldom resorted to, and even when it is required, it is granted promptly and effectively, as we shall afterwards see.

The service of the writ of summons and declaration which is, as we have shewn, a single document, is a very different matter from what it is here. It is not in the hands of private individuals at all, neither the plaintiff nor his attorney, nor attorney's clerk, can serve it. The exclusive exercise of this function is the duty of a select class of persons who are dignified by the appellation of messengers-at-arms, while perhaps in plain prose they may be called "bum-bailiffs unattached." They exist in various localities throughout Scotland, and they not only have in their hands the service of writ of summons in civil actions, but also that of capias and bench warrants in criminal cases, and they are moreover entrusted with the delicate social duties of fi. fa. and ca. sa. Hence the summons is always addressed by the Queen to these messengers-at-arms. They are all under the control of the Lord Lyon King-at-arms, who maintains with them the same intimate and responsible relations as our sheriff of London with his bound bailiffs. This entente cordiale is of course always liable to be disturbed by the discovery of any flaw in their executions, when an immediate reference is made to the sureties who guaranteed their integrity and abilities. Neither are these messengers-at-arms confined to one locality. On the contrary, they have the run of all Scotland, and do not require to halt at the border of each county. The Common Law Commissioners recommend this obvious improvement also here.

The mode of service in Scotland is as different from ours as the persons who take charge of it. The primary and effective service is at the defendant's domicile, though of course personal service being a short cut to the same end, and also the written consent of defendent to hold the summons as served are always sufficient. What constitutes the domicile or dwelling-house for the purpose of service is very well understood, and to this place, or either, if there are two domiciles, the messenger at arms proceeds, having the original writ of summons in his possession. If he finds defendant's wife or servant willing to receive a copy, it is enough; if, however, they refuse, the officer has only to affix a copy to the door, after giving six audible knocks. A mysterious importance is attached to the latter part of the performance, and a half superstitious story runs, that without the knocking, service is null. If the defendant has no accessible habitation, or has departed and left no sign, and the most inventive wit cannot detect him, service at his last domicile, or, if he was a stranger casually passing, at lodgings where he remained forty days, is sufficient. In Scotland the tedious and harassing rites of distringas and outlawry are quite unknown, and as we have already imitated points in the procedure of the Scotch, it seems by the Report of the Common Law Commissioners, they are agreed that a great deal of superfluous trouble, time, and anxiety, was absorbed in these ceremonies. The third mode of service is peculiar to Scotland, and has flourished for two centuries there. It is also proposed by the Commissioners for our adoption, though it must be allowed with an improvement. The Scotch plan alluded to is the service of writs of summons on persons having real or personal property in Scotland, but residing abroad. This used to take place by proclamation at the market-place, and at the pier and shore of Leith, and is called an edictal citation. Since 1825 a substitution has been created by statute, which consists in filing the citation in a kind of Gazette, specially appropriated to that purpose, while regulations were made for giving it due publicity. The plan, however, proposed by the Comman Law Commissioners, which is borrowed from Chancery practice is still better, viz. to apply to the Court for leave to serve the defendant personally out of the jurisdiction.

The ordinary interval between service and entering appearance used to be twenty-seven and sixty days, according to distance; but now, by the late statute, these periods are reduced to fourteen and twenty-one days respectively. There are certain privileged summonses, however, which are allowed to be returnable in six days, on account of their peculiar urgency. The return-day having arrived, the plaintiff is bound to have previously put his cause on the list belonging to the particular Judge of the first instance, whom he originally selected. If this is not done, defendant can sue out a summary process, whereby he obtains three guineas costs, and the writ abates. If, however, plaintiff has duly enrolled the cause, and defendant has not entered appearance, a decree in absence can be had, which is so far in the nature of a judgment by default that execution can issue forthwith, though up to the last moment the defendant can set aside this judgment on payment of costs. If defendant has entered appearance, he has twelve days to put in his plea.

In our next paper we shall state the mode in which the plea is framed, how the record is made up, how it is dealt with by the judge, as well as other incidental matters connected with pleading.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

BILL FOR THE ABOLITION OF THE MASTERS' OFFICE.

MONDAY, April 19.—The LORD CHANCELLOR rose to lay on the table a Bill for the purpose of abolishing the office of Master in Chancery, and of substituting other officers in their stead. At present there were nine Masters in Chancery, and one Mastership vacant. He proposed to bring his Bill into operation as quickly as possible, with all due regard to existing interests; and he intended that the Master's office should be abolished, and that the Bill should come into operation on the first day of next Michaelmas Term. The four senior Masters would then be relieved of their offices, and the remaining five would be left for the duties devolving upon them, such as the winding up of all matters before them, and of all other matters which, up to the period of the new Bill's operation, the Lord Chancellor might think fit to confide to their decision. They would also derive from this powers with which they had never been invested before. It had always been considered one of the faults of the Master's office that they had no power to compel the parties to proceed with the matters which they brought before them. He should supply by this Bill the want of that power. He had already stated that the present scheme would lead to the dismissal of the four senior Masters, and he had taken great care that no favouritism should take place in the dismissal of the Masters. They would be dismissed according to their seniority, and would retain their full salaries when dismissed. The five remaining Masters would carry on the business of the Court, but under new powers. The new scheme was this—that the four judges in equity—namely, the Master of the Rolls, and the three Vice-Chancellors, each having one chief clerk, and each chief clerk having one second clerk under him, should carry on in chambers all the business of their respective courts hitherto transacted by the Masters. Henceforward there would be no references to the Masters—no reports from the Masters—no statements of facts. All these matters of form were to be abolished, and the j[illegible] was to transact in chambers so much of the [illegible]ness of the court as was not now heard of. He would go into his chamber at whatever hour of the day he might think fitting or convenient, or even for the whole day, and there he would consult with his clerks as to what ought to be done. If a report should be necessary, he would either draw it up himself in his chambers, or would send for the registrar to draw it up for him. This Bill would also define the power which the judge was to have in chambers, for it was quite evident that, if the new scheme were to have any chance of success, you must work it out yourself, and see clearly what it was; for the mere fact of giving general powers was not a fair way of testing the merits of any new scheme. When the judge got into his chamber, each of them would have a chief clerk under him. He had only thought it right that each judge should have the power of appointing his own chief clerk; so that he should have the power of approving his exertions. He also intended to give the appointment of the second clerk to the chief clerk, for the same reason which induced him to give to the judge the appointment of his chief clerk,—namely, a desire to encourage a strong feeling of sympathy between those who had to appoint and those who had to obey. He also intended that, when this Bill came into operation, there should be some place provided where the judge could have at once the benefit of the co-operation of his chief clerk. He would not delay the operation of his Bill until fitting places were provided for such purposes. He should therefore propose that, for the present, the Master of the Rolls should meet his clerk at the Rolls'-office, and that each of the three Vice-Chancellors should be provided with commodious chambers in Lincoln's-inn until the country should furnish them better accommodation. Having made some allusion to the present chambers reserved for the Masters (which was not heard distinctly in the gallery), he said that he proposed to take a power to sell those chambers, believing that the money produced from such a sale would be sufficient to build three commodious courts for the three Vice-Chancellors, with rooms annexed for the accommodation of their clerks. He was most anxious that the new clerks should not find their way into Southampton-buildings; for if they were once placed there they would act as if they were Masters, and not clerks; and in that case the new scheme would not answer. He would not go further into the details of the Bill. He admitted that there was one inconvenience in the new scheme. In each of the Courts of Common Law there were at present five judges, and when one of them was absent at chambers the business of the Court proceeded, and was not disturbed. Yet in each of the Courts of Equity the judge might have to leave his court for a part of, or even for the whole day. In the latter case his court must be entirely closed, and then no business whatever could be carried on. He hoped, however, that the facility, the cheapness, the rapidity, and the ease which the suitor and the judge would both feel in the transaction of business would be more than a compensation for this inconvenience. His noble and learned friend had introduced into that House during the present session a Bill to extend the jurisdiction of the County Court. When he had the honour of ascending the woolsack, he found that Bill on the point of leaving the House, and had not time to consider it. He now felt that it would interfere with his own Bill, and it was therefore impossible to pass his noble and learned friend's Bill without first seeing how far it would fit in and dovetail to this. As no man could be more anxious than his noble and learned friend that this Bill for the abolition of the Masters' office should pass, he anticipated that his noble and learned friend would be the first to agree that his Bill should wait until it could be seen how far it would be an assistance, and not a hindrance to the present measure. This measure related wholly to the abolition of the Masters' office, and to the formation of a new judicial jurisdiction. There was, however, a still more important portion of the recommendations of the commissioners, relative not to the practice but to the procedure in Chancery, which would tend much to improve and cheapen the administration of the law. A Bill to carry out those recommendations was at that moment in progress; and he did hope that in the course of the next three weeks, with the assistance of his noble and learned friends near him, he should be able to lay before their lordships a measure which would carry into effect all the propositions which the commissioners had suggested. He would not detain their lordships further by going through the various clauses of the present Bill, but would conclude by expressing a confident hope that, so far as it went, it fully carried out the assurance given by his noble friend at the head of the Government, that every legal improvement which the public interests required would be fully, fairly, and effectually made.—Lord CAMPBELL having paid much consideration to the subject, conceived this Bill to be well worth the consideration of their lordships. A good deal had been said occasionally respecting the fusion of law and equity. He would not enter into that question then, but would content himself with laying down this great principle, which he trusted that his noble and learned friend on the woolsack would adopt, that one court should determine a cause from beginning to end, and that the suitors should not be sent from one court to another, almost at the caprice of the judges. He thought that the Court of Common Law, on the production of the judgment in such a case, should at once have the power of granting an injunction to prevent the repetition of such a nuisance. So, too, in cases where a copyright was once established, the Courts of Common Law should have at once the power of issuing an injunction to prevent all future violation of it.—The LORD CHANCELLOR would not enter at present into the discussion of the wide question just raised by his noble and learned friend the Chief Justice. He would, however, take the liberty of stating that the future Bill, which he intended to introduce for the improvement of the procedure in the Court of Chancery, would, in all probability, prevent the necessity of sending to a court of equity such cases as had been previously determined in a court of law. He had prepared a provision in that Bill for the purpose of carrying out that object; for instance, if, in an action of ejectment, it should appear that the estate was an equitable one, and that the common law judge was not inclined to decide upon it, then he proposed to remedy that inconvenience by giving the common law judge power to send a case to the court of equity to ascertain whether it was such an equitable estate as ought to be clothed with a legal estate. That would cost nothing, and the whole matter would be transacted very expeditiously.—The Bill was then read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CITY GRAND JURIES.

MONDAY, April 19.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL rose to move for leave to bring in a Bill to render it unnecessary to summon grand juries within the metropolitan district, and for the amendment of the criminal law in other particulars. The subject of this Bill had excited a good deal of public attention; it could not be said to be new, for in the year 1846, when he had the honour of filling the same office which he now held, he suggested, amongst other things, to the then Government, a Bill of precisely similar character. The Bill was brought into Parliament in the year 1846; but, although a committee was appointed, and several witnesses were examined upon it, the committee only reported the evidence, and the Bill dropped. He would not trespass upon the time of the House by stating in detail the precise nature of the measure; but upon the second reading he would go fully into the reasons which induced him to propose this alteration in the law. Leave was then given to bring in the Bill.

INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT PARTNERSHIPS BILL.

WEDNESDAY, April 21.—Mr. SLANEY, in moving the second reading, said this Bill was founded on the recommendation of two successive committees, and the object was to give persons associating together with small sums and common labour the power of obtaining a cheap tribunal. He had communicated with the right hon. gentleman the President of the Board of Trade, and had found that he assented generally to the principle of the Bill on the understanding that there was to be a reference to a select committee.—Mr. HENLEY said he was extremely glad that this subject had been brought under the consideration of the House, as a great number of persons took an interest in it, and appeared to think that they would derive great benefit from the passing of the measure. He sincerely hoped the House would be able to meet the wishes of such parties. It was, however, very important that a measure of that kind should go before a select committee, lest its operation should be to do mischief instead of conferring benefits. He should rejoice if it could be brought within the scope of the Friendly Societies Acts.—The Bill was then read a second time, and referred to a select committee.

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLDS BILL.

The House then went into committee on this Bill. Clauses 1 to 9, inclusive, were agreed to, with some amendments by Mr. MULLINGS, in which Mr. AGLIONBY, the promoter of the Bill, expressed his entire acquiescence. On clause 10, which provided that questions of law or fact might be referred to the commissioners, whose decision should be final, Mr. WALPOLE suggested that there should be a power of appeal.—Mr. AGLIONBY said he entertained very strong objections to that course, on account of the expense and delay which it was calculated to occasion; so much so, that for his own part he would rather have an unjust decision than the power of appeal with the chance of success.—Mr. WALPOLE said that perhaps the hon. gentleman's objections might be obviated by allowing parties the option of having the decision reversed where the commission certified that it was a proper case for appeal—the appeal being made to the Court of C. P.—Mr. AGLIONBY inquired whether the right hon. gentleman would have any objection, before the bringing up of the report, to consider the propriety of limiting the power of appeal to cases where the commissioners of their own free will should think that the opinion of a Superior Court was desirable?—Mr. WALPOLE replied, that he would consider the point. —The clause was thereupon agreed to. The remaining clauses were agreed to, with some alterations; and, the Bill having been reported to the House, was ordered to be read a third time on Tuesday.

STATE OF BUSINESS IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

(From the Spectator.)

FROM the commencement of the session to Tuesday, the 6th April, when the Commons rose for the Easter recess, the period has been pretty equally divided between the Russell and Derby administrations. More accurately expressed, the Russell Government enjoyed two and a half weeks of office, their successors have had three and a half weeks: add three weeks of interregnum and preparation, and the entire period of nine weeks is accounted for. At their accession to office, the Derby Government found twenty-two bills on the tables of both Houses, the work of their predecessors. Four of these—the three Reform Bills and the Burgh Harbours (Scotland) Bill—were withdrawn by their authors. Of the eighteen which remain, sixteen have been adopted with more or less heartiness by the new Government. The remaining two—the bill to abolish Tests in the Scottish Universities, and another to facilitate the Drainage and Embankment of Lands —lie neglected. Of Bills of their own, the Derby ministry have brought in nineteen, and two more have been ordered. Of these nineteen, the most important is the Militia Bill, which awaits its second reading. The Bill for regulating the Repayment of Advances to Ireland will prove fertile in discussion; and so will the Bill to facilitate the Apprehension of Deserters from Foreign Ships.

Taking the aggregate of the Bills moving onwards under ministerial auspices, the stages reached are as follows:—

Waiting the Royal Assent(a)..........	4
Read a first time in the Lords (all of them have passed the Commons)(b)..	3
Read a second time in the Lords (including 3 which have passed the Commons)(c).........................	5
Read a first time in the Commons (including 1 which has passed the Lords) (d)	5
Read a second time in the Commons (including 1 which has passed the Lords) (e)	18

A considerable number of those Bills which have been read a second time have made some advance towards the third reading. Twenty-five Bills are promoted by private members.

At the reassembling on Monday, the programme will stand in this way. The Miscellaneous Estimates have to be voted. The thirty-five Bills noted above have to be disposed of. The Committee on East-India Affairs has to be moved; Sir John Pakington has to bring in his measure for conferring representative institutions upon New Zealand; Mr. Napier's Tenant-right Bill for Ireland is looked for; Mr. Disraeli has to make his financial statement, and to tell, among other things, what he means to do about the renewal of the Income-tax. All this is independent of those measures which the new Administration are to put forth in conjunction with "Protection," as their passport to electoral favour, and which must be produced in a practical and mature shape, so as to allow their merits to be pronounced upon. All this (if actually undertaken) involves the absorption of much time. Up to Easter, the usual allowance of two evenings was allotted to Government business: Lord John Russell has suggested the addition of Thursday; but Mr. Disraeli,

(a) Indemnity; Protection of Inventions; Commons Enclosure; Personal Estates of Intestates.

(b) St. Alban's Disfranchisement; Copyright Amendment; Common Law Fees Regulation.

(c) Bishopric of Quebec; Patent Law Amendment (No. 2); Mutiny; Marine Mutiny; Common Law Procedure Amendment.

(d) Militia; Poor-Law Board Continuance; Kennington Common Improvement; Turnpike-roads (Ireland); Secretary of Bankrupts' Office Abolition.

(e) Law of Wills Amendment; Repayment of Advances Acts Amendment (Ireland); Apprehension of Deserters from Foreign Ships; Differential Dues; Linen, &c. Manufactures (Ireland); Sheep, &c. Contagious Disorders Prevention; Exchequer Bills; Poor Relief Act Continuance; Commons Enclosure Acts Extension; Suitors in Chancery Relief; Metropolis Water Supply; Improvement of Towns (Ireland); Passengers Act Amendment; Corrupt Practices at Elections; General Board of Health; Law of Evidence (Scotland); Charitable Trusts; Burghs (Scotland).

not being in a hurry to close the session, has not yet signified acceptance.

THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—It appears, from a return ... Lord that in the course of last year the London commissioners sat at an average number of days, 120. The hours on an average were five. The average number of sittings 735, and the average number of adjudications 95. In the county districts the commissioners sat 163 days on an average; four hours was the average sitting. The average number of sittings was 522, and the average number of adjudications 40. It is, therefore, proposed by Lord Brougham, in his new Bill now in the House of Lords, to reduce the number of commissioners, both in London and the country.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS (CRIMINAL JURISDICTION).—There is a Bill in the House of Commons to abolish the criminal jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in certain cases. The Acts of 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 4, and other statutes against quarrelling and fighting in churches and churchyards, as recommended by the ecclesiastical commissioners, are to be repealed. Further, it is proposed to enact that after the "passing of the measure no suit or proceeding shall be commenced or heard in any ecclesiastical court in England or Wales for defamation, or for quarrelling, chiding, or brawling by words only in any church or churchyard, or for smiting or laying violent hands upon any other in any church or churchyard, or for maliciously striking any person with any weapon, or for drawing any weapon with intent to strike another in any church or churchyard."

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL has brought in a Bill to abolish Grand Juries in London and Middlesex. Why are they not abolished everywhere? The assigned reason for the distinction is, that the first examination of persons charged with crimes is taken in the metropolis by Magistrates who are Lawyers; that they exercise due caution in committing; and that it is a practical absurdity to call upon a Grand Jury of laymen to review the decision of the skilled Judge at the police office. But this argument is a two-edged sword: it is good for the abolition of an unskilled Magistracy as for that of an unskilled Grand Jury. Now we should be very sorry to see the unpaid Magistracy superseded by paid Police Justices. With all their defects, which are undeniable, they do substantial justice: it is no small advantage that our gentry should thus be induced to take part in the business of the country, and to acquaint themselves with the feelings and manners of the people, as by no other means could have been so well effected. Besides, it is a great security for liberty. If the entire administration of justice in the country were conducted, as in France, by paid agents of the Government, it would be easy for a despot who had the audacity to seize the reins of power at the central seat, to trample upon the liberties of the whole country. If, therefore, the Justices would exercise a little more caution in committals, we might dispense everywhere with the useless formality of the Grand Jury, and then, we hope, that the Common Juries would be improved by compelling all classes to serve upon them, paying them for the service.

If every gentleman who undertakes the office of a Justice of the Peace would but read twice over, before he takes his seat, Mr. SAUNDERS'S little volume of plain instructions as to his jurisdiction, his duties, and the rules that should guide him in his office, we should not hear so many complaints of what has been termed "Justices' Justice," nor would propositions for their abolition find such favour with the public.

One case is reported from the circuits. In Reg. v. Dilmore, 19 Law T. 50, it was queried by WIGHTMAN, J. whether, under the statute permitting the depositions of persons dead to be put in evidence (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17), the deposition taken on a charge of stabbing could be read upon a trial of murder or manslaughter of the deceased.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—My attention has been called to a report of the trial of James Bartlett at the late assizes at Taunton, which appeared in The Sherborne Journal, of the 8th instant, and to your comments upon the case in the last number of the LAW TIMES.

In the former, Mr. Butt (who presided in the third court) is reported to have stopped the case, and to have expressed his regret that so utterly groundless a charge had been sent for trial, adding that it was one of the most frivolous cases he had ever seen presented to a court, and that he could only feel surprised that gentlemen, in the position of magistrates, should commit upon such facts, well knowing, as they must, that the mere fact of a man being sent for trial, however innocent he might be, was calculated to prejudice his character. How the case was presented to the court I am unable to state, but the following are the real facts.

During the night of Thursday, the 9th of March, a spade of the prosecutor was stolen from a drain in a field where he had been at work on the previous day. On the Saturday following, about nine o'clock a.m., the witness for the prosecution saw the prisoner go to the bank of a river, about 200 or 300 yards from the drain, take something from there, and go off with it.

The witness's suspicions being aroused, he hastened to the top of the adjoining field, in order to give the prisoner a meeting, but having failed in his object, he afterwards continued his pursuit, and found the prisoner, after an interval of three-quarters of an hour, at work in a field about half a mile distant, when the prisoner, being aware that he had been watched by the witness, and apparently anticipating a charge of having committed a felony, hastily and artfully addressed him, when at a distance of some yards, and said: "I found a spade down by the river yesterday morning, and I have been and fetched it this morning, and if any one own it, they are welcome to it, for it is'nt mine." The witness then requested to see the spade, when the prisoner conducted him to a spot in the direction of the river, where they found it secreted in a bramble bush in the bottom of a ditch, at a considerable distance from the spot where the prosecutor had left it, but very near the place of meeting; plainly, therefore, leading to the inference that it was deposited there with a view, not to convenience, but to secrecy.

Now the committing magistrate (whose judgment and discretion by the bye have never before been questioned) very naturally, and I think necessarily, concluded, from the apparently artful and suspicious course pursued by the prisoner, that the charge was neither "groundless" nor "frivolous," but that, on the contrary, there was strong evidence of his guilt. In this opinion the grand jury concurred, and consequently any reflections cast upon the magistrate fell with equal force on them; and if the case had been permitted to go to the petit jury, they might very possibly have come to the same conclusion. The excuse of having found the stolen property is one resorted to by almost every person in whose possession it is discovered.

I have not obtained the sanction of the committing magistrate to the insertion of these remarks. It is possible he might think it right to treat the imputation in a more dignified way, but acting on my own responsibility, as the magistrate's clerk on the occasion in question, I rely on your impartiality to give them a place in your next number; and, regretting that I could not compress my statement into a smaller compass,

I remain sir, yours, &c.,

JOHN SLADE.

Yeovil, 16th April, 1852.

Query.

CHURCH RATES.

WOULD any of your numerous readers kindly inform me whether glebe lands are liable to pay church-rates? A SUBSCRIBER.

14th April, 1852.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT.—The guardians and other officers of the East, West, and City of London Unions have recently presented memorials to the Home Secretary and to the Poor-Law Board, complaining of the unjust, partial, and oppressive effect of the existing law of settlement and the rating for the relief of the poor, and praying for the introduction of a measure into Parliament of a more equitable distribution of these burdens. The President of the Poor-Law Board has replied to these memorials, and states in his answer that "The subject has been for some time under the consideration of this Board, and opinions have been obtained with reference to the general question of settlement and removal of the poor, from the inspectors under its directions, but it is so comprehensive, and requires so much consideration, that no steps can be taken at present to bring it under the consideration of Parliament."

ABOLITION OF GRAND JURIES.—On Wednesday, Sir F. Thesiger's Bill to abolish the grand jury system, and also indictments within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, and within the Metropolitan Police District, was printed. In lieu of indictments informations are to be filed and the charges to be tried. A day is to be named when the alterations are to commence.

COUNTY ELECTIONS.—On Saturday a return to Parliament was printed, shewing the polling at contested county elections since 1844, in which year the custody of the poll-books was given to the clerk of the Crown. The last contested county election stated in the document was on the 24th of February last at Bedford, when 2,120 polled—1,717 on the first day, and 403 on the second. Mr. Alcock, M.P. who moved for the return, required the numbers polled to given from 1840 in each day, but the order could not be complied with, as the clerk of the Crown had not the custody of the books before 1844.

AMENDMENT OF THE CRIMINAL LAW.—On Wednesday, a Bill, now in the House of Commons, was printed, prepared by the Attorney-General, by which it is proposed to "amend" the criminal law, by empowering magistrates within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court and the Metropolitan Police District, to imprison persons for a period not exceeding six months, for uttering counterfeit coin, or he may send the case to the sessions. In larcenies and misdemeanours, where the offence is confessed and summary punishment is desired, magistrates may imprison with or without hard labour for a period not exceeding twelve months.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

THERE has been a pause in the stream of joint-stock companies' cases, which a few months since occupied the larger portion of our columns of reports. Last week presented one only. In Stuart v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 43, the company had agreed with a landowner to buy so much of his land as should be required for the railway, at a fixed price per acre, in consideration of his not opposing their Bill, and the price as to one lot was to include consequent damages. The Bill passed, but the line was not made, and the company refused to perform the contract, contending that it was only conditional on the line being made. On a claim for specific performance, it was held, that the case was a proper one to be brought forward on a claim. The main question of the company's liability was not decided, but the reader will remember that, upon this question, there have been of late some decisions that appear considerably to modify the injustice of the law, as formerly understood.

WINDING UP.

THE LORDS JUSTICES have reversed the decision of Vice-Chancellor PARKER, in Ex parte Manwaring, 19 Law T. Rep. 42. The facts were, that on September 30, A.'s name was inserted in the list of provisional committee. The secretary informed him that, as such, he was entitled to 100 shares or a less number, on his signifying what number he would take. He wrote requesting 100 shares to be reserved for him. Afterwards, the secretary requested payment of the deposit on the 100 shares allotted. In reply, A. required information as to the deposits already paid, and stated that he would not hesitate to pay on being satisfied on the points inquired after. This was now held not to be an unconditional acceptance, and that A. was not a contributory. It seems, therefore, that to constitute liability, there must be an absolute and unqualified acceptance of shares.

CAMERON'S COALBROOK AND LOUGHOR RAILWAY.—Tuesday the claim of 4,000*l.* on behalf of the Law Life Assurance Company was brought in and discussed.

CAMBORNE CONSOLS MINING COMPANY.—Friday a meeting in this matter was held before Master in Chancery Richards, when candidates were proposed to fill the office of official manager. The Master postponed his decision as to the appointment.

CAMBORNE CONSOLS MINING COMPANY.—On Wednesday a numerous meeting in this matter was held before Master Richards, to appoint an official manager to settle and wind up its affairs and liabilities, which amount to about 7,000*l.* Mr. Bagshawe proposed Mr. Harding, Mr. Roxburgh, Mr. Turquand; Mr. Torr proposed Mr. Quilter; and Mr. H. Harris proposed Mr. Wryghte. Major Tyndal and Captain Harriott, two of the directors, were examined, and deposed that being unable to carry on the company's concerns, they had presented the petition to wind it up. After considerable discussion, the Master appointed Mr. Wryghte official manager, with Mr. Harris as his solicitor.

UNIVERSAL GAS LIGHT COMPANY.—A call of 10*l.* 10*s.* is required, to pay off the liabilities of this abortive company.

MONMOUTHSHIRE AND GLAMORGANSHIRE BANKING COMPANY.—The official managers appointed to wind up the affairs of this ill-fated company have issued a circular to the proprietors, calling for a payment of 60*l.* per share. It is expected by many that the whole of this amount will not be required, and that there will be some return ultimately made.

IMPERIAL SALT AND ALCALI COMPANY.—On Friday, the claim of Captain S. T. Jones, amounting to 2,000*l.* in respect of a patent alleged to have been sold by him to the company, was further considered by Master Tinney, who named a day on which he would disallow the demand, if Captain Jones did not produce further evidence.

MONMOUTH AND GLAMORGAN BANKING COMPANY.—At a meeting in this matter, on Saturday before Master Farrer, the managing accountant, Mr. M'Creeth, set forth that a call of 60*l.* per share would be necessary towards defraying liabilities, and the Master directed a meeting to be called for the 27th inst. to discuss it and determine on it.

BOSTON, NEWARK, AND SHEFFIELD RAILWAY. On Saturday, before Master Richards, Mr. Goderich, Solicitor, was examined on the affairs of this company, in respect of which the directors received a sum of 168,000*l.* from the shareholders in the shape of deposits, and for the application of which, the scheme not having been carried out, it is now sought to call on them to account.

PETITIONS, ORDERS, MEETINGS, APPOINTMENTS, CALLS, &c.

Camborne Consols Mining Company.—Appointment of Mr. W. C. Wryghte, of 4, Sambrook-court, Basinghall-street, to be official manager. (April 21.)—Richards.

Cameron's Coalbrook Steam Coal and Loughor Railway Company.—To settle list of contributories, on 10th May.—Richards.

Hull Glass Company.—To settle list of contributories on 25th and 26th May.—Farrer.

Monmouthshire and Glamorganshire Banking Company.—Call on contributories of 60*l.* per share on 27th April.—Farrer.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

A WIFE is entitled to a settlement out of her absolute equitable choses in action, whether against her husband or against his assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency, or against a particular assignee for valuable consideration. As respects the husband, the wife's claim to a settlement is considered a clear equity, and as respects those claiming under him, the rule applies that the assignee must take, subject to the equities of his assignor. Where a wife had joined her husband in assigning her reversionary interest in stock, and the assignee obtained a stop order, and the husband became insolvent, she was held to be entitled to have the whole fund settled on herself and children. (Scott v. Spashett, 19 Law T. Rep. 37.)

It is long since we have seen a new case on the old law of hotchpot. Last week's reports supplied one. A. devised his residuary estate, to be divided among his six children, and proceeded thus:—"And I direct that, in order to equalize my said residuary estate amongst my said six children, in case it shall appear by my private ledger that any or either of them my said children, &c. are indebted to me at my decease in any sum of money, such debt shall be considered as forming part of my residuary estate, and the shares of my said children shall respectively become liable to pay such debt." One of his sons owed him a large debt, but part of it was barred by the Statute of Limitations; it was, however, held, that the whole must be paid out of his share, and that it was a hotchpot clause. (Rose v. Gould, 19 Law T. Rep. 42.)

Another case on the construction of a will is reported from the Court of Error. In Challis v. Evers, 19 Law T. Rep. 47, C. devised real estates to his daughter B. for life, and after her death, to such of her children, if males, who should attain twenty-three; if females, who should live to the age of twenty-one, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common; and in case all the children of B. should die under those ages, or if she had none, then to his son J. and his daughters S. and A. for their lives, and on their decease, the share of such of them so dying unto his or their children, if males, living to twenty-three, or daughters living to twenty-one, in fee. And in case of the death of J. or S. or A. without leaving a child who should, if a male, attain twenty-three, or if a female, attain twenty-one, then he gave the parts such children would have been entitled to, to the child or children of J., S. and A. having issue, if sons, living to the age of twenty-three; if daughters, to the age of twenty-one. B. died, having had no child, and afterwards A. died, never having had a child. S. and J. had several children who attained the prescribed ages. The devise over to the children of J. and S. after the death of A. was void for remoteness. It would have been valid if it had been a devise over in the single event of A. having no child at all; but as it also included the event of A having a child and the child dying under the prescribed age, it was void altogether.

A case under the Wills Act is reported from the Oxford Circuit. In Doe dem. Caldwell v. Lee, 19 Law T. Rep. 49, it appeared that the testator having requested B. to write his (testator's) name as his signature to his will, being unable through illness to do so, which B. did, and he and two others signed their names as attesting the execution, and B. subsequently affixed and signed the following—"Memorandum, I, B. signed the testator's name at his request." It was held by WIGHTMAN, J. to be duly executed.

In the Prerogative Court, in the case of Brenchley v. Lynn, 19 Law T. Rep. 50, a married woman made a will under powers contained in her mother's will and her marriage settlement, and covenanted not to revoke or alter such will. Afterwards she made several wills, and finally executed a codicil by which she revoked all former wills, and declared her intention to die intestate, and that her property should go to her next of kin according to the statute. This codicil was held to be a testamentary instrument, and entitled to probate.

COPYHOLD ENFRANCHISEMENT BILL.

OBSERVATIONS.

THE 1st section of the Bill provides that enfranchisements shall not take place until after the next admittance subsequently to the 1st July, 1853. This provision will operate unjustly upon copyhold tenants, as it will secure to the lords of manors where the fines, as in most cases, are arbitrary, a fine of two years' value previously to enfranchisement, and will also defer enfranchisements to a very lengthened period where the tenants are young and retain their estates.

It would be a fair principle of commutation to fix a standard value for the lord's interest, subject to increase or diminution, according to the age of the tenant. Supposing five years' net annual value to form the difference in value between freehold and copyhold estates, the standard of value might be fixed accordingly, and the variations regulated by percentage allowances calculated for periods of five or ten years each, and stated in a schedule to the Bill. The age of thirty-five would probably be deemed a fair pivot-point. The leading principles and terms of commutation would thus be at once settled by the Bill, and the annual value being adjusted by the rents, the troublesome and costly machinery of valuations would in nine cases out of ten be rendered unnecessary. The enfranchisements would then be proceeded with on the passing of the Bill. All special cases should be reserved for the consideration and decision of the commissioners.

The 8th section provides that the enfranchisement compensation shall be a first charge on the lands enfranchised.

The 13th section provides that the first charge shall have priority over all mortgages, charges, and incumbrances (tithe rent-charge excepted). The 21st section enables the lord to take possession of the lands enfranchised in default of payment of the enfranchisement money; and the following section authorises them to grant leases for seven years. The interests of mortgagees will be very materially prejudiced by these provisions. At present the lord of a manor can only recover his fine from the tenant by a suit at law. He has no charge on the land; but if these provisions remain in the Bill, the powers of the mortgagees to enforce their securities will be much weakened, and in a variety of instances, especially in cases of second mortgages and incumbrances, their interests may be entirely sacrificed. Copyhold estates will become much depressed in value and difficult of sale, and ineligible for mortgage securities.

The 20th section provides that the valuers shall take into account facilities for improvement. Under this provision of the Bill—that of giving to the tenant the benefit of future improvements—will be defeated. Besides which, the provision seems too indefinite and speculative. A valuer may imagine that the property is eligibly situate for building purposes; but the tenant may not contemplate dealing with it in that way, and may be decidedly averse to it. The lord in that case derive a profit from the estate not produced by it.

The 10th section should subject the decision of the copyhold commissioners to an appeal to a Court of law, in the manner provided by the Tithe Acts. Very important questions on the customs of manors affecting the relative interests of lords and tenants will constantly arise, and which ought not to be finally dealt with, except by the higher legal tribunals.

The 23rd section provides that in cases where the amount of the steward's compensation shall not be directed by the commissioners, the stewards shall be entitled to such a sum as will amount to one set of fees on surrender and admittance for each of the tenements included in such enfranchisement. A set of fees it is considered will average 5*l.* or 6*l.*

Now, in many manors, especially those which extend into parishes inclosed under modern Acts of Parliament, the subdivision of properties is very minute, comprising very frequently portions, even to a third and a fourth, of a rood of land, and which are regarded as distinct tenements, and so dealt with by the stewards.

It is by no means an uncommon occurrence for a person to be owner of from 50 to 100 tenements, and unless, therefore, the steward's claims should happen to be restrained by the commissioners, the commutation of fees will, in large manors, amount to enormous sums. And it is feared the commissioners might consider the steward's compensations settled on the basis of one set of fees for each tenement.

The 6th section should be extended so as to give the copyhold tenants a full right to investigate, free of cost as to the inspection of the court books, the customs of the manors and the titles to the lands to be enfranchised on all occasions when they may require to exercise it.

THE NEW WILLS ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I have ventured with all deference to suggest the enclosed form, in lieu of your extract from the proposed alteration of the Wills Act. I would also ask,—would it not be desirable that "cancellation" should be made one of the means of revocation? As the Act now stands (sec. 20), "burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying" are the only modes of revoking a will. A will was struck through transversely, and "cancelled" written on it by the testator, still it was held to be unrevoked. This occurred very recently.

Again, the latter part of the 21st section of the present Act, which treats of alteration, enacts, "That a will, with the alterations it contains as a part thereof, shall be deemed to be duly executed if the signature of the testator, and the subscription of the witnesses be made in the margin," &c. Now, those words are open to the construction that a will, provided it contains alterations, may be executed in a different manner from that required by the 9th section,—e. g. by the 21st section it is not necessary that the testator and the attesting witnesses should each and all sign in the joint presence of each other, whereas the 9th section strictly enjoins their so doing. Might it not be of advantage to call the attention of those who have charge of the Bill in the Commons to these statements?

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

ONE ACQUAINTED WITH THE OPERATION OF THE PRESENT WILLS ACT.

"Whereas by an Act passed in the seventh year of the reign of his late Majesty Wm. 4 and the 1st year of the reign of her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled 'An Act for the Amendment of the Law with respect to Wills,' it was among other things declared, 'that no will shall be valid unless it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator, or by some other person in his presence and by his direction;' and whereas doubts have arisen as to the meaning and intention of the words 'signed at the foot or end:' Be it therefore enacted, that every will shall be deemed to have been signed at the foot or end thereof, provided the signature of the testator shall be placed either immediately after the concluding words of such will, or in the margin of such will by the side of such words, or in either the testimonium or attestation clause, or by the side, or at the end of either of them, or above or below or by the side of, or between the names of the attesting witnesses to such will, or on any other part of the paper or other material on which such will shall be written, notwithstanding any blank space may intervene between the concluding words of such will, or the testimonium and attestation clause, or either of them, and the signature of the testator, and notwithstanding no part of the will, or of the testimonium or attestation clause be written on the same page or part of the paper or other material on which the will shall be written, as that on which such signature shall be placed; provided always, nevertheless, that no will or codicil, or any part thereof, or either of them, shall be valid, unless such will or codicil, or such part thereof, shall have been written and concluded before the signature of the testator, together with that of the attesting witnesses, shall be placed thereto. And be it further enacted, that every will, apparently on the face of it signed within the provisions above named, shall be deemed to have been duly executed, unless it be proved by evidence upon the will, that such provisions have not been complied with; and that the onus of such proof shall lie on those who deny the due execution of such will."

Query.

LAW OF STAMPS.

In Mr. Hughes's work on the New Stamp Act, p. 78, under the head "Lease," he says, "The deed stamp is only applicable to assignments or surrenders where no consideration, or only a nominal one, is expressed."

Yet I find at p. 82, being part of the schedule of the Act, under the same head :—

"Lease.—Any assignment or surrender of a lease upon any other occasion than a sale or mortgage, duty equal to the ad valorem duty with which a similar lease would be chargeable under this Act; but in no case exceeding 35s."

I, therefore, apprehend that voluntary assignments of leases will only require the duty applicable to such leases under this Act. But I should be glad to be informed whether the same rule would apply to a voluntary conveyance of a freehold lease, it being remembered that at page 82 we only find the words "assignment" and "surrender," while an interest in leaseholds for lives is conveyed by re lease and not assignment.

The assistance of your readers on both points will oblige L. E. T.

PRACTICE.—COPYHOLDS.

Is it the practice for the assignees of a bankrupt or insolvent to be admitted to copyholds, and in case of non-admittance, is a double fine payable by the purchaser? It would seem not. J. L. S.

PREPARING LEASES.

That the lessor's solicitor has "the right" to prepare the leases appears clear from the case of Grissell v. Robinson, 1 Bing. N. C. 10 S. C.; 5 L. J. Reports, N. S. 313, C. P.

In a case noticed in the first volume of the Legal Observer for 1844, p. 308, the lessor's solicitor was only allowed on taxation, "such items as a lessee was liable to pay," and not such "as would be lessor's costs." I should be glad of an explanation what is meant by these last. R. G. S.

PREPARING LEASES.

It is "the custom" for the lessor's attorney to prepare the lease at the expense of the lessee; but I do not see how the lessor's attorney can claim it as "a right." I take it that the only way of enforcing the custom is by the lessor refusing to grant the lease unless it is prepared by his attorney. All the cases are cited in 2 Platt on Leases, p. 539.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

The Lord Chancellor has announced that he must reluctantly stay the progress of the County Courts Extension Bill, or at least of so much of it as relates to an equity jurisdiction, until his own measure of Chancery reform becomes law, as he is not sure whether the provisions of the two Bills might not conflict. This is not an unreasonable suggestion under present circumstances, and therefore so much of the Extension Bill in the Commons as relates to an equity jurisdiction must be deferred for the present. But it does not follow that the whole Bill should be withdrawn. It contains many provisions of great worth for the amendment of the practice of the County Courts, which have no connection whatever with that portion of the Bill sought to be deferred by the Lord Chancellor, and we hope that Mr. Fitzroy will not consent to the abandonment of the whole, because it is deemed desirable to expunge a part. The defects in the practical working of the County Courts which those provisions were framed to cure, are very serious impediments to justice, and their removal would be a great boon to the suitors, and to the Profession, and we therefore trust that Mr. Fitzroy will proceed with the bill, merely omitting the equity clauses, so that it may become law during the present session. In truth, the amendment of procedure clauses are practically of vastly more value than those which contemplate extension. An original equity jurisdiction would be an invaluable boon. But that is not contemplated by the Bill now before Parliament; it only gives to the judges the powers of the Masters' offices in such matters as the Courts above might remit to them. It was not expected that much use would be made of them, and their loss will not be regretted. But all would lament the postponement of the clauses that proposed to cure defects in the practice of the County Courts, the evils of which are daily experienced by all who appear there, whether as suitors or as lawyers.

A single case only is to be noted in Macrae's Practice of Insolvency. In Re Bingham, 19 Law T. Rep. 48, it was held that a petitioner who had lost his protection for not appearing at an adjourned examination, and being thereupon taken into custody by his creditors, must apply for discharge under the 28th, and not under the 6th, section of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96.

Retiring Pensions to County Court Judges —The following new provision appears in the amended County Courts Further Extension Bill, which has just been printed. The Bill has passed the Lords, and the provision was added in committee by the Commons:—"That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order or orders to be made by him from time to time, on a petition presented to him for that purpose, to order that there shall be paid quarterly out of the Consolidated Fund of Great Britain and Ireland to such of the judges of the County Courts as shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity, disabling him from the due execution of his office, and who shall be desirous of resigning the same, an annuity or clear yearly sum of money for the term of his life, not exceeding two-thirds of the yearly salary which such judge shall be entitled to as a judge of a County Court at the time of presenting his petition."

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

Equity Practice.—In the case of Re Cumming, 19 Law T. Rep. 38, which has been reported at unusual length in consequence of its interest and importance, Lord St. Leonards has held that an inquisition in lunacy is traversable as a matter of right. His lordship personally examined the alleged lunatic, and obtained from her own lips the expression of her wish for a rehearing. The Lords Justices fully assented to the judgment.

In Naylor v. Robson, 19 Law T. Rep. 42, a supplemental claim was allowed to be filed for the purpose of correcting errors committed in carrying out the proceedings under an original claim; and in Cooper v. Knox, 19 Law T. Rep. 42, it was held that an application to discharge an order of course, obtained at the Rolls, ought to be made to the Court to which the cause is attached.

Two cases as to Costs are reported from Vice-Chancellor Parker's Court. It suffices to note them, without repeating them here; they will be found at p. 44; and the same remark applies to Ex parte Wise, 19 Law T. Rep. 44, which is a point of practice under the Trustee Act.

Common Law.—A point in Evidence is reported from the Circuits. It was a plea of non tenuit to an avowry for rent by the representatives of the heir-at-law of the lessor. The plaintiff set up the lessor's will, executed previously to the Wills Act, to defeat the heir's title. The defendants were permitted in reply to give evidence of the ancestor's purchase-deed, executed subsequently to the date of the will. (Brown v. Ward, 19 Law T. Rep. 49.)

REMOVAL OF THE COURTS FROM WESTMINSTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—The recent petition of the Incorporated Law Society for the removal of all the Courts from Westminister to their natural locality of the inns of court has again drawn the public attention to this subject. That petition contains abundant and most forcible reasons for the change, but there is one omitted which I think will be of great weight with all law reformers. The fusion of law and equity, or, in other words, the administration of justice by one harmonious system, is daily gaining supporters; and the union of all the courts under one roof would most materially forward this desirable object. Each branch of the bar would then know more of the other, and would learn by actual experience the respective merits and defects of both systems. If, as is certain, the Common Law Courts will possess the power of granting injunctions, and of ordering specific performance, and on the other hand the Courts of Equity will avail themselves of vivâ voce examination of witnesses, the mere fact that all the Bar were close at hand would insure to litigants the attendance of counsel fully qualified for all their duties. Each would learn of the other, and each would be competing with the other, and the Profession no less than the public would be the gainers. Now, the mere distance often compels the suitor to forego the advantage of the counsel best qualified for his particular cause. The public may rely upon it the separation of the systems would not long survive the opening of the new palace of justice.

Trusting you may consider this hint worthy of insertion in your columns,

I remain, Sir, yours, &c.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

A curious question on the application of the Statute of Limitations to Bills of Exchange was decided in Webster v. Kirk, 19 Law T. Rep. 46. An action was brought by the payee against the acceptor of three bills of exchange, to which the Statute of Limitations was pleaded. The facts were, that a brother of the drawer had been indebted to a banking company, to the plaintiff, and to the defendant; the bills had been drawn, in pursuance of an arrangement, by defendant on his brother, payable to the plaintiff, and then handed to the banking company. They fell due on 4th May, 1843; the company brought an action on them against the plaintiff in 1847, and signed judgment in December 1850. Early in 1851 plaintiff settled that action, and afterwards, in April 1851, the present action was commenced. It was held to be barred by the statute.

In Bankruptcy, a point is reported from the Appeal Court. It was held by the Lords Justices, that the Attorney of a creditor who has proved cannot, as a matter of right, demand under the 232nd section of the Act, to inspect the documents on which the adjudication is founded, for the purpose of impeaching its validity, "a discretion must be exercised as to the reasonableness of the application."

Scottish and Amicable Life Assurance Society.—London Offices, 43, Lombard-street.—At the Annual Meeting there was reported as new business in 1851,—policies, 1,079; income therefrom, 16,345*l.*; net increase after deducting all claims, surrenders, &c. policies, 882; net increase of income, 13,103*l.* The above is exclusive of all single premiums for annuities, &c. The present bonus is two per cent. per annum. Applications for agencies in town and country to be made to the resident Secretary in London.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Limerick Chronicle says that Judge Perrin fined the sheriff of Dundalk 50*l.* for not having a dinner ready for him at the opening of the assizes.

Mr. Alfred Hill, managing clerk to the principal legal firm at Bridgewater, has absconded with 3,000*l.* in cash, the moneys of his employer.

INDISPOSITION OF THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—We are sorry to learn that the Lord Chancellor, who had been slightly unwell for some few days past, was seized in the course of last night with severe muscular pains in the back, and that he still continues suffering on the exertion of moving. Sir Benjamin Brodie and Dr. Owen Evans are in attendance on his lordship, and we trust he will soon be able to resume his judicial functions.—Standard.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MAY 1, 1852.

TO READERS.

The great length of the report of the case of Miller v. Salomons, whose importance would not allow of its omission, and the first judgment of the new Lord Chancellor upon the Law of Winding-up, which will be read with the greatest interest by the whole Profession, have compelled us to devote a larger space than usual to the reports, and to omit much general intelligence.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

From the following conversation which passed in the House of Commons on Monday, it would appear that the Benchers of the Inns of Court have not abandoned their scheme for the improvement of Legal Education, as it had been reported of them; but that, on the contrary, they are about to carry it into immediate operation. The proceedings are thus reported:—

Mr. Ewart asked the Attorney-General whether any further proceedings have been taken on the part of the Inns of Court, in promotion of the question of legal education?

The Attorney-General stated, in answer to the hon. member's question, that the Benchers had, for a very considerable time past, devoted much attention to the subject of legal education, and they had ultimately unanimously agreed upon a plan which they believed would be of great public benefit. Professorships or readerships were to be established by different societies, and very liberally endowed, and lectures were to be given and classes formed for the purposes of instruction. Before a student was called to the Bar he should have a certificate, showing that he had attended the lectures, or that he had satisfactorily passed through a public examination; and for the purpose of encouraging the students to submit to the examination, marks of distinction would be held out to the most deserving and the most proficient.

So far the answer is satisfactory; but from the brief statement of the Attorney-General, the scheme resolved upon would appear to be substantially the same as that contained in the report of the Committee of the Benchers, which we have already laid before our readers. The objection to it is, that it does not go far enough; it halts in the good work just half way. It proposes for education nothing but lectures, and for admission to the Bar an examination, but only a voluntary one—still leaving it open to be resorted to by any person who can raise 100*l.* and eat sixty dinners—without other test of fitness. Still the Bar will continue to be the refuge for the destitute—the resort of those who join it, not as Lawyers, but as office-seekers—the nominal profession of men who have no pursuit. This it is that has so much degraded the Bar in public estimation, and lowered it in fact; this it is that deprives the real Barrister—the man whose actual calling it is, and who seeks to live by it,—from thriving as he should do, because the men who are Barristers in name only deprive him of some of the lesser business, and steal away by favour of patronage the offices that are the legitimate reward of those who labour at their calling. Until a strict examination shall exclude from the Bar all but those who join it with purpose to make it their Profession, reform in legal education will be only "a delusion, a mockery, and a snare."

Nor will it be perfect until provision is made for the education and more enlarged examination of the Attorney also. The same establishment of teachers, the same institutions, might serve for both branches of the Profession at one expense; both should be members of the same University, and at a certain period of their studies should be required to make choice which branch of the Profession they will pursue, that their education and their examination might thenceforth be conducted accordingly.

We would accept the proposed improvements of the Benchers as an instalment—but as an instalment only—of the reform required.

TREATING AT ELECTIONS.

A Bill is before the House of Commons, permitting a certain limited amount of refreshment to be given to electors voting at county elections.

From practical experience of such elections, we are induced entirely to approve of the proposition. Voters who come from the country to the polling-place must be fed, and they are fed, in fact, at the cost of the candidate. The law is always practically evaded, with this additional mischief, that, thus done, there is no limit to the amount of cost to the candidate, and the practice so evasively conducted may be, and is, extended to other more objectionable purposes. Sensible men know well that if an evil cannot be suppressed the next best course is to put it under regulation. If candidates are permitted to give voters refreshment on the day of election to a fixed amount, it will be done openly, with no advantage to either side, and no inducement to exceed it. Practically, while permitting a certain amount of harmless treating, it will be an effective measure for the suppression of treating that is not harmless.

THE MILITIA BILL.

An immense majority has voted the second reading of this Bill. The question is, indeed, one of extreme difficulty. We have a vivid recollection of the Militia as it was, of the excessive hardship it was then esteemed, and of the great delight with which its suspension was hailed. We were articled to a Clerk to a Deputy Lieutenancy, and thus have witnessed in our youth the practical working of the plan. If the feelings we then saw and heard were to be revived now, we fear that the peace of the country would be endangered.

Without substitutes, a militia would be intolerable, for, with all our liberal notions, Englishmen have a great deal of aristocracy in them. A master would not like to stand in the ranks shoulder to shoulder with his workman, and the workman would as certainly object to stand next to the chimney-sweep. If, on the other hand, substitutes are permitted, it becomes an injustice to the poor who cannot afford thus to buy exemption. A rich man pays his 10*l.* and has his duty to his country done by deputy: a poor man earning, perhaps, his 20s. a week, is obliged to exchange that for 10s.—to put his wife and family on short allowance, and, perhaps, find his place in the factory filled up on the expiration of his service.

But the Bill now before Parliament endeavours to shirk this difficulty by proposing a voluntary enlistment. It seems, however, to be forgotten, that such a force is not a militia, but only an imperfect standing army: it is not self-defence, but defence by a bad and ill-trained army, instead of by a well-trained one. It will be composed of the worst part of the community, who will not be improved by playing soldiers for fourteen days, and to whom we should be somewhat loath to intrust arms—who would certainly be much more dangerous to their fellow countrymen than to an invader.

Look at the question on what side we may it is encompassed with difficulties and objections, and the more they are examined, the more formidable do they appear.

THE CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

The Attorney-General's Bill for abolishing Grand Juries in the Metropolitan District is not limited to that object, but contains some provisions of a general nature. It proposes to enact that after the abolition of the Grand Jury, no charge is to be tried without previous investigation before a justice of the peace. In lieu of an indictment, an information is to be filed by an officer of the Courts, which is not to be removed by certiorari, except upon affidavit that a fair trial cannot be had. Charges returned during a session are not to be tried during the same session, after a time appointed by the Court. A person in custody may be removed on justices' warrant. A person accused of larceny or any misdemeanor may, if he confess the charge and he so desire, be punished on summary conviction; and persons uttering counterfeit coin may, on summary conviction, be punished with six months' imprisonment; but the justices may, if they see fit, commit for trial.

All the above provisions are applicable exclusively to the metropolitan district.

The following is of general application.

Clause 12 provides that any Court of General or Quarter Sessions, upon proof of conviction and of notice to parties, may declare a recognisance to keep the peace or be of good behaviour to be forfeited; thus removing a great practical difficulty, which has hitherto impeded the enforcement of forfeited recognisances.

CHANCERY REFORM.

The second of the series of Chancery Reforms, the Lord Chancellor's Bill for the Abolition of the Office of Masters in Chancery, is now before us. It contains fifty-eight clauses.

The measure opens with an unqualified abolition of the office, the first four Masters in seniority to be released from their duties on the first day of Michaelmas Term next, but a power is reserved to them to wind up and settle proceedings now before them, and the Court to have power, on the Master's certificate or report, to make an order for the prosecution or final disposal of any suit, and for payment of costs.

When parties neglect to bring the Master's report before the Court, the solicitor to the suitor's fee fund is to bring the same.

No fresh references are to be made to the Masters, except in cases already before them, and in matters under the Winding-up Act, or in such cases as the LORD CHANCELLOR shall direct.

Power is then given to the MASTER of the ROLLS and the VICE-CHANCELLORS to sit at Chambers for the despatch of business, where they are to have the same powers and jurisdiction as when sitting in open court; orders made there are to have the same effect as orders of Court.

The Judges are to appoint two chief clerks to each Court to assist in the business of it, who are to have been chief clerks to Masters, or Solicitors or Attorneys of ten years' practice, and who are to appoint junior clerks.

Solicitors or Attorneys appointed to any office under this Act to be struck off the Rolls.

Clause 27 declares what business shall be disposed of in Chambers by Judges.

27. The business to be disposed of by the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively while sitting at chambers shall consist of such of the following matters as the judge shall from time to time think may be more conveniently disposed of in chambers than in open court; videlicet, applications for time to plead, answer, or demur; for leave to amend bills or claims; for enlarging publication; and also applications for the production of documents; applications connected with the preparation of a cause or matter for hearing, or otherwise relating to the conduct of suits or matters; applications as to the guardianship and maintenance of infants; matters connected with the management of property; and such other matters as each such judge may from time to time see fit, or as may from time to time be directed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor.

Power is given to them to adjourn from open court to chambers, or vice versâ, for the consideration of any matter.

The proceedings before judges in chambers are to be by summons, as at Common Law. The judges may direct what matters shall be investigated by themselves and what by their chief clerks, but the suitor is to have power to bring any point before the judge. Proceedings before the chief clerk are to be embodied in the form of a short certificate, from which no exceptions are to lie, but parties are to be allowed to take the opinion of the judge upon any particular point.

The certificate signed and adopted by the judge is to be binding on all parties, unless discharged or varied.

Power is given to the LORD CHANCELLOR, with advice of judges, to make rules and orders for regulating the mode of procedure in chambers.

The judges at chambers are empowered to take the opinion of conveyancing counsel in certain matters; but parties may object to the opinion, and their objection is to be disposed of in chambers or in open Court. The LORD CHANCELLOR may nominate not less than six conveyancing counsel of ten years' practice for this purpose. A further power is also given to obtain the assistance, and act upon the certificate, of accountants, merchants, engineers, actuaries, &c.

The salary of the chief clerk is to be 1,200*l.* and of the junior clerk 250*l.*

The Masters' chief clerks, not appointed chief clerks to any of the judges, to claim compensation.

Many clauses regulate the mode of paying salaries and compensations; and others empower the appointment of a new VICE-CHANCELLOR as successor to Sir G. J. TURNER, almost repeating the Act under which his Honour was appointed.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

A CASE on Turnpike Law was last week reported from the Q. B. An agreement for letting tolls recited the putting them up to auction by the trustees, and the taking of them by the renter; and, in the operative part, stated that A. (the clerk), agreed to let, &c. The agreement was signed by the clerk, and not by the trustees. It was held to be sufficient, and that the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 57, authorising an agreement in writing for letting tolls, without being by deed or under seal, was not affected by sec. 3 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, which avoids all leases required by law to be in writing, unless the same be by deed. (Shepherd v. Norman, 19 Law T. Rep. 61.) A curious query was raised, but not decided, in Tregarn v. Barns, 19 Law T. Rep. 67, whether, when a warrant is directed to a parish constable only, it can be properly handed over to and executed by a county constable?

REWARDS BY THE GOVERNMENT.—From the detailed account of the Civil Contingencies paid last year, the rewards paid by the Government for the apprehension and conviction of offenders, it appears that 378*l.* 6s. 8d. was paid.

CHURCH RATES.

IT appears quite clear that glebe-lands, whether in the occupation of the parson himself, or in the occupation of his tenant, are exempt from paying church-rates to the church of which they form any part of the endowment, the reason for this being that the parson is solely liable for the repair of the chancel. (See Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, vol. 1, p. 349; and see Anderson's Churchwardens.)

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

SOME curious questions have arisen with respect to the liabilities of English directors and shareholders of foreign railways. In Kent v. Jackson, 19 Law T. Rep. 55, English directors of a Belgian Railway, after retiring, returned the deposits to the English allottees, and purchased back for the company some of the allotted shares. They then laid an account of the transaction before the committee of management, to whom the balance due from the English directors was paid. The transaction was afterwards approved by a general meeting. It was held, that the meeting had power to sanction such a transaction, and therefore there was no ground for a suit in this country against the retired English directors.

In Bear v. Bromley, 19 Law T. Rep. 60, the Q.B. has decided that an unenrolled mutual society, having more than twenty-five members, and a fund raised by subscription for advancing to the members sums at five per cent. the sum so advanced being put up for competition to the highest bidder, is not a joint-stock company under the stat. and therefore not requiring registration. Another point in Joint-Stock Companies Law as raised in Clay and Another v. Southen, 19 Law T. Rep. 67. Two members of a company, not registered under the Joint-Stock Companies Act, entered into a contract in their own names for the benefit of the company. It was held that they might sue and be sued in their own names only on such contract.

WINDING UP.

A QUESTION of costs was raised in Ex parte Croxton, 19 Law T. Rep. 57. A trustee of a company, by order of the directors, executed a bond for money lent to the company, and was sued upon it, and compelled to pay it. On the winding-up the trustee brought in his account, and the Master disallowed it. The Court, on appeal, directed an issue, to try the trustee's right to be repaid, and it was decided in his favour. The Court now gave him all the costs and expenses of resisting the claim, and the costs of the motion of appeal from the Master and before the Master.

Ex parte Hill, 19 Law T. 57, was a question of a contributory. He had attended meetings of the provisional committee, of which he was a member. At one, at which he did not attend, the surveyor was appointed; at another meeting, at which he did attend, the report of the surveyor was adopted, and directed to be advertised. The project was afterwards abandoned, and the solicitor was directed to arrange with the surveyor as to his claim, which he did by paying him 1,300*l.* and this sum the solicitor claimed from the company. He was held to be a contributory.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR has confirmed the decision in the very interesting case of Cutts v. Salmon, 19 Law T. Rep. 53, which has been already commented upon here, and every one of our readers should peruse his Lordship's judgment, which so distinctly declares the duties of a solicitor in dealing with the property of his client. "If a solicitor attends a sale, known to be the solicitor, and does not publicly mention the fact that he is buying for himself, and the public is led to believe, as they naturally would without evidence to the contrary, that he is bidding for the estate," the effect is to lower the price, and such a sale cannot be supported. "Is a solicitor to tell me that he is to maintain a sale against his client, when he has put that client in a condition to have his estate sold for anything it may fetch?" In no case, it was said, should a solicitor purchase from his client without the intervention of another solicitor.

In Seymour v. Vernon, 19 Law T. Rep. 58, where premiums had been paid by a receiver to keep up policies of fire assurance out of the rents and profits of the estate, to which A. was subsequently declared to be tenant in tail in possession, on the buildings being burnt down, it was held, that A. was entitled to the sums received from the office.

BOROUGH ENGLISH.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In reading over your paper (the LAW TIMES) of October 1851, I there discover that a gentleman of the name of George R. Corner wishes to know if there are any other places in which the tenure Borough English exists than the places there mentioned. I do not see the name of the parish of "Staverton," in Devonshire. I know this is a parish in which that custom exists from my own experience. Yours, &c.

STAMPS.

IN reply to the question relating to the law of stamps contained in your last number, as to the duties upon voluntary assignments of leases, it appears that where such voluntary assignment is made of a lease for years, such an assignment being neither upon a sale or a mortgage, will require a duty equal to the ad valorem duty with which a similar lease would be chargeable under the Act 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, but which in no case is to exceed 35s. But, as assignments and surrenders only are there mentioned, it seems that a voluntary conveyance of a freehold lease, which passes by a deed of release and not by assignment, will in all cares require a 35s. stamp.

Plymouth, April 24, 1852. WM. HUGHES.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

THE County Courts Extension Bill, as amended by the Committee of the Commons, is now before us. We are pleased to find that our clause for giving costs to Attorneys in the County Courts remains intact, but the other we had framed, for requiring notice of defence to be given, has been struck out. Three clauses have been added; the first provides that, for Equity business in the Bankruptcy Courts, the same fees shall be taken as shall be allowed in the County Courts; the second is the altered clause relating to Practitioners in the Courts, which we extracted and commented upon last week; and the third empowers the LORD CHANCELLOR to order a retiring pension to be paid to the Judges afflicted with permanent infirmity, in amount not exceeding two-thirds of the salary.

A decision of the Q. B. on the County Courts Act was reported last week. In Meredith v. Gittins, 19 Law T. Rep. 59, an application for costs, under sec. 13 of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, had been refused by a Judge at Chambers in June, and an application was not made to the Court till January. It was held to be too late. "These applications," said Lord CAMPBELL, "must be made within a reasonable time, and I think they ought, at all events, to be made in the course of the ensuing Term."

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—In Paul v. Roy, 19 Law T. Rep. 56, a very important question was decided as to the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity to enforce a foreign judgment, and a contract made between foreigners coming to reside here. It was held by the Master of the Rolls that our Courts have such jurisdiction, but then the judgment of the foreign Court must be the final decree of the Court, and not merely an interlocutory order made in course of litigation. It is not necessary to repeat the particular facts out of which the question arose.

In The Attorney-General v. The Ludlow Charities, 19 Law T. Rep. 58, where a suit had abated which from circumstances it was impossible to revive, the Court refused to give any costs.

COMMON LAW.—Term having begun, points of practice again revive in the reports, but they are few compared with former years. In Stebbing v. [illegible] davit on which be insufficient, and the rule was discharged with costs. In Re Connell, 19 Law T. Rep. 63, the Court refused a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the body of an infant, because the affidavit did not shew that she was detained against her will. Steadman v. Chappell, 19 Law T. Rep. 64, was an action by an attorney on his bill. At the trial plaintiff produced a written retainer signed by defendant, and the cause was proceeding as undefended, when defendant suddenly appeared, and swore that it was not his handwriting, and obtained a verdict. The Court granted a new trial on the ground of surprise, but on payment of costs.

At last a full Court has heard and decided the much-disputed question as to the admissibility as a witness of the wife of a party. The Court of Ex. has unanimously held that she is not competent; but the reasons given for the decision do not appear to be very satisfactory. The argument of Mr. Justice ERLE was not answered, and, indeed, their Lordships appear to have been mainly influenced by what they know to have been the intention of the Legislature rather than by what it has actually done. But then in Salomon's case they took the opposite course, and held themselves to be bound by the words, contrary to that which they believed to be the intent. In the same case (Barbat v. Allen, 19 Law T. Rep. 65), after an objection made to the admission of a witness, it was waived, but the Judge refused to hear such witness, even with consent, holding her to be inadmissible; and it was held that he had rightly done so. From this it appears, that a witness incompetent by law cannot be rendered admissible, even by consent.

In Lane v. Hill, 19 Law T. Rep. 60, it was held that a mere acknowledgment that a debt is due, with no amount mentioned, is not evidence of an account stated, so as to entitle the plaintiff even to nominal damages. "A general admission of liability to a pecuniary demand," said Lord CAMPBELL, "without stating any sum, does not amount to an account stated."

Query.

ABOUT two years since a person then, and now, living in Scotland, and not likely to return to England, was outlawed for the amount of a bill of exchange. He is now in a position to pay the money, but refuses. Can he be sued in the Scotch Courts for the debt, interest, and costs of outlawry, or only for the debt and interest? In either case, which is the best way, and who should be instructed to proceed? If he can only be sued for the debt and interest, is there any means (supposing he again returns to England) to enforce the costs of the outlawry from him, after proceeding in the Scotch Courts? J. A.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

A DECISION of some interest is to be noted in Hertslet's Law of Master and Servant. In Floyd v. Weaver, 19 Law T. Rep. 58, which came before the Court in the form of a County Court appeal, it was held that a man employed and working as a collier in a coal mine, dismissible at a month's notice, and paid according to the quantity of coal raised, but not bound to hours, and employing other men under him, is nevertheless an "artificer or workman," within the meaning of the Truck Act.

Neve v. Hollands and Wife, 19 Law T. Rep. 59, was an action against husband and wife jointly, upon the wife's promissory note, dum sola, to which the Statute of Limitations was pleaded. It was proved that the wife had paid interest upon it within the six years, but without the knowledge of her husband, and it was held that such payment did not take it out of the statute. "Payment by the maker of a note," said ERLE, J. "is equivalent to an express promise to pay; but, supposing that the female defendant had expressly promised to pay, it was clearly during the coverture, when she was incapable of making any contract. A payment by the husband during coverture would create a new liability; it would be evidence of a separate and original promise by him on the fresh consideration of forbearance to him, and would be different from the mere taking up of the wife's liability by marriage."

In Hine v. Dewdney, 19 Law T. Rep. 61, the following instrument was held to be neither

A. and Co. merchants in London, shipped at New York a quantity of oil-cake on board a vessel chartered for London, of which defendant was owner. It was consigned to B. and Co. brokers; and the terms agreed with the captain were, for a lump weight of 500 tons 500*l*. half to be paid in cash on delivery, and half in bills. On the arrival of the vessel, the brokers duly reported her, made out the freight notes, and received 133*l*. for freight from A. and Co. Whilst the goods were being delivered to plaintiffs' barges, the captain, hearing that the brokers were insolvent, refused to allow the barges to be removed until plaintiffs had given him an indemnity. They had already paid freight to the brokers. The Judge was held to have rightly directed the jury, at the trial, that the plaintiffs were authorised to pay freight to the brokers, unless they had previously received notice that the authority of the brokers was revoked. (Odams v. Avery, 19 Law T. Rep. 63.)

Grisewood v. Blayne, 19 Law T. Rep. 64, was a question as to Share Jobbing. An agreement for the sale and purchase of railway shares, which amounted, in fact, to a bargaining for the payment of the difference, was held to be a gambling transaction within the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 105, s. 8, and in such case the proper question to leave to the jury is, "Did either party intend to buy or sell?"

COURT PAPERS.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

NEW RULE OF COURT.

MASTER ROBINSON read the following rule of Court which had been made by their lordships:—

"REGULA GENERALIS. EASTER TERM, 1852.

"It is ordered that whenever a defendant shall be required by law and the practice of this Court to give recognizance to appear and answer to any indictment found in this court, or removed, or to be removed into the same, it shall be added to the condition of every such recognizance that the defendant shall personally appear from day to day on the trial of such indictment, and not depart until he shall be discharged by the Court before whom such trial shall be had; unless this Court or a judge shall think fit to dispense with such additional condition.

"By the COURT."

Lord CAMPBELL said the object of the Court in framing this order was, to remedy the inconvenience which had been experienced from the defendant in a misdemeanour not appearing to receive sentence when the trial took place at Nisi Prius. By an Act passed a few years since, the judge who tried the cause at Nisi Prius was authorised to pronounce sentence instantly, without waiting till the following Term. It was of the greatest importance that sentence should be immediately passed upon defendants, in the face of the country, and in the presence of those who had heard the evidence. It happened, however, that justice was defeated by the defendant not appearing to receive the sentence, and compromises were frequently made between the prosecutor and the defendant. The prosecutor got the warrant, and, instead of executing it, used it as a means of extortion, and made a private bargain with the defendant, whereby justice was defeated. The object of the Court was, that the defendant should appear in person to receive the sentence of the law.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

(Sittings in Error.)

THIS morning the Judges assembled in the Exchequer Chamber for the purpose of appointing the days for the "Sittings in Error" after the present term.

The Judges in attendance were—the Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, Mr. Baron Alderson, Mr. Justice Coleridge, Mr. Justice Wightman, Mr. Justice Cresswell, and Mr. Baron Platt.

The Chief Justice of the Common Pleas intimated that the Court would take cases in Error from the Court of Queen's Bench, on Monday, May 10; cases in Error from the Court of Common Pleas, on Tuesday, May 11; and cases in Error from the Court of Exchequer, on Wednesday, May 12. His Lordship further stated that if it were found necessary to do so the Court would sit in Error on other days, to be appointed on a future occasion.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LAW ASSOCIATION.

ON Wednesday week the annual general meeting of the members of this association took place at the offices of the association, 8, Bedford-row; Mr. E. W. Field, the chairman of the committee, in the chair. A detailed report from the committee of management was read by the secretary, Mr. W. Shaen, giving an account of the labours of the committee during the past year, to promote reforms in the law, and to uphold the interests of the Profession. The committee entertain strong hopes that the annual certificate duty may be repealed this year; the present Chancellor of the Exchequer having, last year, supported Lord Robert Grosvenor's motion for the repeal. The report also contained analytical criticisms upon several of the more important Law Bills at present before Parliament, in which the committee are endeavouring to introduce various amendments. After the report had been received and adopted, thanks voted to the various honorary officers, and the committee for the ensuing year appointed, a discussion took place upon the position and prospects of the Profession generally, in the course of which a suggestion was made by Mr G. Thorley, of Manchester, that the association should, from time to time, hold aggregate meetings of the Profession in some of the principal provincial towns throughout the kingdom. The suggestion was supported by Mr. J. Sudlow, of Manchester, and Ryland, of Birmingham, and will probably be acted upon. The association is composed of practising attorneys and solicitors throughout the kingdom, and its active and influential committee have always guided all their proceedings on the maxim that the welfare of the Profession, in order to be solid and permanent, must be founded upon the interests of the clients. The balance-sheet shews the funds of the association to be in a healthy condition.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

CAMBRIDGE, April 27.—The Regius Professor of Laws has given notice, that the lectures on Roman law will be resumed on Friday, April 30. The subject of this portion of the course will be the Law of Contracts and Offences. The lectures will be delivered in the Law School on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays. The hour of attendance will be eleven a.m. On Wednesday, May 12, an examination will be holden of those gentlemen who attended the professor's lectures in the Lent term with the view of obtaining a professorial certificate. Candidates for the certificate are requested to present themselves in the Law School at ten a. m.

EXPENSES OF LAW AND JUSTICE.

THE miscellaneous estimates, just issued, contain the following expenditure under this head:—

Law charges paid by the Solicitor to the Treasury	17,000	13,000	21,000
Mint prosecutions relating to coin	8,555	8,670
Sheriff's expenses, officers of the Court of Exchequer, &c.	17,700	17,700	17,700
Insolvent Debtors' Court . .	10,330	9,080	8,830
Criminal prosecutions and other law charges, Scotland . .	84,324	87,840	121,165
Criminal prosecutions and other law charges, Ireland	63,761	60,000	57,710
Police of Dublin	35,500	35,500	36,500
Prosecutions at assizes & quarter sessions, formerly paid from county rates	240,000	200,000	240,000
Estimates for prisons and convict services at home and in the colonies:—
General superintendence . .	14,550	15,472	16,196
Government prisons & convict establishments at home	237,224	251,269	261,522
Maintenance of prisoners in county gaols and Bethlem Hospital	135,848	117,190	159,123
Expenses of transportation .	119,230	98,860	101,041
Convict establishments in the colonies......	200,147	183,030	253,587

It appears to be determined that the separate sittings of the Lord Chancellor and of the Lords Justices are to be continued, and that it has been found expedient to postpone, if not to abandon, the sittings of a Court of Chancery composed of the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Justices. Workmen are now employed in preparing a portion of the old Hall of Lincoln's-inn for the reception of the Lords Justices in the sittings after Term. The courts of the Lord Chancellor and of the Lords Justices will thus be more conveniently connected with those of the Vice-Chancellors, and the disturbance created by using the Hall as a promenade put an end to. This disturbance was so serious as to form a constant ground of complaint from Lord St. Leonard's, and we have no doubt it influenced in some measure the resolution to set apart a portion of the space for the Lords Justices.

THE ATTORNEYS' TAX.

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer has adopted that which, in the present position of the Government, was obviously the most prudent course to be pursued; he has resolved to make no change whatever in the taxes during the present Session. Of course, in such circumstances, there is no hope of redress for the Attorneys, nor indeed, could they well ask it. They must be content to bear their burden for another year.

But Mr. Disraeli has distinctly pledged himself, should he be then in office, next year to undertake a complete revision of the entire scheme of taxation, with a view to its adjustment and equalization. Of such a scheme the repeal of the Attorneys' Tax must be a part, for there is none more unjust or more onerous. We may, therefore, look forward, with more well-grounded hope than we have yet been enabled to entertain, that in another twelvemonth the object for which we have been so long striving will be won.

In the meanwhile, we doubt the prudence of renewing the Bill of Lord Robert Grosvenor, during the short remainder of this Session. As it is, we stand in an excellent position, with several majorities to boast of, and even the last division a victory. Should the Bill be introduced now, many will oppose it who are friendly to its object, on the plea that, after the acceptance of the resolution of the Government to make no present changes in taxation, it would be wrong to vote for any. The consequences would be that we should come before the Chancellor of the Exchequer next year with a minority instead of a majority, defeat instead of a victory. Now we have the claim upon his regard in the financial schemes of next year, that the House of Commons has already certified thrice to the validity of that claim. A struggle at this time would be an unwise waste of labour, for success would give us no substantial advantage which we have not now, while defeat would be disastrous. It is a good old rule to "leave well alone."

NOT SO BAD AS WE SEEM.

IT is the fashion with mob orators and writers in newspapers to abuse the Attorneys. Even our brethren of the Bar are too much accustomed to resort to this cheap method of winning the ear of a jury, when arguments fail. In Parliament, they are usually ill-spoken of, and any accidental good word for them is greeted with "a laugh."

This proceeds upon the assumption that they are unpopular with the public; that there is a natural enmity between attorneys and clients; and that a Lawyer is viewed with mingled dislike and fear in the locality wherein he is supposed to be the missionary of strife, and the promoter of litigation.

Now, let us see what is the fact.

There are five Attorneys in the House of Commons—all of them representing the places in which they have lived and practised!

To these a sixth has just been added, in the person of Mr. LASLETT, who has been returned for the city of Worcester, without opposition. We are informed that Mr. LASLETT has made a large fortune in his native city by his own exertions, and raised himself to a high social position among his neighbours by his industry, integrity, and intelligence. His fellow citizens have certified their respect and regard for him by an almost unanimous choice of him to be their representative.

Now it is remarkable that no other Profession or calling in the House of Commons can boast so many members returned from the localities in which they have lived, and where they must be best known and most truly judged. There are eleven times more Barristers in the House, thirteen times more officers of the army and navy, seven times more railway-men, and about six times more merchants and traders, yet can none of these classes boast so many members elected by their native towns as can the Attorneys, who are reported to be so unpopular.

The fact contradicts the assumption. That so many cities and towns should choose for their representatives Attorneys who are now or have been actually practising among them, is proof positive that Attorneys are not so unpopular as newspapers and orators imagine and assert. The fact is gratifying to the Profession, which is raised as a Profession in public esteem and social status by the honours achieved by so many of its members; and it is most creditable to the individuals who, by their integrity, have so won the confidence and regard of the community of which they have been the advisers, as to obtain from them the highest testimonial of esteem which can be bestowed upon a fellow-citizen.

A PETTY LARCENY.

OUR readers will remember that some time since we proposed and proceeded to the formation of a Law Reversionary Interest Society. We have incurred considerable expenses and obtained a large number of shareholders, and it is still in progress.

It was extensively advertised, so that its existence must have been known to every member of the Profession.

What, then, was our surprise to receive, a few days ago, a prospectus of a Law Reversionary Interest Society, the facsimile in name and plan to that which we had planned, promoted, registered, and advertised? In fact, to call it by the mildest term, an unblushing piracy—perhaps it will be deemed by the Profession to deserve a harsher name.

We caused immediate inquiries to be made why and by whom our invention had been thus appropriated.

From the registry office we learn that the person who has done this is one Mr. EWART.

We are bound to say that the respectable Solicitors whose names are associated with this very disreputable plagiarism expressed their surprise and regret.

Mr. EWART's excuse for this proceeding is simply that we had omitted to re-register the projected company at the end of twelve months, as in strictness of law we were bound to do, and that, therefore, he had a legal right to appropriate to himself our title and scheme.

We must admit that he had a legal right to do so—that we cannot obtain an injunction to restrain this appropriation of our property, because we had inconsiderately omitted to comply with the strict requirements of the statute.

But our moral claim remains intact. It is not the less our property in reason and justice. Honesty equally forbids a stranger to appropriate it to his own use, without our knowledge and consent first obtained. Even if it were not a question of common honesty, honour and courtesy would seem to demand of a man that, before he takes advantage of a defect in a legal form to seize and appropriate another man's property he should ask him if he had resigned to abandon it.

No excuse can be offered for this proceeding on the score of ignorance of what we had done. Our plan was re-registered at the beginning of last year, and up to October last advertisements of it appeared in the LAW TIMES, almost weekly, so that the promoters of this plagiarism must have known that our scheme was not abandoned.

We leave the transaction to the judgment of the Profession, only stating, that the establishment of our Law Reversionary Interest Society is not abandoned, and protesting against the piracy of its name, or plan, by any other person, who wants the wit to invent one for himself.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

THERE are sixty-nine Lawyers in the present House of Commons. It is said that no less than one hundred and thirty are candidates for the next Parliament. If half of the new aspirants should be elected, we shall have nearly one hundred Lawyers in the Commons, —about one-sixth of the whole House.

This is a remarkable state of things. Its causes and its consequences may well challenge inquiry from the thoughtful.

Its effect upon the interests of the public is rather a question for the newspapers; but, so far as it concerns the Profession, it is a matter peculiarly within our own province.

What does this crowd of Lawyer candidates indicate?

Obviously it is the sign and the consequence not of the prosperity, but of the decline, of the Profession. It is a well-known paradox of the Profession, but established by experience, that although a Lawyer in large practice, who has no time to spare for legislative work, is permitted to go into the House of Commons without sacrificing his practice, a junior who does so is supposed to abandon the practice of his profession—at all events, the practice always abandons him. It is thought, we presume, that by going into Parliament before he has established himself in a leading practice, he proclaims his purpose to be to abandon his professional pursuit, in obedience to his parliamentary duties. This is the only rationale we can trace of the strange contradiction, which assumes that the duties of Parliament are too onerous to permit a junior, who has little to do, to pursue his profession, while they are not deemed to be impediments to a senior, who has a great deal to do.

Whether it be a mere prejudice, or the wisdom of experience, the fact is not the less patent; and so well is it understood in the Profession, that it may be set down as a conclusion, that when any Barrister, who has not arrived at the dignity of a leader, goes into Parliament, he does so knowing that he thereby practically abandons all prospect of rising in his Profession. If he does not desire to desert it, it will certainly desert him.

The rush of Barristers from Westminster-hall to the hustings is, therefore, a significant symptom of the present state and prospects of the Profession. So many men would not be found to throw away their chances of Professional success, in the chase after the unprofitable honours of Parliament, if they did not despair of the former. Were the Bar flourishing, and ability tolerably certain to obtain a livelihood there, instead of one hundred and twenty wigs seeking to migrate from Westminster-hall to St. Stephen's, there would not have been twenty.

And if the cause be such, what are the consequences? Is the Profession likely to be advantaged by it? Judging by the experience of the past, we fear that it is not. Certainly, up to this time, the Lawyers in Parliament have been wonderfully self-denying. It cannot be said that they have taken care of themselves, as other classes have done. They have not prevented, if they did not promote, the alterations in the law which have cut off their emoluments and produced the migration we are now witnessing. The sixty Lawyers in the present House of Commons might have done something for the Profession, if they had been so inclined, were it only in the way of prevention of mischief. Should their numbers be doubled, they could not do more than might have been already done. Either the will or the power was wanting. Are these likely to be supplied in the next Parliament? We shall see.

However, their brethren out of doors must not suppose them to be altogether so blameworthy as they appear. They have a difficulty, not known to the public, but which it is right that the Profession should know. The Lawyers are positively hated in the House of Commons. To be a Lawyer is an actual impediment to success there; it is an evil reputation, which can only be overcome by repeated proof that it is not as a Lawyer the honourable member sits and talks. If he makes a good speech, he obtains no credit for it,—it is his business to make speeches. If he sides with the Government, he seeks promotion; if against it, notoriety. His arguments may be ever so sound, they carry no weight, because they are supposed to be the skilfulness of an Advocate, who could argue equally well on either side. Thus it is that the Lawyers in Parliament, although numerically strong, are weak in influence, and perhaps it is on this account that they are enabled to do so little in the way of service to the Profession.

It is certainly to be regretted that any cause should be given for an ill reputation that deprives the Lawyers of the advantages to which their numbers would entitle them. It is hard that all should be suspected, because some are self-seeking. To prevent this, we would remove the cause of the suspicion; we would take away all temptations to Lawyers to enter Parliament in expectation of any professional promotion, by passing an Act to disqualify a member of the House of Commons from taking any judicial or other office in the law, except those of Judge Advocate and Attorney and Solicitor General, and for six months after he shall have ceased to be a member.

Such a law would give the Lawyers a better position in the Legislature, it would remove many temptations from them, and it would enable the Government to exercise more independence than now they can in the choice of Judicial Officers. The Seat of Justice would then always be filled, not, as now, by the keenest politician, but by the best Lawyer.

We trust that, in the next Parliament, this hint will be taken, and such a law proposed. Should an opportunity offer to us, the experiment shall certainly be tried.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.

MONDAY, April 26.—Lord CAMPBELL rose to offer a short explanation of a remark which he had made on a former evening relative to the Masters in Chancery. He regretted that what he had then said had been misunderstood by those learned and respectable individuals, who had been chosen by the Lord Chancellor to fill their respective offices on account of their excellent character for learning and integrity. He had referred, in what he had then said, not to the individuals, but to the system under which they acted. He had used the expression, that cases rested in their offices, not merely from year to year, but from generation to generation; but he had not said that they did not transact with despatch a great deal of business. Whenever they could use despatch in the transaction of business they did so. As a proof of it, he would give a return of the despatch used in one of their offices,—he meant that of Master Tinney. In the year 1851 he had made no less than 204 reports; and on looking to the dates of the references made to him, he found that 70 of the references were made to him before 1850, but very shortly before that year. 68 were made in 1850; and the remaining 62 were made in 1851. This shewed how rapidly, after the references were made, the reports were made disposing of those references. This was a fair average sample of the despatch observed in the Masters' offices; but, unfortunately, in other instances cases did sometimes linger, and, notwithstanding the exertions of the Masters, did sleep from year to year, and sometimes from generation to generation. This arose from no fault of the Masters, but from the system. He heartily rejoiced that the Bill for the abolition of the Masters' offices had been brought into Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MILITIA BILL.

MONDAY, April 26.—After a long debate, the second reading of this Bill was carried by a great majority, the numbers being, for the second reading, 316; against it, 165; majority, 150.

PETITION OF THE ATTORNEYS.

Mr. MULLINGS moved that the petition of the Society of Attorneys, Solicitors, Proctors, and others incorporated by Charters of King William the Fourth and Queen Victoria (presented 23rd April) be printed with the votes.—Mr. THORNELY opposed the motion, on the ground that the substance of the petition had already been printed in the ordinary way in the report of the committee on public petitions.—The House divided, when the result was—

For the motion	12
Against it	44
Majority against the motion	—32

REFRESHMENT AT ELECTIONS.

Sir E. N. BUXTON moved for leave to bring in a Bill to allow candidates to give refreshment to voters at county elections to a limited amount.—A rather spirited discussion ensued, and, Sir JOHN PAKINGTON supporting the motion, it was, on division, carried by 58 to 19: majority, 39.

THE TRUSTEES ACT.

TUESDAY, April 27.—Sir W. P. WOOD moved for and obtained leave to bring in a Bill to extend the provisions of the Trustees Act of 1850.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

Mr. HORSMAN wished to ask the Home Secretary whether the Government had, either in preparation or in contemplation, any measure for the reform of the Ecclesiastical Courts?—Mr. WALPOLE (who spoke in a very low tone) was understood to reply that the Queen's Advocate had been at great pains to prepare a draft Bill with reference to the reform of the Ecclesiastical Courts; but whether the Government would feel justified in adopting that particular measure, or any other, he could not—seeing that it was a subject of difficulty, and very complicated—undertake at the present moment positively to say.

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLDS.

THURSDAY, April 29.—Mr. AGLIONBY moved the third reading of this Bill.—Sir G. STRICKLAND opposed the Bill, and moved that it be read a third time this day three months.—The gallery was cleared for a division, but none took place; and the amendment being withdrawn, the Bill was read a third time, and passed amidst some cheering.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

MONDAY, May 3.—In reply to Mr. Ewart, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL stated that the contemplated examination of candidates for the bar would be voluntary, but that, in order to induce students to submit to it, it was proposed to establish studentships as rewards for the greatest proficiency.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

THE rating of a dock appears to be almost as difficult a matter as the rating of a railway. Several questions have already arisen as to the principle of such a rate, and now we have one upon the mode of assessment where the dock extended into different parishes. In Reg. v. The Hull Dock Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 85, four different docks, communicating with one another, extended into different parishes, but one toll was paid for the privilege of using the whole or any part of the docks. The rate upon the tolls was held to be distributable among the several parishes according to the proportion of land of the docks in each parish.

Jervis's Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, has been decided to be retrospective. The subject-matter of the complaint arose in 1847, but the complaint was not made until nearly four years afterwards. The justices made an order upon it. The Court quashed it, under sec. 11 of the above statute, as having been made on a complaint the matter of which arose six months before the order. (Reg. v. The Leeds and Bradford Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 86.)

The question, who has the management of a public road so as to be entitled to sue for a penalty imposed by the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, sec. 57, was raised in Reg. v. Wilson, 19 Law T. Rep. 86. It was decided that he must be a person clothed with some public duty,—as trustee, commissioner, surveyor, &c.; and that one who had dedicated the road to the public, who voluntarily repaired it, made sewers under it, and whose consent had always been obtained by parties wishing to interfere with the road, was not such a person.

In Walker v. The British Guarantee Association, 19 Law T. Rep. 87, the sureties of a treasurer of a building society were held not to be liable upon a covenant for his duly accounting for all moneys received on account of the society, where the treasurer had received money for the society which it was his duty to pay to the bank, but was robbed of it by irresistible violence, without any default of his own, before he could pay it to the bank.

It is now decided in Reg. v. The Justices of Lancashire, 19 Law T. Rep. 87, that an appeal against an order for the maintenance of a lunatic pauper must be made to the Sessions within whose jurisdiction the parish is situate from which the pauper was removed to the asylum.

The Court of Ex. has supported the decision of the Q. B. in Re Brown, 18 Law T. Rep. 238, and has decided that the Vagrant Act does not render a suspected person or reputed thief, who may be found frequenting a street with intent to commit a felony, liable, unless the street be, and be described as being, a street leading to some river, canal, or navigable stream, dock, or basin, quay, wharf, or warehouse, near or adjoining thereto, or a place of public resort, or place adjacent to some public resort, or avenue leading thereto. Therefore, where the conviction stated the person to be a reputed thief who was found frequenting "Regent-street, in the county of Middlesex," with intent to commit a felony, it was held to be insufficient. (Reg. v. Jones, 19 Law T. Rep. 94.)

We have also an interesting case to note relating to Highways. In Bateman v. Black, 19 Law T. Rep. 95, the question was, what is a sufficient dedication to the public? The owner of a passage and court leading from the street to thirteen cottages, with gates at the entrance, and without a thoroughfare, had requested the commissioners for paving the parish to pave the court, which they did, and placed a public gas-lamp there. This was held to be strong evidence of a dedication to the public. COLERIDGE, J. said—"I shall direct the jury that this passage may be a public highway, though there is no thoroughfare."

The power of the Court to amend, under Lord CAMPBELL'S Act, was mooted in the Court of Criminal Appeal, in the case of Reg. v. Vincent, 19 Law T. Rep. 96. The facts were these. A. was sent by his master, a carman, to the London Dock Company, for two hogsheads of sugar, the property of B. The company, by mistake, delivered two hogsheads belonging to C. On the road from the premises of the company to B.'s, A. broke bulk, and abstracted some sugar. The indictment laid the property in A.'s master, but, during the trial, the Court amended, and laid the property in the company. It was held, first, that the Court had power to do so; and, secondly, that it was rightly laid in the company.

POLLING BOOTHS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In the recent election for the eastern division of this county, I was much assisted in my duties as sheriff's deputy for one of the polling places by Mr. Cox's book on the Practice of Elections. I introduced his new plan for polling booths, for the first time I believe in this county: and they proved very convenient; an alteration which I made was such a manifest improvement, that I shall not apologise for suggesting it to you. It was the addition of a passage, about three feet wide, at the back of the booths,—running from end to end,—with a door at one end only. This gave me easy access to all the booths, and my own seats and desks I had at the back of the poll clerk in each booth. I admitted messengers and committee men into the passage by ticket, thus preventing any crowding at the desks in front, which I kept clear by constable. In future, I should make another alteration, by having a passage through at the back into the front desks; this will be very convenient for the clerks and inspectors to get to and from their places, without going out at the voters' entrance place. The booths cost more than the old-fashioned straight line of desk, cutting into more stuff, and I found it necessary to have two constables at each booth, and these had to be paid. However, the very important object of keeping the voter from interruption whilst giving the vote was attained, and all connected with the polling approved highly of the new booths.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

SOME valuable expositions of the law of Joint-Stock Companies will be found in the very interesting and instructive judgment of Lord ST. LEONARD'S in the case of Re North of England Joint Stock Banking Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 78. We direct attention to some of the most important of the points adverted to, but we recommend our readers to peruse the entire judgment. "If directors not pursuing or obeying the directions of their Act, in respect of particular transactions choose to adopt a new rule and hold out to the public that their plan is a binding one, and men advance their money on the faith of that dealing," as where they admit a shareholder without going through all the formalities prescribed by the Act or by their deed, such a course of dealing will be binding upon both parties. Where in such a transaction instruments are executed which are professed to be binding as for the transfer of shares, and the party is permitted to receive dividends as if he was the owner of the shares, and to which he would not have been entitled but for such supposed assignment, it will be binding on both parties. "If a man, by representation that he is entitled to be registered, becomes registered and is admitted de facto as a shareholder, he is not at liberty to refer to any invalidity and insist that he is not a shareholder against those persons who did not dispute his liability. If the directors themselves do an irregular act and admit a man and treat him as a shareholder, they are both bound."

The liabilities of railways as carriers were considered in Crouch v. The North Western Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 90. The company gave notice that they would not be responsible for packed parcels, nor carry them unless the contents were declared, and that the senders would be taken to warrant that they were not packed parcels. The plaintiff sent a packed parcel, declining to give particulars. The company took it in, and it was lost. The question was now whether this notice formed a special contract. The Court held it to be insufficient, and that the company were bound to prove an assent to the terms of their notice.

IT will scarcely be necessary to recommend our readers to peruse with care the elaborate and very learned judgment of Lord ST. LEONARD'S, in the case of Ex parte Straffon's Executors, 19 Law T. Rep. 78. It is a review of the entire law of liability of contributories, set forth with the usual clear yet close, argument of that distinguished Judge.

The precise question at issue in the case is of little importance, for it exhibits no novelty, and it would be impossible to present here anything like an abridgement of the argument. But two or three of the more important points may be noticed briefly The facts were, that A. had purchased 120 shares in a banking company; and in respect of ten of them his grandson, as his agent, executed the deed of transfer. No transfer was made of the other 110. Dividends were received by A. upon the entire 120. He was held to be rightly a contributory in respect of all the 120 shares. Besides these A. had purchased of the directors 580 shares, on which also he had received dividends. The strict formalities required by the deed of settlement had not, however, been complied with. His executors were held to be contributories in respect of these also. His Lordship held, that it was not necessary, in order to constitute a person a contributory, that he should be a member of the company. He may be such if liable to the losses and demands of the company, even although not a member of it. The word "contributory" has a much wider meaning than the word "member." "All I have to consider, in deciding whether a man is a contributory or not is to ascertain whether he is liable in any manner whatever to contribute to the debts, liabilities, and losses of the company."

Three questions of practice are also reported. In Re The British Alkali Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 83, where the company had ceased to carry on business, but the governing body were bona fide endeavouring to wind up the affairs of the company under the provisions of the deed of settlement, the Court refused to make an order under the Winding-up Act, although a creditor to a large amount was in a position to issue immediate execution. In Re the German Banking Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 84, where contributories had successfully resisted a claim against the company, the Court allowed their costs to be paid out of the estate; and in Re The Universal Gas-light Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 84, a provisional committee-man claiming as a creditor in respect of debts of the company paid by him, was allowed to prove the debts, but not the costs of defending actions brought against him for those debts.

MONMOUTHSHIRE AND GLAMORGANSHIRE BANKING COMPANY.—Tuesday a crowded meeting of contributories and others was held before Master Farrer, on the subject of a proposed call of 60*l*. per share on all the contributories settled on the list. The affidavit of the official managers stated that they believed that such a call would produce about 268,000*l*. out of which an instalment of 1s. 8d. in the pound, amounting to 17,000*l*. would have to be paid to the compounding creditors by the 30th of June. The number of shares settled on the list was 17,385, but it was stated that out of these it was expected that nothing would be got from 7,200, owing to death, insolvency, and other causes. The gross amount of liabilities was 855,000*l*. to meet which there was about 250,000*l*. of available assets. The losses had amounted to 587,890*l*. This was at the time that the matter came into the hands of the official managers. At present the gross liabilities came to 807,000*l*. and the estimated deficiency, in March 1852, was 268,000*l*. After hearing the objections urged against the call, the Master ordered the call of 60*l*. per share to be made, observing that he understood that it was the intention of the official managers to enforce it as leniently as possible against those shareholders who had already paid something, and for which they would now be credited.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

IT is understood to be a rule that conditions in restraint of marriage are void, as being against the policy of the law. But this must be taken with a limit. In Lloyd v. Lloyd, 19 Law T. Rep. 84, it has been held that the rule does not extend to the restraint of marriage of a testator's widow. "The law," said Vice-Chancellor KINDERSLEY, "recognises in the husband that species of interest in the widowhood of his wife which makes it lawful for him to restrain a second marriage, that is to say, that the provision he has made shall cease. I have no doubt also that with respect to either his wife or a stranger a testator may give an annuity, to continue so long as she remains single and unmarried; but as to a person not a wife, if he first gives her a life or other estate and then appends a condition to defeat that estate if she marries, that would not be good." This distinction should be noted by the student. Therefore, where there was a condition, if testator's wife and another woman should both marry, with a gift over, it was held to be void, for the reason above stated. In the same case it was also held that a condition to keep a tomb in repair is not a charitable use, and therefore not illegal. But otherwise of a devise of rents to the minister and churchwardens of a parish upon trust, first, to take 5*l*. to themselves and then to repair the tomb. This was a charitable use, and therefore void.

A point in the Practice of Wills was decided In the Goods of Thompson, 19 Law T. Rep. 96. The treasurer for the time being of a charity was appointed executor of a will. The person who filled the office at the time of testator's death had ceased to do so at the time of the probate; but he was held to be entitled to the grant.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAW OF WILLS.

The following is a copy of the Wills Amendment Bill as it is passing through the House of Commons:—

A Bill intituled "An Act for the Amendment of an Act passed in the First year of the Reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled 'An Act for the Amendment of the Laws with respect to Wills.'"

Whereas the laws with respect to the execution of wills require further amendment: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same (as follows):

1 Vict. c. 26.—When signature to a will shall be deemed valid.—1. Where by an Act passed in the first year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act for the Amendment of the Laws with respect to Wills," it is enacted that no will shall be valid unless it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator, or by some other person in his presence, and by his direction: every will shall, so far only as regards the position of the signature of the testator, or of the person signing for him as aforesaid, be deemed to be valid within the said enactment, as explained by this Act, if the signature shall be so placed at or after, or following, or under, or beside, or opposite to the end of the will, that it shall be apparent on the face of the will that the testator intended to give effect by such his signature to the writing signed as his will, and that no such will shall be affected by the circumstance that the signature shall not follow or be immediately after the foot or end of the will, or by the circumstance that a blank space shall intervene between the concluding word of the will and the signature, or by the circumstance that the signature shall be placed among the words of the testimonium clause or of the clause of attestation, or shall follow or be after or under the clause of attestation, either with or without a blank space intervening, or shall follow or be after, or under, or beside the names or one of the names of the subscribing witnesses, or by the circumstance that the signature shall be on a side or page or other portion of the paper or papers containing the will whereon no clause or paragraph or disposing part of the will shall be written above the signature, or by the circumstance that there shall appear to be sufficient space on or at the bottom of the preceding side or page or other portion of the same paper on which the will is written to contain the signature; and the enumeration of the above circumstances shall not restrict the generality of the above enactment; but no signature under the said Act or this Act shall be operative to give effect to any disposition or direction which is underneath or which follows it, nor shall it give effect to any disposition or direction inserted after the signature shall be made.

2. Act to extend to certain wills already made.—The provisions of this Act shall extend and be applied to every will already made, where administration or probate has not already been granted or ordered by a Court of competent jurisdiction in consequence of the defective execution of such will, or where the property, not being within the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts, has not been possessed or enjoyed by some person or persons claiming to be entitled thereto, in consequence of the defective execution of such will, or the right thereto shall not have been decided to be in some other person or persons than the persons claiming under the will, by a Court of competent jurisdiction, in consequence of the defective execution of such will.

3. Interpretation of "will."—The word "will" shall, in the construction of this Act, be interpreted in like manner, as the same is directed to be interpreted under the provisions in this behalf, contained in the said Act of the first year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria.

4. Short title of Act.—This Act may be cited as "The Wills Act Amendment Act, 1852."

Sales of Incumbered Estates.—After a short vacation the Court sat again for the purpose of effecting sales of estates, three of which were put up for competition, and all disposed of at various rates of purchase. The estate of Mr. James Nugent, lying in the county of Westmeath, containing 599 acres, with a mansion house and demesne, subject to a headrent and other charges amounting to 196*l.* a year, leaving an annual profit rent of 212*l.* was sold to an English gentleman (Captain Dixon) for 1,500*l.* or but little over seven years' purchase. A property in Galway and Roscommon, producing a net rent of 241*l.* per annum, realised 3,200*l.* or over 13 years' purchase. The residue of the Clare estates of Letitia J. Hickman, containing 968 statute acres, yielding a profit rent of 414*l* per annum, was disposed of in two lots, which together produced the sum of 5,650*l.* or nearly 14 years' purchase.

The Incumbered Estates Commission.—From a return to parliament, just printed, it appears that up to the 1st of February the sales effected by the Irish Incumbered Estates Commission amounted to 4,682,877*l.* 2s. 3d. The number of acres sold was 698,328, and the cash payments made by the commissioners 1,971,029*l.* 14s. 1d.

Stamp Duties (Ireland) Continuance.—A Bill which has been printed, is now before the House of Commons to continue the stamp duties granted under the 5th and 6th Vict. c. 82, for one year, to commence on, and be computed from, the 10th of October, 1852.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

Three County Court cases were reported last week. In Hayes v. Keene, 19 Law T. Rep. 90, on a judgment and order to pay debt and costs by instalments, and in default a judgment summons served; and the defendant not appearing, a warrant of commitment, under rule 121, which directs that "such warrant shall bear date on the day on which the order of commitment was made, and shall continue in force for three calendar months, and no longer." The warrant authorised commitment "for the term of ten days from the date of the arrest." It was dated 19th September, 1851. The debtor was arrested on December 16, and kept in prison till the 25th, being seven days beyond the three months during which the warrant was to be in force. For this the debtor brought an action against the gaoler, who pleaded a justification under the warrant. The plaintiff replied in the words of the 121st rule, above described. But the Court held it not to be an answer to the plea, because, although the warrant was to remain in force only three months from the date of the order of commitment, the debtor, having been arrested within that period, was to be imprisoned for the number of days specified in the warrant, although the three months during which it had force were expired before the term of imprisonment was completed.

Justice v. Gosling, 19 Law T. Rep. 91, was a County Court Appeal, but not a question of County Court Law. The decision of the Court appears to have turned, not upon the point intended to be raised, but upon an omission of the judge to state certain material facts in the case. The Court refused to send back the case to be amended, but decided it upon the imperfect facts as stated.

Gurney v. Harris, 19 Law T. Rep. 94, was a very serious point upon the construction of sect. 11 of the Extension Act, which provides that if in action of trespass plaintiff shall recover a sum "not exceeding 5l." he shall have no costs, while the 12th section enacts that if plaintiff shall recover "a sum less than the sum in that behalf hereinbefore mentioned," and the judge shall certify, he shall be entitled to costs. The plaintiff recovered the precise sum of 5*l.* and it was held that the judge had power to certify for costs under the 12th section.

There is also an Insolvency case of some importance to be noted in Macrae's Practice. In Beavan v. Walker, 19 Law T. Rep. 92, an Insolvent, to whom protection had been granted after verdict obtained against him in an action of tort, was held not to be protected from arrest on a judgment signed after the protection was granted.

The words "protection from all process," under section 4, were held to mean, from all process arising out of the subject-matter of the Insolvent Debtor Acts, which do not deal with actions of tort. In Re Leathall, 19 Law T. Rep. 96, where an assignee had been chosen at an adjourned first examination and had died before final order granted, a day was named for the creditors to proceed to the choice of another assignee de novo.

LATE CASES ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF THE COUNTY COURTS.(a)

The large amount of business which is now carried on in the County Courts, the increasing importance of these tribunals, and the numerous questions of difficulty relating to cases tried before them which have engaged the attention of the Superior Courts, have determined us to take a general review of the law relating to different matters connected with the Law and Practice of the County Courts. This subject we shall consider in a series of independent articles, which will be from time to time presented to our readers, as occasion shall call for them, and the space requisite for them in our columns will allow. In each of these articles we propose to examine, in the first place, into the general principle of the law bearing on the particular subject under discussion; then to present before the reader the leading cases which have been determined on this matter; after which we shall proceed to cite the various recent decisions which have been made on this point by the Superior Courts. By this means we hope to be able to afford to the practitioner in these Courts a general guide as to the course which in the particular cases referred to he ought to pursue, and, from time to time, to insure his acquaintance with all the leading points which have engaged the attention of the judges of the Superior Courts relative to the Law and Practice of the County Courts. At all times we shall be glad to receive the suggestions and communications of our readers, and of those whose practice may lead them to a more particular acquaintance with this department of the Profession.

As naturally occurring first in the order in which we should consider them, we come, therefore, at once to the examination of

1. CASES ON QUESTIONS OF JURISDICTION.

The question of jurisdiction, as regards the nature of the cases which the County Courts are entitled to try, is one of the most important in the law regulating these courts, and is one moreover which gives rise to very frequent discussion. In many instances, indeed, the denial of the jurisdiction of the Court is resorted to as the ground of defence to an action; and the uncertainty of the law here must in many cases prevent a recourse to proceedings in the County Courts. We hope, therefore, to present to our readers a brief general review of some of the recent decisions on this point, a knowledge of which must necessarily be essential to every practitioner in them.

Before entering on the subject immediately before us, it will, however, be desirable to advert to the provisions respecting jurisdiction contained in the several statutes relating to the County Courts, to which we may have occasion from time to time to refer, and which we shall do as concisely as possible.

The words of the 58th section of the original County Courts Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95) are what determine the jurisdiction of these courts as to the nature and amount of the causes to be tried in them. It is by this section enacted that "all pleas of personal actions, where the debt or damage claimed is not more than 20*l.* whether on balance of account or otherwise, may be holden in the County Court." Certain causes of action, which are specifically set forth are then prohibited from being entertained by these courts; being those of ejectment or in which the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, or to any toll, fair, market, or franchise, shall be in question, or in which the validity of any devise, bequest, or limitation under any will or settlement may be disputed, or for any malicious prosecution, or for any libel or slander, or for criminal conversation, or for sedition, or breach of promise of marriage.

By section 60 it is provided that the summons of commencing an action in the County Court may issue in any district in which the defendant, or one of the defendants, shall dwell or carry on his business at the time of the action brought; or by leave of the court of the district in which the defendant, or one of the defendants, shall have dwelt or carried on his business at some time within six calendar months next before the time of the action brought, or in which the cause of action arose, such summons may issue in such last-mentioned courts. Sect. 63 provides that demands shall not be divided for the purpose of bringing two or more suits; but that a plaintiff may abandon the excess above 20*l.* and bring his action for the remainder. Sect. 64 enables minors to sue for wages. Sect. 65 enacts that the jurisdiction of the County Court shall extend to the recovery of any demand not exceeding 20*l.* which is the whole or part of the unliquidated balance of a partnership account, or the amount or part of the amount of a distributive share under an intestacy, or of any legacy under a will. Sect. 66 provides that it shall be lawful for any executor or administrator to sue and be sued in the County Court. Sect. 68 provides that one out of several persons jointly liable may be sued.

A mode of proceeding is given by secs. 122-127, for the recovery of any house, land, or other incorporeal hereditament, where the yearly value or rent shall not exceed 50*l.* upon the ending or determination of the term or interest of the tenant.

By sec. 128 it is enacted, that all actions and proceedings which before the passing of this Act might have been brought in any of the Superior Courts, where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, or where the cause of action did not arise wholly or in some material point within the jurisdiction of the court within which the defendant dwells or carries on his business at the time of the action brought, or where any officer of the County Court shall be a party, except in respect of any claim to any goods taken in execution, may be brought in such Superior Court at the election of the party. Sec. 129 prevents plaintiff suing in any of the Superior Courts, when he might have sued in the County Court, from recovering any costs where he does not recover above 20*l.* unless the judge certifies that the action was proper to be tried in such Superior Court.

By the Act of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, to extend the Act for the more easy recovery of small debts in England, it is enacted, sec. 1, that the jurisdiction of the several courts to be holden under the former Act shall extend to the recovery of any debt, damage, or demand, not exceeding the sum of 50*l.* and to all actions in respect thereof, save and except the several actions specified in the proviso in sec. 58 of the same Act, already referred to; and that the provisions in the former Act shall extend to all debts not exceeding 50*l.*

It is provided by sec. 17 of this Act, that if both parties shall agree by a memorandum, signed by them or their attorneys, that the County Court shall have power to try any of the actions therein mentioned, in which the sum sought to be recovered shall exceed 5*l.* by the said recited Act, or 50*l.* by that limited, or any action in which the title to land, whether of freehold, copyhold, leasehold, or other tenure; or to any title, toll, market, fair, or other purchase shall be in question, then the Court shall have jurisdiction to try such action, provided that in the memorandum it shall be stated that the parties or their attorneys know the action to be above such sums, or that they know such title to come in question; and provided that all local actions be brought in that jurisdiction in which the lands are situate.

By the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 10, ss. 4 and 6, the jurisdiction of the Courts of Bankruptcy in the case of insolvent debtors is transferred to the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and to the County Courts.

These comprise the whole of the enactments which relate to the jurisdiction of the County Courts. We shall next proceed to examine into the determinations of the Superior Courts, which have been made upon the various questions which have arisen on the subject.

On the general subject of the jurisdiction of the County Courts, it was decided by Mr. Justice ERLE, while sitting in the Bail Court, that if the Judge of the County Court has jurisdiction to enter upon the cause, he has jurisdiction to decide it. The want of jurisdiction, if existing at all, exists at the commencement of the trial. (Stevenson v. Shickle, 1 Cox & Mac. 187.)

Questions as to what constitutes a sufficient residence within the jurisdiction of the County Court, and what is a sufficient description of residence, have on several occasions been raised. A warrant of commitment by the Judge of the Sheriffs Court, in London, under sec. 1 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127, recited that T. K. "of Fleet-lane, &c. in the City of London," being indebted, &c. and then being at Fleet-lane, &c. and within the jurisdiction of this Court, was summoned, &c. and having appeared, was ordered to pay by instalments of 2*l.* per month; and that the first instalment had not been paid; and then ordered the said T. K. to be imprisoned in the debtors' prison for the City of London, "being the city in which the said T. K. hath been resident." It was held (PATTESON, J. dissentiate), that the statement of residence was sufficient,—first, because the Act of Parliament intended a committal to the gaol of the district which had original jurisdiction in the matter, and not of that in which the debtor resided at the time of commitment; and, secondly, because, if not, still the words, "hath been resident," imported a continuance of residence up to the time of the commitment. (Ex parte Thomas Kinning, 1 Cox & Macrae.) It has been held that the deputy-sealer, whose duty it is to affix the Great Seal to instruments, and who attends the Lord Chancellor for that purpose, sometimes at Westminster Hall, sometimes at the House of Lords, and sometimes at Lincoln's-inn, and who at other times attends at the Great Seal Patent Office, in Quality-court, Chancery-lane, is not a person who carries on his business in any definite locality, so as to be entitled to enter a suggestion under the County Courts Act. (Rolfe v. Learmouth, 1 Cox & Mac. 267.) A clerk to the Board of Admiralty, in the General Registry Office of Seamen, No. 70, Lower Thames-street, is not a person carrying on his business in the City of London within the meaning of 10 & 11 Vict. c. 71, s. 113. (Buckley v. Dann, 1 Cox & Mac. 269.) It has also been decided, that a clerk in the Office of Privy Council, residing in another district, does not "carry on his business" at the Privy Council Office, within the meaning of the County Courts Act, so as to bring him within the jurisdiction of the Court of the district in which the office is situate. (Sangster v. Kay, 1 Cox & Mac. 328.) A. who was a remote indorsee, of a bill of exchange, sued B. the drawer, and recovered less than 20*l.* Upon a motion to enter a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs, it was held that the giving notice of dishonour was a material point in the cause of action, and as the plaintiff and defendant lived within twenty miles of each other, the cause of action, in a material point, arose within the district, and the defendant was entitled to have a suggestion entered. (Heath v. Long, 1 C. C. Cas. 334.) In an action by the indorsee against the drawer of a promissory note for less than 20*l.* the defendant traversed the notice of dishonour. It was proved that the bill had been drawn and indorsed within the jurisdiction of the County Court in the district of which the defendant resided, but the notice of dishonour had been given in another district. It was held that the cause of action arose in a material point within the jurisdiction of the County Court, and leave was given to enter a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs. (Betteley v. Buck, 1 Cox & Mac. 236.) Upon an application to enter a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs, the defendant made an affidavit that the contract upon which the action was brought was made in the district of the Windsor County Court. The plaintiff, in his affidavit, denied this, and stated facts in support of his assertion. There being no other testimony on either side, the Court, upon these facts, refused the rule. (Caterer v. Dean, 1 Cox & Mac. 335.)

Orders for advertisements were given at a newspaper office within the jurisdiction of the Westminster County Court, and the defendant also resided within the jurisdiction, but the newspaper was published within the city of London. The plaintiff brought his action for the charges of the advertisements in the Superior Court and recovered 6*l.* 5*s.* A rule to enter a suggestion to deprive him of costs was made absolute. (Ghislin v. Dean, 1 Cox & Mac. 195.) In the Court of Kingston-upon-Hull, an action of assumpsit had been brought, and the declaration stated that the defendant was indebted to plaintiff within the jurisdiction of the Court, for freight due and payable from defendant to plaintiff, for the carriage of goods from Marseilles to Kingston-upon-Hull, and there delivered to defendant within the jurisdiction aforesaid, at defendant's request. It was held that the delivery was the consideration for the promise, and that both the consideration and the cause of action were within the jurisdiction of the Court. (Kemp v. Clark and Another, 1 Cox & Mac. 190.) It has been decided that a plaintiff, who dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, may sue in the Superior Courts from a defendant under 20*l.* even although he comes on business within that distance by means of an agent, who sold the very goods that were the subject of the action. (Shiels v. Kate, 1 Cox & Mac. 192.)

The case which follows has been decided in relation to the cause of action. The Court having determined in Grimbley v. Ackroyd, 1 Cox & Mac. 79, that the whole of a tradesman's bill constitutes one cause of action within the 63rd section of the County Courts Act, if any one item of the bill arises within the jurisdiction of the County Courts Act, the cause of action arises in some material point within that jurisdiction, under the 128th section. (Wood v. Perry, 1 Cox & Mac. 208.)

With regard to what fixes the amount of the sum over which the County Courts have jurisdiction, it has been held, upon an application under sec. of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, that the County Court has jurisdiction, though the sum exceeds 20*l.* (Byrne v. Knipe, 1 Cox & Mac. 182.) In another case a plaint was entered in a County Court to recover 20*l.* penalty for practising as an apothecary. The particulars stated the cause of action thus:— "Action to recover 20*l.* for that on or divers other days and times the defendant did act and practise as an apothecary, &c. at A. in the county of C., A. in the county of N., B. in the county of C. and B. in the the county of N. by then and there attending on E., F., G. and H. whereby he has forfeited 20*l.*" &c. It was held that such particulars did not disclose a cause of action exceeding 20*l.* and that, therefore, the County Court had jurisdiction. (The Apothecaries' Company v. Burt, 1 Cox & Mac. 281.) A. entered a plaint in a County Court to recover 20*l.* for damages done to his field by certain lime-kilns of B. during the period from November 10, 1843, to October 30, 1849. That plaint having been removed to this Court by certiorari, on the ground that the lime-kilns were of greater value than 20*l.* and that B.'s property in them would be destroyed if A. were to succeed. A. entered a second plaint in the County Court for 5*l.* for the same cause of action, laying the period of the injury to be from November 10, 1843, to November 30, 1849. It was held that the County Court had jurisdiction to entertain the second plaint, and that, therefore, prohibition would not lie, and that a certiorari could not issue, as the cause of action did not exceed. (Edwards v. Nogos, 1 Cox & Mac. 279.) It has, however, been held that it is competent to a plaintiff to reduce a claim below 5*l.* for the purpose of preventing the plaint from being removed by certiorari into a Superior Court. Debts and demands of less than 5*l.* are not removable by certiorari, even although it be sworn that difficult questions of law are likely to arise. (Green v. Arundel, 1 Cox & Mac. 289.)

Cases where the original demand has been reduced by a set-off, so to reduce it within the jurisdiction of the Court, must next be considered. In the following case the plaintiff brought his action in a Superior Court against the defendant, for and proved a debt of more than 20*l.* There were cross-accounts between the parties, which had not been balanced. The defendant pleaded and proved a set-off, which reduced the plaintiff's claim below 20*l.* and the verdict passed accordingly. A rule nisi having been obtained under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 129, for leave to enter a suggestion upon the roll to deprive the plaintiff of his costs, on the ground that he ought to have sued in the County Court; it was held that the case did not come within the Act. (Woodham v. Newman, 1 Cox & Mac. 231.) An action was brought in the County Court for the balance due upon some bills of exchange, the full amount of which would exceed 20*l.* At the trial the defendant contended that the judge had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the plaintiff had no right, under the circumstances, to treat his claim as a balance. The judge, however, thought that he had. Upon a rule for a prohibition, it was held, that as the question of jurisdiction involved the whole merits of the case, it being, in fact, whether there was a balance or not; and as the judge clearly had power to enter into the facts which raised that question, and as the affidavits were conflicting, the Court of Q. B. would not interfere with the judgment of the judge of the County Court. (Joseph v. Henry, 1 Cox & Mac. 366.) Where the plaintiff's amount exceeded the limit of the County Court jurisdiction, and he sought to bring it within, by having an agreement that cross accounts was to be set off between him and the defendant's testator (the defendant being sued as executor), and the judge of the County Court proceeded in that view of the case, and found for the plaintiff; but there was no evidence of any binding agreement to that effect, and the Court of Q. B. granted a prohibition to restrain all further proceedings in the County Court. (Wilson v. Franklin, Executor, 1 Cox & Mac. 497.)

We shall take an early opportunity of resuming this important subject, in the consideration of the other points arising out of questions raised respecting these courts, already referred to.

Query.

INSOLVENCY.

WILL you, or any of your readers through you, have the kindness to supply me with a copy bill of costs in an Insolvency protection case in the country, where the solicitor has a journey of ten or twelve miles to the County Court town to attend hearings?

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

COMMON LAW.—Where an indorsee of a bill brought actions against both the drawer and acceptor, whereupon the drawer paid the principal, interest, and costs of the action against him under a judge's order, which was resisted by the plaintiff, who then continued his action against the acceptor for the costs of his writ, the plaintiff was held to be entitled so to do. (Randall v. Moon, 19 Law T. Rep. 92.)

In an action of ejectment, where two Terms had elapsed since the service of the declaration, the Court refused a rule nisi for judgment against the casual ejector, although it was shewn that the delay arose from indulgence given to the tenant. (Doe dem. Panton v. Roe, 19 Law T. Rep. 92.)

The Q. B. has now also decided, in Stapleton v. Croft, 19 Law T. Rep. 88, that the wife of a party is inadmissible under the new Evidence Act. ERLE, J. alone dissented from this reading of it. He maintained, by an argument which certainly carries conviction to our mind, that the law formerly excluded the wife only on the ground of interest, as being one with her husband, and that the removal of the husband's disability on such ground is, in fact, the removal of hers also. By the by, the argument arising out of the reading of the Evidence Acts, which we have more than once explained to our readers, does not appear to have been submitted to either of the Courts in which this question has been raised. It is at least worth consideration.

In Broughton v. Jackson, 19 Law T. Rep. 89, a plea to an action for false imprisonment, and putting plaintiff in irons, stating certain suspicious facts, and that defendant believed plaintiff to be guilty of stealing certain money, and that putting in irons was a reasonable mode of detainer, was held to be a good plea after verdict found.

Answers to Queries.

RECOVERY OF DEBT IN SCOTLAND.

THE debtor (in "J. A.'s" query of LAW TIMES of May 1) can be sued only for the debt and interest, if the creditor proceed against him on the bill by the expeditious and inexpensive process peculiar to Scotland for recovering the amount of bills and notes. If the creditor proceed by an ordinary action on the English judgment he may do so, and recover the debt and costs up till judgment. He may also, perhaps, recover the costs of outlawry, if he can shew that proceeding to have been in the circumstances proper or necessary. We venture to suggest to "J. A." that there are several gentlemen, familiar with Scottish law and practice, settled in or near the Temple, who would possibly answer his query more satisfactorily than we have done. J.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

IN Anderson v. Hillies, 19 Law T. Rep. 92, where a balance was due from a broker to the owner of a vessel, which was settled between the broker and the master, if the broker offered to pay it to the master in cash, but he preferred to take it by bill, such payment was held to be good against the owner.

Two decisions in Bankruptcy are to be noted. In Re Wilson, 19 Law T. Rep. 96, Mr. Commissioner AYRTON has decided that proceedings after an adjudication of bankruptcy are not void because there exist clerical errors and omissions in the duplicate served on the bankrupt; and in Re Norwood, 19 Law T. Rep. 96, that the Bankrupt's Attorney has a lien on books deposited with him for a proper purpose prior to the act of bankruptcy.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LAW ASSOCIATION.

THE Annual General Meeting of this Association was held on Wednesday, the 21st inst. at the Offices, 8, Bedford-row. E. W. Field, esq. in the chair.

A detailed report from the committee of management was read by the secretary, Mr. W. Shaen, giving an account of the labours of the committee during the past year. After which the following resolutions were proposed and adopted:—1. That the report of the committee of management be received and adopted, and that it be printed and circulated, under the direction of the committee. 2. That the following members of the Association be elected members of the committee of management for the ensuing year. 3. That the best thanks of the association be presented to Mr. E. Benham and Mr. W. H. Ashurst, jun. for their services as auditors for the past year, and that Mr. Ashurst and Mr. W. H. Domville be requested to accept the same office for the ensuing year. 4. That the cordial thanks of the association be presented to the committee of management for their labours during the past year. 5. That the resignation of Mr. John Sudlow, as honorary secretary to the Northern Circuit Committee, has been received by the committee with much regret, and that the cordial thanks of the association be presented to him, for the zealous and able way in which he has performed the duties of the office during the past four years.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

GRAY'S INN, May 6.—Mr. William David Lewis, the Lecturer of this Society on the Law of Real Property and Conveyancing, Devises, and Bequests, having signified his intention of resigning his Office after Trinity Term next, the Masters of the Bench have issued a notice requesting that Gentlemen desirous of becoming Candidates for the Office, and who must be Barristers, will communicate their desire to that effect to the Treasurer of the Society, at the Steward's Office, South-square, on or before the last day of Trinity Term next, and that any information required upon the subject may be obtained at the Steward's Office.

THE INNER TEMPLE, April 30.—The following gentlemen were this day called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple:—Mr. Andrew Fairbairn, B.A.; Mr. John Henry Jenkinson, B.A.; Mr. James Sewell White, B.A.; Mr. Frederic George Adolphus Williams, B.A.; Mr. William Hardman, B.A.; Mr. Henry McNiven, M.A.; Mr. Alfred Henry Pechell, B.A.; Mr. Thomas Francis William Walker; Mr. Joseph Sharpe, S.C.L.; Mr. Salisbury Baxendale, B.A.; Mr. John Donald Campbell, B.A.; the Hon. George Edwin Lascelles; Mr. Rowland Jones Bateman; Mr. Francis Morgan Nichols, B.A.; Mr. Charles Gregory Wade, B A.

The dissolution is now expected to take place in the first week of June, that date being convenient for her Majesty, who intends, as soon as the close of the session sets her free, to make a marine excursion along the coast of Wales, and perhaps, also, to Ireland.—Scotsman.

THE TAXING MASTERS OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—According to a return to Parliament, printed on Monday, it appears that the annual amount of compensation, in the event of Mr. Baines, the Taxing Master of the Court of Chancery, ceasing to hold the office, is 5,403*l.* 2s. 9d. and the annual sum to be paid for seven years after his death is 2,701*l.* 11s. 5d. To Mr. Gatty, on his ceasing to hold a similar office, 5,421*l.* 14s. 1d. a-year is to be paid, and 2,712*l.* 7s. 2d. for seven years after his death. To Mr. Mills, Taxing Master, 4,935*l.* 9s. 7d. a-year is to be paid in the event of his ceasing to hold the office, and 2,467*l.* 14s. 10d a-year for seven years, to his personal representative after his death; and to Mr. Wainwright, 4,500*l* 5s. 1d. a-year, and 2,250*l.* 2s. 7d. for seven years to his representative after his death.

THE LATE SWORN CLERKS OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—It seems from a Parliamentary document (printed on Monday) that the total sums paid in salary and compensation to the four late sworn clerks (Mr. Gatty, Mr. Baines, Mr. Wainwright and Mr. Mills), appointed Taxing Masters under the Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103, to the 25th November last was 236,296*l.* 11s. 3d. of which 64,108*l.* 13s. 8d. was salary, and 172,187*l.* 17s. 7d. compensation.

PROPERTY TAX.—A Bill, which is printed, has been introduced into the House of Commons by Mr. Bernal, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. G. A. Hamilton, to continue the duties on profits arising from property, professions, trades, and offices. It provides that the several rates and duties granted under the 5th and 6th Vict. c. 35, shall be continued from the 5th of April, 1852, for one year then next ensuing, and until the assessments made, or which ought to be made, shall be completed, levied, and paid.

PROCLAMATION OF OUTLAWRY.—At the Sheriffs' Court, the following persons were called upon to surrender, under penalty of outlawry:—Joseph Benson, John Pounds, John Hugh Wadham, Pigott Smyth Pigott, the Hon. Brownlow Cecil (Lord Brownlow Cecil), George Dracato Papanicolas, John Lloyd, Alfred Lewis, Mary Sabina de Melfort (Countess de Melfort), Algernon Massingberd, Osborn H. Sampays, William H. Smith, W. David Shirreff, and William Smith.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

The Principles of the High Court of Chancery, and the Powers and Duties of its Judges: designed as the Student's First Book on Equity Jurisprudence. By T. A. ROBERTS, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

THE relative importance of the Court of Chancery has for many years past been on the increase, and its jurisdiction in some way or other affects all the most important transactions of life. Equity is no longer the humble handmaiden of the Common Law, but it is for us an important portion of the judicial system of the country, and a knowledge of its principles has become an indispensable portion of the education of the Common lawyer. Whether in years to come the separation of law and equity be abolished or not, the principles, and even the details, as already established by the decisions of the Courts, will always continue an integral branch of our jurisprudence.

The subject of legal education has of late interested the public mind, and a more philosophical spirit has already begun to prevail. It is felt that a man, to become a thorough lawyer, should be well instructed in the principles of jurisprudence, and should have a general idea of the whole system, in order the more readily to understand its different parts. The publication of Blackstone's Commentaries was the first important step in this direction, and the invariable advice to the student of the Common Law is, "read 'Blackstone' as your first book." The chapter there devoted to Equity is, however, extremely meagre; and the student is even now at a loss how to find the means of mastering the principles of Equity. The excellent treatises of KENT and STORY, it is true, are invaluable to the practitioner and the advanced student, but the beginner scarcely knows where to turn for information.

We are happy to say, however, that a little book has just been published, the object of which is to supply this deficiency, and to afford to the beginner that instruction which he can only with difficulty obtain elsewhere. Mr. ROBERTS'S Student's First Book on Equity Jurisprudence we can recommend to our readers as an able and comprehensive treatise on the principles of Equity: it gives a general idea of the whole system, and enables the student to form an idea for himself of the extent of study required of him.

History of Trial by Jury. By WILLIAM FORSYTH, M.A. late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. London: J. W. Parker and Son.

MANY circumstances conspire to give peculiar value to such a history at this time. The grand jury system is mortally stricken, a Bill being before the Legislature, introduced by a Conservative Government, to abolish it within the metropolitan districts, and being thus confessed to be worthless, it cannot linger long in the provinces. The common jury system is being seriously discredited by the remarkable testimony which the County Courts bear to the state of public opinion with respect to that much lauded institution; for we find that where a resort to it is made optional with the suitors, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred they prefer to have their causes tried by the judge alone. When we thus see the practice of men conflicting with their theory, it becomes a question of no little interest to what this difference is due; why it is that we make so great a boast of our "trial by jury," and yet individually seek to escape from it when we are permitted to do so. The anomaly results, no doubt, from confusion of terms. We recognise the value of juries in certain cases, but have not exercised due discrimination to draw the line, so as to indicate the degrees of their usefulness, and in what cases they are desirable, and when they are rather hindrances than helps to justice. In truth, they are useful to protect the liberty of the subject, and, therefore, requisite in criminal cases; but they are unfit instruments for deciding questions of disputed rights and demands between individuals. Common sense, therefore, prescribes that we should retain them in criminal cases, not because they are the best judges of the truth, but because the protection of personal liberty against the possible oppressions of power is to be preferred even to the best method of arriving at the truth; but that in civil cases it should be left to the choice of the suitors, that if they need its protection they may have it, but that if they do not require its inferior wisdom they should not be compelled to resort to it.

Mr. FORSYTH has employed great research in the gathering of the materials for his valuable volume, which every constitutional lawyer ought to read. He has contrived to make a very amusing book out of a subject which seemed to promise anything but attraction for the general reader. Not the lawyer alone will find in it much novel information, much curious narrative, and many themes for reflection; the social philosopher may glean from it facts that will be found to be fraught with instruction. The author has treated his subject very fully, tracing the jury system from its origin in the ancient tribunals of Scandinavia, through those of old Germany down to the Anglo-Saxons, and then through the Anglo-Normans to the time of the Plantagenets, when they ceased to be witnesses and became judges. He then reviews the provinces of the grand jury and the petit jury, describes the origin of the rule as to unanimity, and in distinct chapters presents accounts of the jury system in Scotland, in America, in France, and other parts of the continent. He illustrates its practice by citations from the state trials; and, in conclusion, he considers it as a social, political, and judicial institution; estimating it, as it seems to us, somewhat too highly for its direct and avowed purpose, the judging of the truth, but not overrating its worth as a safeguard for liberty, and its indirect uses as educating the middle-class in the art of self-government. The remedy we would prescribe for the prevalent aversion to a jury in civil cases is to improve their character by abolishing the special jury, and requiring all classes to serve on the common juries, being paid fairly for such service, and hence more frequent Assizes.

But for the many more urgent claims upon our space at this moment, when all the Courts are sitting, we could cull from the volume before us some interesting and instructive passages. As it is, we must be content with cordially commending it to the notice of our readers.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1852.

THE LAW REFORM BILLS.

PRESENT prospects are not promising. The Bill for the Abolition of the Masters' Offices has only just got into Committee in the Lords. There is no chance of its going through the Commons before the dissolution. The other Bills for Chancery Reform were introduced on Monday; for them there is still less hope. The Fees Bill may pass.

Of the Common Law Procedure Bill nothing is known. It is undergoing the ordeal of a Select Committee of the Lords, with what results we are not informed, but it will doubtless come out of it much changed in shape and substance. There is not to be even a pretence of an endeavour to make this law during the present Session.

Of the Copyholds Enfranchisement Bill there is some hope, unless the Lords should throw obstacles in its way. It will pass the Commons in sufficient time to become law, if the Lords are inclined to help it forwards.

As to the Charity Estates Bill, it is manifestly intended not to pass. It moves slowly: it has yet to travel through some of its more important stages in the Commons. It may be looked upon as lost for the Session.

Perhaps it is well that it should be so. A dying Parliament, whose members are thinking only of the hustings, is not competent to deal with questions that demand so much calm thought and deliberate discussion.

THE DISSOLUTION.

EVERYBODY asks when the Dissolution will take place. Everybody has a decided opinion upon it, which differs from the decided opinion of everybody else.

We, too, have our opinion, based, however, not upon any information with which we have been favoured, but upon a consideration of circumstances. There is nothing left for the House to do, save the Militia Bill. The supplies are all granted, the Mutiny Bill has passed, the Income Tax Bill only awaits the third reading in the Commons. Talkative members have said their say upon all possible and impossible topics. The annual motions on ballot, taxes, suffrage, and some other regular themes for field nights have been disposed of; the "necessary business" of the country is done, all that is now doing is unnecessary. The country is heartily sick of debates that end in nothing. The most barren Session on record must soon die of atrophy unless Lord DERBY takes alarm at the spectacle of do-nothing anility which it is exhibiting, and put a summary end to so discreditable an existence.

For these reasons we have no doubt that the Dissolution will take place in the first or second week in June.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

SOME correspondents have questioned our assertion that when a junior barrister goes into Parliament he thereby abandons his Profession, or rather his hope of making a business in it and rising by it. But our friends do not attempt to shew that it is not in fact as we stated, but only that it ought not to be so. They give good reasons why that which is deemed to be permissible in an overworked Leader should not be deemed objectionable in an underworked Junior, and to these we fully assent. But still the fact, however unpleasant to aspirants, remains unanswered and unanswerable—such is the tradition of the Profession—a prejudice probably, but not therefore to be neglected by those who do not contemplate a choice between forensic and senatorial honour, but who hope to grasp both, and to make the latter a stepping-stone to the former.

In this world we must deal with things as we find them, and not as we should wish them to be; and finding that such a prejudice exists and that it has hitherto annihilated the professional prospects of every Junior who has ever entered the House of Commons, the prudent course for our correspondents will be, to accept it as a very unpleasant fact, and take it into their account when making their final choice of a career. If they prefer senatorial enterprise, good—let them seek it; but they must not flatter themselves that they will have the other also; they will purchase the former at the price of Professional success—all past experience says so, and no new circumstances affect the calculations for the future.

The prejudice is undoubtedly to a considerable extent unreasonable, and when limited in its application to Juniors, it becomes positively absurd. But it must be admitted that it is not altogether without foundation. The work of Parliament is considerable; it demands much time and thought; attendance at the Law Courts is almost incompatible with it. It would be difficult to do justice to one without neglecting the other. The Law is a jealous mistress, and will not endure a rival, and she is peculiarly jealous of Parliament. Thus, it is not altogether a prejudice. Like most popular beliefs, it has its foundation in fact.

Our correspondents must, therefore, seek for consolation in the proud consciousness of self-sacrifice. If they give up the substantial profits of professional business, for the unsubstantial honours of the Senate, and are content to serve their country without serving themselves, they are entitled to far more esteem than the herd of members who go to Parliament simply because they have nothing else to do, or are fit for nothing else. So far from looking upon the crowd of Lawyers who are seeking seats in the House of Commons as being incited thereto by hopes of pecuniary advantage, it should be understood by the scoffers among the public, that in truth no men will enter the House with less doubtful motives, for they will do so at the sacrifice of their professional prospects, and renouncing all hopes of the substantial rewards of Westminster Hall. The public ought to know this, in justice to the Lawyers.

LAW REVERSIONARY INTEREST SOCIETY.

WE have received from Mr. EWART a positive assurance, upon his honour, that he registered his project in entire ignorance that we had already promoted, registered, and were proceeding with the formation of a Society under the same name for the same purposes.

We accept that explanation, as we are bound to do, and we are rejoiced to find that the name and plan were not, as they appeared, a plagiarism, but a coincidence; two persons chancing to hit on the same idea, only that it occurred to Mr. EWART some time after it had occurred to us, and we had published it.

The course which ought to be taken by him and the promoters is plain. Now that they have learned that their title has been anticipated, and that they are not its original inventors, they are bound in fairness to change their name. We accept their assurance that they have hitherto acted in ignorance of our prior right, and therefore we withdraw reproaches based upon the assumption that they must have known a fact which had been published to the whole Profession for two years. But if, being now informed of the fact, they should continue the appropriation innocently made at first, they will be justly exposed to the reproofs from which, so far, they have excused themselves by the explanation they have given.

DEFENCES.

SOME remarks by LORD CAMPBELL, in sentencing a prisoner who had been convicted after a defence which was an invented, and not a true one, and in which he treated that defence as an aggravation of the crime, has produced a controversy in the newspapers as to the limits of the duties of those who defend prisoners.

Is it permissible to set up a defence not true in fact? May counsel put to the jury an inference from the evidence, if he knows that the truth of the case is otherwise?

The answer is plain; he may not do so, because he is thereby asserting a falsehood, or, more properly speaking, he insinuates it, which is as bad as uttering it.

But if counsel knows that a man is guilty in fact, but the evidence, as it is presented, entirely fails to establish his guilt, may he argue that the prisoner is not guilty?

The newspapers say that he may not: but in this they fall into a fallacy. They commit the common error of confusing legal guilt with moral guilt; they forget that the object of a trial is not to determine if the prisoner is guilty, as an abstract fact, but if he is proved to be guilty according to law. The jury are sworn to try and a true verdict give, according to the evidence; therefore, if they had in their own minds the most certain assurance of the prisoner's guilt, they would be bound to acquit him if the evidence did not show him to be guilty.

The purpose of a trial defines the duties of counsel and removes the aphis position, between his duty to his client to make out the best defence for him, and his moral duty to maintain the truth only.

Counsel, therefore, may not assert the innocence of the prisoner, if he knows him to be guilty, or set up as a fact a defence which he knows not to be true; but he may, and it is his bounden duty to his client, shew by argument upon the evidence, and by inferences from it, that there is not the necessary legal proof to justify a conviction. It is never necessary to contend that he is not guilty in fact; it is sufficient to shew that he is not proved to be guilty, and this argument he may sustain by shewing that the evidence would point to other inferences, because, if it permitted of two inferences, the rule of law is, that the inference of innocence shall be assumed in preference to that of guilt.

SKETCH OF THE SCOTTISH LAW COURTS.

ARTICLE EIGHTH.

INVASIONS ON TRIAL BY JURY.

In our last paper we stated the mode in which the Scotch declaration or summons (for they are one and the same bipartite document) is framed, by whom and in what manner service is executed, and we had arrived at the stage when the defendant, having entered appearance, is ready to put in his plea.

The plea (or "the defences," as it is technically called in Scotland), is framed much in the same manner as the declaration, and is, in fact, nothing more than a counter declaration, or, in the language of the Ecclesiastical Courts, a responsive allegation. It is divided into two parts. The first consists of a series of answers, article by article, to the successive paragraphs of the declaration. These answers are often models of a sort of taciturn brevity. The fear uppermost in the mind of the pleader, who, by the way, is generally the attorney, assisted in the more difficult cases by the revisal of counsel, is always lest he should inadvertently make too liberal admissions, which once made are not allowed to be retracted. Hence the following are specimens of the curt and cautious manner in which the allegations of the declaration are answered:—"1. Denied. 2. Not known, and not admitted. 3. Admitted under reference to defendant's statement of facts. 4. Admitted that John Doe wrote the letter referred to, quoad ultra, denied," &c. It is needless to observe, that if the defendant were restricted merely to answering the plaintiff's statement in this style, no satisfactory information could be given of the particular grounds on which the defendant relies. Hence, in the second part of the plea, he is allowed to tell his own story, and make up a separate statement of facts by way of a counter-declaration, which, of course, necessarily varies considerably from that of the plaintiff. This statement is set forth, like the declaration, in articulate propositions, which are numbered consecutively, and the same qualities of brevity, pointedness, and non-argumentativeness are exacted under the penalty of future costs for impertinence. In the same manner, also, "pleas in law," which we formerly described as being appended to the declaration, are appended to the plea, containing the bare and abstract points in law on which the defence rests.

Both parties having thus stated their case, the one in the delaration (or summons), the other in the plea (or defences), the plaintiff, after perusing the plea, considers whether it would be for his advantage or not to have an opportunity of revising his declaration. If he is content to stand by it as it is, he or his counsel endorses his consent to that effect on the plea, which in fact amounts to his agreeing at once to close the record. It is, thereupon, the duty of the Master of the Court to transmit the pleadings to the Judge of the first instance for his examination. If, however, the plaintiff wishes first to revise his declaration before closing the record, then he has the power at once to do so without getting any rule of Court. He can amend his declaration in the freest manner, and he must at the same time answer seriatim that part of the plea which contains the defendant's own original and independent statement of facts. After the plaintiff has chosen thus to revise his declaration, the defendant has the corresponding power to revise his plea, and to answer any new matter that has been introduced. For the purpose of these mutual revisals, the parties can always agree without troubling the Court as to giving each other time, and in the event of a difference one of the parties may apply to the Judge, and on special cause shewn, the latter has power to grant further time once only and not oftener.

The plaintiff has thus the power to stop short after the plea is put in, and express his wish to close the record, or the parties revise their respective pleading once, in either of which events it becomes the duty of the Master of the Court to transmit the pleadings to the Judge of the first instance, whose duty in turn it becomes to examine them, and to appoint the parties to attend him at chambers within six days. Counsel generally attend on this occasion. If the Judge thinks the pleadings are not sufficiently explicit, precise, and pointed, so as to develop the issues either of fact or law, he orders certain alterations or amendments to be made within a given time. He suggests deficiencies in either party's pleading, and states how it may be remedied, or if facts are evaded without being either admitted or traversed, he may require one thing or the other to be done, and he may state whether the points in law are ample enough to cover the state of facts and to raise a proper issue. If, therefore, after these alterations have been made, or if at first the Judge found the pleadings were well framed and nothing further required to be done in the way of revising, or re-revising, he pronounces an interlocutor, closing the record. Formerly this used to be done by requiring the counsel of both parties to appear before the Judge and state their consent in writing, and in his presence, to that effect; but this was found to be a superfluous and expensive ceremony, and the Judge now declares the record closed of his own authority. If either of the parties, however, is dissatisfied, an appeal now lies to the Court of Review, whose decision is final, and who will remit the case to the Judge with whatever directions they think necessary.

As no judgment can be given on the merits of a case until the record has been closed, this is necessarily an important stage, being the limit at which the parties are foreclosed from advancing new statements or amendments. There is, however, always an exception in the event of new matter having come to light since the action was commenced. Both the plaintiff and defendant have respectively a right to set this forth as part of their pleading, and certain conditions are imposed with the view of guaranteeing bona fides, and of preventing mere negligence being the source of the ignorance alleged. Hence a much more ample provision is made for unavoidable accidents of this description than our system allows, which admits of nothing on the one side but a plea to the further maintenance, and on the other side a new assignment, which, however, is intended only to define and not to amplify the plaintiff's case.

Such being the manner in which the record is prepared and the pleadings brought to a termination in the Scottish Courts, it is now necessary to consider what provision is made for getting rid of the different issues left standing between the parties.

In any possible system of pleading the issues raised must be either issues in law, issues in fact, or both conjoined. These issues must ultimately be arrived at, either by the operations of the parties themselves proceeding according to fixed and definite rules, such as tend inevitably to that result, or the issues may be disentangled by the Judge, with the viva voce assistance of the parties. The former method is that of special pleading, and involves a higher degree of special skill on the part of the practitioners; the other is what prevails in Scotland, where the Judge supplies the methodical arrangement of the matter which the parties furnish. Special pleading consists in a series of progressive alternating statements, which promptly and gradually strip each other of all consentaneous matter, and leave outstanding a single point, which one party directly affirms and the other directly denies. The Scottish pleadings, instead of being thus plaited over each other, so to speak, consists of a single pair of ex parte statements, lying parallel, and discharged at each other broadside, without much method. The Judge, a highly skilled officer, comes to the rescue, and foreseeing the narrow issue between the disputants, tells them to clear away and extinguish the immaterial matter, by express denial and admission, so as to leave exposed the real and single points which lie at the root. The effect of the two systems is of course quite the same, the modus operandi being different. If we were to compare them to a familiar process, we should say, that taking the corpus of each lawsuit to be an arithmetical problem, special pleading is like solving the problem by algebra, both parties being bound, and supposed, to know that science; whereas in Scotland it is the Judge alone who requires to know the algebra. He translates (obviously a difficult thing) the gross arithmetical details supplied by the parties into algebraic language—he eliminates immaterial quantities—plants the positive and negative signs before their appropriate admissions and denials—and indicates the result.

Issues of law are most easily disposed of. As these are for the exclusive consideration of the Court, nothing is necessary except that they be clearly developed by the pleadings. To effect this, as we have seen, the skill of the Judge is put in requisition. He peruses the declaration and the plea: if they do not meet each other point blank—by direct denial and unqualified admission, and yet it is apparent there is no real dispute at bottom as to facts, he tells the parties who are before him what points must be either admitted or denied, before the record can be closed, and orders revisal accordingly. When the pleadings have been adjusted, and the record closed, it remains only for the Judge of the first instance to give judgment.

It is obvious that all pleas or defences to an action must, under any system of pleading, resolve themselves into the well-known division of dilatory and peremptory; pleas by way of abatement and pleas in bar. This is a distinction which exists in the nature of things, and accordingly is found in the Scotch pleading as well as our own. In Scotland, however, all kinds of pleas are pleaded at once and together, and there is no restriction as to their number. But while the number is not limited, we do not mean that it is increased by artificial rules, and that the changes are rung upon a state of facts in the licentious manner that used to prevail here, where the pleader exhausted every possible combination of assumptions under the apprehension that at least one might turn out correct. Much more regard is had to the truth of the matters pleaded, as might be expected under so liberal a discretion to amend on the part of the Judge, as well as of the parties. Hence, though the pleas are not given on oath, and emanate from the conscience, like an answer to a bill in Chancery, yet the fact of Equity and Common Law being subject to one procedure, has generated a middle course, which better reconciles the just freedom of statement which litigants ought to possess with at least a substantial regard for truth. Here a plea is a mere device to raise an issue; and what a party pleads is in no degree binding on him in an action with another person on a different subject matter. But in Scotland, much more weight is attached to a plea, and a statement contained in it is, unless the merest and most trivial inducement, admitted in evidence as a representation made by the party. While, therefore, in Scotland the defendant is allowed to plead both dilatory and peremptory pleas in a broad cast fashion, it is the business of the Judge of the first instance to marshal them, and single out the one class from the other, which is reckoned by no means an easy task. After this division has been made, the mode in which the dilatory pleas are disposed of is substantially the same as what prevails here.

With regard to issues in fact, the turn which the Scotch procedure has taken will be thought somewhat peculiar, and we are left far behind by the novelty and boldness of its innovations. We shall not allude to the history of trial by jury in Scotland, at present, further than to say, that since it was introduced in 1815, under the superintendence of a Judge trained in our courts, and acknowledged to have been well fitted for his position, it has struggled in vain to naturalise itself, and has at last degenerated into hybrid forms. The present state of the law, which on this subject has been quite revolutionised by the recent statute in 1850, is the following:—After the Judge of the first instance has examined the pleadings, as before mentioned, and ordered what amendments he thinks proper, he finds there are certain fundamental differences as to the facts outstanding between the parties, he then orders the plaintiff to prepare a draft of such issues as the latter thinks essential for his case; and in like manner he orders the defendant to prepare what issues are essential for his defence. Both parties are ordered to attend the Judge at Chambers on a future day, when the Judge receives these issues, hears counsel, if necessary, upon them, and then finally adjusts them, so as to bring out fairly the case on both side. Sometimes the adjustment of the issues is a difficult task, and a second appointment may be necessary for that purpose; and even if the parties are not satisfied with the manner in which the Judge has settled the matter, they may appeal to the Court of Review. When the issues have at last been adjusted and approved, the Judge appoints the time and place of trial, both of which conditions are regulated by the reasonable convenience of the parties, the distinctions of venue being unknown. In general, the time of trial, unless on special cause shewn, is not later than three weeks from the adjustment of the issues: the place is the metropolis, unless the expense of witnesses forbids it. The Judge of the first instance, who has superintended the case from the first, in general presides at the trial, and to him all applications are made respecting it.

Such is the ordinary way in which a case goes before a jury in Scotland, the issue being given out by the Court as it is here by the Court of Chancery. The composition of the jury, however, is the feature, which the Scotch have so boldly tampered with. In the first place the parties, if they think proper, may dispense with a jury altogether, and have the trial proceeded with as if the Judge embodied their functions in his own proper person. The same person may be both judge and jury. In cases where the expediency of such a course seems questionable to the Judge, he may relieve his conscience by reporting the wishes of the parties to the Court of Review, and if the latter offer no objection, he proceeds to gratify the litigants. On such occasions the presiding Judge is bound to take notes of the evidence, and as far as counsel and witnesses are concerned, the proceedings are the same as if twelve men were empannelled. Eight days after trial the Judge is to pronounce an interlocutor in which he must state specifically what he finds in point of fact, and either party may, within eight days thereafter, bring such interlocutor under the review of the Judge who pronounced it, and on his own notes of the evidence, and he is bound to hear the parties on the subject. He may, thereupon, either correct his interlocutor as regards the finding in fact, or grant a new trial. Otherwise such findings, in point of fact, unless they appear to have proceeded on some erroneous view of the law, are final; but either party may appeal to the Court of Review as to any question of law which may be competently raised on the evidence in the same manner as if a bill of exceptions had been tendered. Not only may the Judge thus try issues in fact which have been duly adjusted in the manner formerly described, but he may, if the parties consent, try any special facts which arise incidentally out of the pleadings, without having previously drawn up any formal issues.

A second important invasion on trial by jury consists in the parties being allowed to select their own jurors. Thus, if they agree on any one person, or any three, five, or seven, they may empanel such one or more as a jury, and proceed with the trial before the Judge in the usual way. In this case the verdict of the majority of the jury is to have the same effect as that of a unanimous jury. Either party is entitled to tender exceptions, but he is precluded from moving for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence, or any other ground implying miscarriage on the part of the jury.

Lastly, it is now competent for the Judge of the first instance to grant the united request of the parties that part or the whole of the evidence necessary may be taken by commission; and even if one of the parties object to this, the other party may move the Court of Review, and if, on considering the report of the Judge of the first instance, the Court shall grant the rule, it shall be made absolute, and the Judge shall take the evidence by commission accordingly.

These invasions on the system of trial by jury having only been recently authorised by statute, it would be premature to express any opinion as to their probable success, but we shall from time to time recur to the subject for the purpose of reporting progress upon so interesting an experiment.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

CHANCERY REFORM.

MONDAY, May 10.—The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of the Masters in Chancery Abolition Bill. He would not now occupy much of their lordships' time, because on a former occasion he had stated the general features of the measure, and future opportunities would be afforded for the due consideration of this measure in connection with another Bill brought into their lordships' House. He proposed to read the measure a second time now, and afterwards refer it to a select committee.—Lord CRANWORTH observed that no part of the recommendations of the commissioners was more in consonance with the general feeling of the public or more useful in itself than that which recommended the substantial abolition of the office of Masters in Chancery—substantial, he said, for many of their functions would still remain. He must own, however, that he did not quite concur that the mode in which it was proposed to carry out the recommendations of the commissioners was the best.—After a few words from Lord LYNDHURST and Lord CAMPBELL, the Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be referred to a select committee.—The Lord CHANCELLOR rose to lay on the table a second Bill, which proposed to carry into execution another part of the recommendations of the commissioners. This Bill contained various provisions which were deemed necessary to improve the procedure of the Court of Chancery. What he proposed to their Lordships was, that as soon as it was printed he should meet all the equity judges, and submit its clauses to their consideration. As soon as that was done, he should then move that it be read a second time, and referred to a select committee. He wished that the provisions of both Bills should be referred to a select committee, and then sent down to the other House.—After a few words from Lord LYNDHURST, the Bill was laid on the table and read a first time.—The LORD CHANCELLOR had to lay on the table a third Bill framed to provide a remedy for a defect which had been found to exist in Lord Shaftesbury's Bill, relative to the appointment of guardians of the persons and receivers of the property of lunatics.—Read a first time.—The LORD CHANCELLOR laid on the table a fourth Bill to amend Lord Lyndhurst's Bill, and enable the sale of lunatics' estates for payment of costs and debts.—Read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE BETTING OFFICES.

MONDAY, May 10.—Mr. STANFORD wished to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention had been called to the rapid increase of a species of low gambling houses, called betting houses, in all parts of the metropolis, and whether he intended to apply any legislative remedy to this evil?—Mr. WALPOLE said that his attention had been called to this subject, but he was not prepared to say that he would introduce any measure with respect to it.

PARISH CONSTABLES BILL.

WEDNESDAY, May 12.—On the motion that the House go into committee on this Bill, a conversation took place between Mr. Rice, Mr. Frewen, Sir W. Joliffe, Captain Harris, and Mr. Deedes (the promoter of the Bill), respecting a proposal made by Mr. Rice that the Bill should be postponed. Ultimately the Bill was committed pro formâ; amendments were inserted by Mr. Deedes; and Tuesday, the 25th, was named for the further consideration.

THE PROPERTY QUALIFICATION BILL.

Mr. HUME asked Mr. Hayter whether the Bill introduced under the auspices of the late Government, in reference to the abolition of the property qualification for Members of Parliament, was to be persevered with during this session. He (Mr. Hume) hoped not, for to press such a Bill would necessarily delay the dissolution.—Mr. HAYTER replied, that he had been unsuccessful in his attempts to take the sense of the House on the Bill; and at this period, and under the circumstances, he would not think it right to persevere with the Bill. He withdrew it, however, most reluctantly.—On the motion of Mr. HAYTER the order for the second reading of the Bill was discharged.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

THE last number was rich in reports of cases upon this branch of the law.

First, as to the Poor-Law. In Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Slawstone, 19 Law T. Rep. 105, it was held that in computing the fourteen days within which notice of appeal against an order of removal is to be given, where it is sent through the post, the time is to be reckoned from the date at which in due course of post the depositions would be received by the person to whom they were addressed. In Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Wickenby, 19 Law T. Rep. 105, notice of appeal against an order for maintenance of a lunatic pauper was given on June 30, after the time limited by law had expired. On July 4 a notice to produce documents was served on the appellants by the attorney for the respondents. At the trial, on July 8, the Sessions found as a fact that the notice to produce was a waiver of the irregularity in the notice of appeal. The Court held it to be a question of fact for the Sessions, which it would not review.

2ndly. On the Tithe Commutation Act. In Reg. v. Williams, 19 Law T. Rep. 105, an order of Justices, under sect. 16, recited a complaint made before them by the tenant of certain lands charged with one amount of tithe rent-charge, but belonging to two owners in several portions, that he had paid the whole, and that defendant had not paid his just proportion, stating the sums; and proceeded, "and we having examined into the merits, &c. determine that the just proportion to be contributed by the defendant is 10s. 6d. per annum," and ordered payment of the sum due and costs. This order was held to be bad, because it did not adjudicate that the matters of the complaint were true. What a farce of justice is this!

3rd. As to the Practice of Magistrates. In Reg. v. The Justices of Suffolk, 19 Law T. Rep. 167, these were the facts. One of the magistrates present at the hearing of an appeal against an order of removal was a ratepayer in the appellant parish, and during the hearing he pointed out documents and made remarks to the chairman, but he took no part in the decision of the case. Nevertheless the Court rightly held that his interference invalidated the order. Lord Campbell said, "There can be no doubt that this gentleman was an interested party, and his duty was to have withdrawn from the Bench during the hearing of the appeal. That is the example set by the Judges of the superior Courts, which magistrates at sessions would do well to follow." This should be noted in Saunders's Duties and Practice of Magistrates.

4th. On the Law of Rating. In The Justices of Bedford v. The Overseers of St. Paul's, Bedford, 19 Law T. Rep. 112, houses occupied by the governor and warden of the gaol, outside the gaol, but proper and convenient for the performance of the duties of the gaol, were held to be rateable; and in The Justices of Bedford v. The Commissioners of Bedford Improvements, 19 Law T. Rep. 112, where a local Act empowered a rate for repair of the streets to be levied "for every yard of running length in front" of buildings, and the gaol had two fronts which were accessible, but all its four sides abutted on streets, it was held to be rateable for each of its four sides.

5th. In Bastardy. In Ex parte Harrison, 19 Law T. Rep. 114, it was held to be no objection to an order of affiliation that it was made after twelve months from the birth of the child, if in fact the complaint had been duly made within that period; nor that the summons was not issued till many months after the application for it; nor that it directed payment of weekly sums for a longer period back than thirteen weeks; nor that it was made more than forty days after service of the summons, the hearing having been adjourned from time to time, and the first hearing having been in due time.

COUNTY ELECTIONS POLLS.—There has been printed, by order of the House of Commons, a Bill to limit the time of taking the poll in counties at contested elections for knights of the shire to serve in parliament in England and Wales to one day. By the Reform Act two days were allowed, but now it is proposed to limit the time as in borough elections to one day, from eight o'clock to four o'clock. The Bill was brought forward by Lord R. Grosvenor and Mr. B. Denison.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

AGAIN the Court of Appeal has refused to compel specific performance of an agreement to take lands at a price for the purpose of a railway, on condition of the seller abandoning his opposition to the bill, the railway not being made through the land in question, and therefore the company not requiring it, leaving the plaintiff to his remedy at law. The reasons were, that complete relief might be obtained at law if the parties were entitled to any, and the principle of mutuality wholly failed. The facts, in the present case, did not vary much from those in the former one, but we are glad to see so just a principle established against one of the most inequitable rules that ever a Court of Equity had promulgated. (Lord James Stuart v. the London and North Western Railway Company, 19 Law T. Report, 99.)

A shareholder cannot transfer his shares until all calls due upon them are paid. In Hall v. the Norfolk Estuary Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 101, the secretary had refused to register a deed of transfer of such shares. It was held that he had rightly done so. "The effect," said COLERIDGE, J. "of s. 16, is, that whilst calls remain unpaid the shareholder has no right to transfer them; and as on the 13th of March a call was unpaid, the deed of transfer of that date is altogether void for the purpose of registration by the company."

A question on the validity of a transfer of shares in a mining company, and of subsequent liabilities, was raised in Northey v. Johnson, 19 Law T. Rep. 104. The defendant was a shareholder in a mine, conducted on the cost-book principle. He had, by word of mouth only, agreed to transfer his shares to another partner, who had agreed to take them. He was held not to be liable for goods subsequently ordered by the superintendent. But it should be observed that this was decided upon the special circumstances of the case, and not upon any general principle recognised by the Court as to the right so to transfer shares.

In Reg. v. The Liverpool, &c. Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 108, a mandamus to register the transfer of shares was refused, where the project had been virtually abandoned, the compulsory powers expired, and it appeared that the object of the purchaser was not the bonâ fide one of becoming owner of shares, but of opposing the company, and assisting the purchaser's father, who had taken proceedings against it in Equity.

An important case on the liability of railways to keep fences in repair, was that of Ricketts v. The East and West-India Docks, &c. Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 109. Sheep had escaped from the plaintiff's close through his own fence into the close of A. and thence through the fence of the railway company into the railway where they were killed by a train, and for this the action was brought. The Railways Consolidation Act, s. 68, requires railway companies "to make and maintain sufficient fences for separating the land taken for the use of the railway from the adjoining land not taken, and for protecting such land from trespass, or the cattle of the owners or occupiers thereof from straying thereout." It was held that this extended only to fencing against the owners or occupiers of adjoining lands, and not against strangers. And also that the obligation imposed by the statute to keep fences, is only only co-extensive with the common law obligation.

CAMERON'S COALBROOK AND LOUGHOR RAILWAY.—On Monday, a general meeting in this matter was held before Master in Chancery Richards, to settle the list of shareholders liable to contribute to discharge the company's liabilities. Mr. Roxburgh and Messrs. Galsworthy appeared for Mr. Turquand, the official manager; Mr. Taylor for the petitioners and other shareholders; and Mr. Lewis for the seceding shareholders. The Master placed 138 shareholders on the list, and adjourned the consideration of the remainder, consisting of what are termed the seceding shareholders, who dispute their liability from a certain date, until 7th June next.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

OUR readers will peruse with peculiar interest the judgment in Munro v. Taylor, 19 Law T. Rep. 97, which was a case of specific performance. A. had agreed to sell to B. premises partly freehold and partly leasehold, the latter being held under a renewable lease from an ecclesiastical corporation. Before the contract A. had applied to renew, and the lessors required a plan of the premises to be inserted in the new lease. After the contract, a plan was found of an old surrendered lease of 1810, in which the quantity was stated to be two roods. The lessors insisted that this was incorrect, and that the quantity should be ascertained by measurement, and refused to grant the lease unless the words were omitted "of the superficial quantity of two roods." Upon that B. refused to complete the sale, and A. filed a bill for specific performance. The lease was held sufficiently to shew the dimensions, but that such uncertainty was not an objection to specific performance. Nor was it an objection to a decree that the description of the property in the contract was, "partly leasehold and partly freehold." But that the vendor was bound to shew the purchaser what is leasehold and what freehold.

Another case of specific performance, is that of Gregory v. Wilson, 19 Law T. Rep. 102. It was an agreement to take a piece of land, and build a house, and to repair and insure it, the lease to contain a proviso for re-entry, on nonpayment of rent, or non-observance of the covenants. A draft lease was prepared, which the tenant perused, and made pencil-marks upon, but none was executed. The tenant entered, built, and had thirty years' possession. He did not insure nor pay rent. The landlord gave notice that he should proceed by ejectment for the breach of covenants. The lessee had died, and his representatives filed a bill to restrain the action, and praying specific performance, which was refused, because, if the lease had been made, it might have been determined for the breach of covenants.

Doe dem. King v. Grafton, 19 Law T. Rep. 108, was a question on the law of Landlord and Tenant. On April 19th, by agreement, premises were let at the yearly rent of 12*l.* payable quarterly, the first payment of 7*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* to be made on the 24th of June next, being the proportion of rent due up to that time. The lessee to hold until one of the parties should give the other six months' notice to quit, and at the expiration of "any" such notice, to leave the premises in as good condition, &c. This was held to be a half-yearly tenancy, commencing from the 24th of June, and a notice to quit given at Midsummer and expiring at Christmas to be valid. Heap v. Barton, 19 Law T. Rep. 110, was another case in the same branch of the law. A. a mortgagee, who had dealt with the defendants as yearly tenants, demanded possession. On February 4, the tenants, B. and C. disclaimed the tenancy. Upon this A. brought ejectment. On February 19, A. by agreement, undertook not to issue the writ of possession until the 25th of March, on condition of B. and C. not appearing to the action. B. and C. afterwards removed tenant's fixtures, for which an action was brought against them, and it was held, that they were not entitled to do so.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—In a certain district in the county of Norfolk, called Marshland, there are (which is not generally known) seven large and extensive parishes, in which are divers manors, comprising several hundred messuages, cottages, and acres of land of copyhold tenure of the custom of gavelkind, as in Kent, descending in case of intestacy to all the sons or brothers, as the case may happen, equally as co-heirs; and numerous instances of such descent are recorded on the Court Rolls, and one occurred the other day by the accidental death of a copyhold tenant, who has left three brothers his co-heirs in gavelkind.

I shall feel obliged by any of your numerous readers informing me whether, in case the present Enfranchisement Bill, now before Parliament, should pass into a law, whereby the above copyhold estates will become freehold, the same will in all future cases of intestacy descend to the eldest, in exclusion of all the other gavelkind sons or brothers; thereby altering the ancient customary law of descent in the above manors. A LORD OF A GAVELKIND MANOR.

INCUMBERED ESTATES COMMISSION (IRELAND).—A Parliamentary paper, printed by order of the House of Commons, contains a return of the proceedings of the Commissioners for the sale of Incumbered Estates in Ireland, from their commencement up to the present time. The amount of sales, provincially arranged, was—Leinster, 1,325,896*l.*; Munster, 1,698,487*l.*; Ulster, 950,135*l.*; Connaught, 708,357*l.* The number of estates, or parts of estates, sold was 559; the number of lots was 2,968; and of statute acres, 698,328. The total amount distributed up to Jan. 31, 1852, was 2,002,803*l.*, including 237,931*l.* allowed to incumbrancers who became purchasers; and from that time to the 9th of March, 1852, including 39,496*l.* allowed to purchasers who were incumbrancers, was 245,655*l.*, making a total allowed to incumbrancers of 277,428*l.* There were 739 purchasers to the value of 1,000*l.* and under; 315 to the value of from 1,000*l.* to 2,000*l.*; 387 from that amount to 5,000*l.*; 130 from 5,000*l.* to 10,000*l.*; 69 to the amount of 10,000*l.* and upwards.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

ONE case in County Courts Law was reported last week. In Stansfield v. Hellawell, 19 Law T. Rep. 112, the judge of a County Court took the replevin bond required by the 127th section of the County Courts Act to himself, instead of to the other party to the action, as thereby required. It was held that the judge might nevertheless sue upon it, being treated as a trustee; also, that by declaring in the court above, the other party had waived the irregularity.

In Insolvency, there is one important case to County Court practitioners. In Re Costa, 19 Law T. Rep. 116, it was held that a prisoner who has been already legally discharged by his detaining creditor, may be discharged by the Court.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In the case of Owens v. Breese, reported in 17 Law T. 285, it was decided, that although the County Court, as established by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, is a Court of Record, yet that it was not such for all purposes, and not such as was contemplated by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 17. I beg to doubt the correctness of this decision, and my reason for so doing is, that by the 19th section of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, power is given to any judge or deputy judge of any County Court before whom any writ of trial from any of the Superior Courts shall be executed, to commit any person who shall appear to him to have been guilty of wilful or corrupt perjury in any evidence given before him, and give a certificate to entitle the prosecutor to the costs of the prosecution. Now this enactment, I submit, would be wholly superfluous if a writ of trial could not be directed to and executed before a judge of such County Court. I am, Sir, yours, &c. J. S.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

COMMON LAW.—Another case has been decided on Inspection of Documents, under the Evidence Act. A railway company answered to a mandamus to make a railway that they had no funds. The prosecutor pleaded that the company had funds, and on this issue was joined. The affirmative being with the prosecutors, they were held to be entitled to inspect, and take extracts from all the books of the company relating to the matter in question. (Reg. v. The York and North Midland Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 108.)

When plaintiff joined issue to a plea of nul tiel record, and gave notice on Saturday of his intention to produce the record on the following Monday, it was held to be sufficient notice. (Macquire v. Kincaid, 19 Law T. Rep. 113.)

An interesting case on the Law of Attorneys is that of Whitehead v. Lord, 19 Law T. Rep. 113. When is an attorney entitled to maintain an action for his fees? "Until some communication is made by the attorney to his client, or the suit determined, an action cannot be brought," said POLLOCK, C.B. "The attorney," said PARKE, B. "is to bring the suit to a determination as far as he can . . . or on reasonable notice that he should discontinue the suit unless supplied with funds." The Statute of Limitations will, therefore, now only form such a determination of the suit.

In Small v. Batho, 19 Law T. Rep. 115, it was held by WIGHTMAN, J. that a party cannot claim the costs of having qualified a witness to give evidence, as for loss of time by witnesses engaged in searching after defendant in order to identify him.

A case of considerable hardship to a party occurred in Earl v. Dowling, 19 Law T. Rep. 115. A cause stood No. 6 on the list. It was reached in due course before eleven o'clock. Neither defendant's attorney nor counsel was present, and it was taken as undefended, and a verdict given for the plaintiff. A new trial was refused even on payment of costs, although defendant swore that he was present with his witnesses, because no reasonable cause had been assigned for the absence of the attorney.

A case of considerable interest on the practice with respect to Bills of Exceptions, is reported from the House of Lords (Hutchinson v. Ferrier, 19 Law T. Rep. 116); but it is not necessary to repeat here the points decided: it should, however, be noted in the reader's text book on the Law of Evidence.

EDUCATION OF ATTORNEYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—After reading your article of the 1st inst. on legal education, I cannot refrain from offering a few observations on the education of attorneys. You say—"The same establishment of teachers, the same institutions, might serve for both branches of the Profession, at one expense; both should be members of the same University," &c. Looking at the present practice of attorneys, I must say that a university education is not the education required for that class; and that to compel the attendance, in any particular place, for any particular time (merely to obtain a theoretical knowledge), of persons studying to practise as attorneys, would impede rather than promote their education as practical lawyers. Besides, a university education cannot be applied in directing the study of the practical lawyer in the first instance—it can only be used to give a theoretical finish to his practical knowledge. It matters little where barristers reside during their term of study, inasmuch as they want no local training; but one-half of the education of attorneys is to be had in that place only in which they intend to practise.

All persons in any manner interested in the well-being of the legal profession, will, however, admit that a better standard of education than that at present possessed by attorneys would be of considerable advantage to the Profession, not only in practice as individuals, but as a means of raising that branch of the liberal sciences of which they are members, to its equitable position in the estimation of the public.

The principal question is, how is this object to be attained? I speak of attorneys only, and for them, I think, something may be done to improve the system of instruction, by adding theory to practice, without taking them from practice.

The point at which I will start, is the examination previously to admission. I would suggest that this examination be much stricter than it is, and that each candidate be examined orally on his written answers. This I would require for the ordinary examination necessary for admission as an attorney.

If either of the candidates wish to go beyond this, let him be at liberty to take up there and then, without more expense than a small fee for examination, a degree of Bachelor of Laws, or, if competent, the degree of Doctor of Laws; or let him try for a studentship, as is suggested for Barristers, of 100*l.* or so, and be eligible for examination for those degrees, without any certificate from the universities, so that he may pursue the study necessary for his examination without interruption of his usual office business. I think, were this plan adopted, many students would avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded them of obtaining an honorary distinction in the Profession, and would cheerfully employ their leisure hours in obtaining that knowledge of the classics which would be necessary thereto, though at present neither their time nor means admit of their attending even a local college, for the purpose of obtaining the necessary certificate, much less the University of Oxford, Cambridge, or London. The distinctive honours, also, will be brought before the minds of the students for a period of five years, and will in many cases promote a thirst for knowledge which, under the present regulation, they have not.

A practical local knowledge is what attorneys chiefly want, and a more strict examination on something like the present system will answer for an ordinary lawyer; but, if legal education is to be promoted, it should be encouraged, and a reward given to the diligent student who, without money, has gained the required knowledge, rather than to the idle spendthrift whose riches have brought him to despise it.

No one connected with the Profession, who has read your continued articles on legal education, can fail to foresee the advantage which must ultimately result from your constantly keeping the subject in view; nor can it be denied that the education of attorneys as well as barristers should be put on a better footing. The education of attorneys should be encouraged: this, however, cannot, in my opinion, be done by sending them to colleges, and I hope it will not be attempted, but it may be by a five years' compulsory service under articles, with a strict compulsory examination, partly written and partly oral, added to a voluntary honorary examination. The theoretical university education is, doubtless, suited to the barrister. The practical local education is that which is alone suited to the attorney.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

FEW questions have produced more litigation, or upon which a greater number of cases are to be found in the books, than as to what constitutes an agreement requiring a stamp, and what is an agreement for sale of goods, exempt from stamp. In Chatfield v. Cox, 19 Law T. Rep. 104, A. was indebted to B. B. wrote to A. requesting him to supply C. with goods to the amount of his debt, and charge same to his credit. A. wrote, "In consideration of the above, I agree to supply goods to your order." This was held to be an agreement for sale of goods, and therefore not subject to stamp.

Lloyd v. Oliver, 19 Law T. Rep. 108, was a question on a bill of exchange. In an action by indorsee against acceptor, the instrument was in this form. "London, July 17, 1851. Two months after date I promise to pay to E. R. L. or order, 99*l.* 16*s.* value received." Signed H. O. In the corner was the defendant's name, and his acceptance was written across the instrument. It was held that, as against the drawer, it might be treated either as a bill or a note, and that it might have been treated as a bill even before it was accepted, because it was directed to J. E. O.

In Smith v. Winter, 19 Law T. Rep. 111, it was decided that where it had been agreed that the amount due on a settlement of accounts, should be carried to next account, and worked out, it was a good answer to an action brought on a subsequent account, under the general issue.

The Court was divided in opinion upon a very nice point in Thomas v. Cross, 19 Law T. Rep. 114. Defendant being indebted to plaintiff on a bill of exchange then due, for 25*l.* handed to him 9*l.* and another bill for 17*l.* in payment. Plaintiff kept the 9*l.* but returned the bill, refusing to take both in payment, or to return the 9*l.* The question was, whether the 9*l.* so paid was a payment of part of the debt, or could only be treated as a set off. The Court was equally divided, so that there was no rule. On the one side it was said that plaintiff had no right to keep the money if he did not receive it as payment, and that having kept it, it was not competent to him now to repudiate the payment. On the other, that the plaintiff did not take it on the bargain, as it was offered, and the defendant could have brought an action to recover it back.

THE LAW AND THE LAWYERS.

LIMITS AND ABUSES OF ADVOCACY.

(From the Examiner.)

WITH reference to the remarks made by us last week upon a recent judgment of Lord Campbell's,—in which he denounced the criminal's defence as an aggravation of his crime, and yet found no fault with the professional advisers by whom it was got up,—a much respected correspondent asks what a barrister is to do in such cases; and whether we are prepared to lay it down as a rule "that no advocate should attempt to persuade a jury to believe that of which he is not himself satisfied."

If this question were asked by way of objection to what we said, it would be enough to reply, that whatever it may be the advocate's duty to do in such cases, there is one thing which it is his duty not to do. He ought not to do that which was done in the case to which we referred,—and is done, we may add, in almost every case of the kind where the woman is the injured party; he ought not to assist in a proceeding, the object or effect of which is to add a fresh injury to the injury already inflicted. If a particular line of defence be one which the accused party is not justified in pursuing, it is also one which his legal adviser is not justified in suggesting, advising, preparing, or maintaining. That the defence in question was one of this description, we assumed upon the authority of Lord Campbell; that the question whether it should or should not be set up, depended not upon the client, but upon his professional advisers, we assumed as a thing notorious. With what branch or what individual member of the profession the responsibility rested, we did not presume to determine, and therefore mentioned no names. We assumed only that it rested among them; and that it concerned the honour of the Bar to justify the act if it can be justified, or to denounce it if it cannot.

Now it may be that Lord Campbell was wrong in this case. It may be that the witnesses spoke the truth, or what the attorney believed to be the truth; it may be that the counsel acted upon instructions which he was not at liberty to disobey. If so, let it be said so. All we know at present is, that, according to the report in the newspapers, a gross injury has been committed; that it has been committed, if not by the advice, at least by the consent and help, of the members of a profession which claims to be considered an honourable one; yet that nothing has been said or done to make those who were concerned in it feel that they have done wrong, or to deter them from doing the same thing to-morrow. Without pretending to determine generally the lawful limits of advocacy, we can have no doubt that, if this report be correct, they have in this instance been transgressed.

We do not, however, understand our correspondent as meaning to dispute this conclusion. We understand him rather as wishing to follow the inquiry up by raising the larger and more difficult question, which stands next in order. What ought to be the rule of duty for an advocate in defending a bad case? Ought he to be forbidden to argue in favour of the side which he himself believes to be wrong? To this we can have no hesitation in answering, no. We believe that the true ends of justice are best served by having each side of the case presented successively to the jury, by a man whose special duty it is to make the most that can fairly be made of all the arguments on that side.

But what, we shall be asked again, is the most that can fairly be made? Who shall draw the line between what is fair in an argument, and what is unfair?

To this we reply by another question. How is the line drawn between fair and foul dealing in the ordinary business of life? Is it not by the common sense and natural justice of ordinary men, when allowed to express itself naturally and freely? When we see a man trying to cheat his neighbour, we dislike him, and shew that we dislike him by looks and words; and when he sees the same dislike in the faces of all around him, he is ashamed of himself and desists. Why should not lawyers, when they see one of their brethren bullying a witness in order to perplex his evidence, or endeavouring by sophistry to make a jury believe something which is not true, express their disapprobation in the same way? In extreme cases, they do so; and their disapprobation has its natural effect; for such extreme cases are very rare. Why should not every lawyer do it, in every case where he feels that wrong is done? Upon their own points of honour, barristers are as sensitive as other men. What imputation does a lawyer fear more than that of having done something which is "unprofessional?" Let it then be considered "unprofessional" in an advocate to defend a cause by the evidence of witnesses whom he has reason to believe perjured, or by reasoning which he feels to be false, and which, therefore, he cannot hope to make tell in his favour except by misleading and abusing the understandings of the jury. Let all lawyers feel that it is due to their own character, conscience, and profession, to express their dislike of such practices; let the judges especially, who have the best means of understanding where fair play ends and foul play begins,—under whose eyes these iniquities are practised, and whose deliberate discountenance, which ought to be only the natural expression of their inward aversion, would have such great effect in checking them,—let the judges use the authority of their place for the same purpose; and we will answer for it that the abuses of advocacy will begin at once to abate, and will in the end be indefinitely reduced both in quality and quantity. The line between fair and unfair will be drawn,—not exactly, indeed, not in express words, nor for every possible case, but justly in the main,—according to that common sense of right and wrong with which all men are endowed.

We cannot illustrate our meaning better than by an anecdote, for the truth of which we can vouch; and which, as affording an instance of the highest conduct at the Bar, ought to be recorded as well for his honour who practised it, as for an example to the Profession.

Lord Truro, when at the Bar as Mr. Serjeant Wilde, was retained to defend a person accused of a crime depending on the oath of a single witness, the accuser. Mr. Serjeant Wilde accepted the brief, and prepared for the trial. At the consultation he was told that the accused, thinking probably that he would be safer if his counsel knew the real truth, had confessed that the charge was true. "Then," said Mr. Serjeant Wilde, "I cannot hold his brief; you must take it elsewhere:" adding, in answer to the surprise of his informant at so unusual a scruple, these words, or words to this effect: "The single question at the trial will be, Is the defendant guilty? or is the witness perjured?—I will not defile my mind by attempting to persuade a jury that a witness is perjured whom I know to be speaking the truth."

Now this is precisely the conduct which we wish to see expected of every barrister. We wish to see such scruples not unusual,—matters of course, not matters of surprise. What Mr. Serjeant Wilde did, every lawyer might do; and if every lawyer would but take the same course himself, and applaud it when taken by another,—each according to the light of his own conscience,—we are convinced that we should soon cease to hear of the abuses on which we have been commenting.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. John Stuart, jun. of Lincoln's-inn, barrister-at-law (son of Mr. John Stuart, Q.C. member for Newark), to be his secretary-in-chief, in the place of Mr. Simmons.

The Right Hon. Sir John Jervis has appointed William Wilding, of Montgomery, in the county of Montgomery, gent. to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Montgomery, also in and for the county of Salop.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

NEW ORDER OF COURT.—INVESTMENT OF DIVIDENDS AND ACCUMULATIONS.

The 4th day of May, 1852.

WHEREAS under and by virtue of an Act, passed in the 36th year of the reign of his Majesty King George the Third, chap. 52, intituled An Act for repealing certain Duties on Legacies and shares of Personal Estates and for granting other Duties thereon in certain Cases, and of An Act passed in the 37th year of the reign of his said Majesty, chap. 135, to explain and amend the said Acts, it is enacted that monies paid in under the first-recited Act into the Bank of England with the privity of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery, when paid in, be laid out by the said Accountant-General without any formal request for that purpose in the purchase of Bank 3*l.* per cent. Annuities. By virtue of the powers contained in the last mentioned of the said Acts, and of all other powers enabling him in that behalf. The Right Honourable Edward Burtenshaw, Lord St. Leonards, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, doth hereby order and direct that the Accountant-General be at liberty, unless he shall have received on behalf of some party claiming to be entitled, notice in writing of an intended application to the Court for otherwise disposing of the fund, from time to time to lay out and invest the Dividends on such Stock when so purchased, and all Accumulations thereon as the same shall accrue due, in the purchase of like Bank 3*l.* per cent. Annuities, without any formal request for that purpose, and place the Stock purchased with such Dividends to the said several matters and accounts to which the original sums of Stock respectively stand, and the Accountant-General is to declare the trust thereof when purchased, subject to the further order of this Court, and for the purposes aforesaid the Accountant-General is to draw on the Bank according to the forms prescribed by the Act of Parliament and the General Rules and Orders of the Court in that case made and provided.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

WEST RIDING LAW SOCIETY.

INAUGURATION OF THE PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PITT, ESQ.

IT having been decided by the members of the West Riding Law Society to present the lady of their respected honorary secretary, Thomas Pitt, esq. of this town, with a portrait of that gentleman, as a token of the esteem and regard in which Mr. Pitt is held by the Profession throughout the West Riding, the duty of presenting the portrait to Mr. Pitt's children and grandchildren (Mrs. Pitt herself being confined to her bed by indisposition) was performed on Thursday last, when Thomas Badger, esq. of Rotherham (the president of the society), A. G. Eastwood, esq. of Todmorden, one of the vice-presidents; M. Sykes, esq. C. S. Floyd, esq. M. Kidd, esq. and W. Dransfield, esq. waited upon Mr. Pitt at his residence for the purpose of formally presenting this token of their esteem. The portrait in question, which is a full-length, is from the easel of Mr. Hemingway, of Robertown, and is admirable for its facile resemblance and truthfulness, while as a work of ark it is all that could be desired. We may add that Mr. Pitt has been the honorary secretary of this important society since the year 1819, when he was mainly instrumental in its establishment; he has now been forty-nine years connected with the Profession, and has attended at Pontefract Sessions for the last forty-six years, without ever being once absent. To mark their sense of his high integrity and zeal in the discharge of his public duties, this society presented Mr. Pitt with a handsome silver cup in the April of 1822, which graced the board on this gratifying occasion, and out of which the deputation pledged Mr. Pitt, his lady, and family. Mr. Pitt received the deputation in the drawing-room, where the painting had been suspended, surrounded by a large "family party," embracing children and grand-children, to whom, in the absence of Mrs. Pitt by indisposition, the presentation was made by the president of the society, who spoke evidently under deep emotion.

The PRESIDENT (Thomas Badger, Esq. of Rotherham), turning to Mr. Pitt's family, who had assembled in the drawing-room, said: "As president for this year of the West-Riding Law Society, of which I have been a member for more than thirty years, and not from any merit of my own, the pleasant duty has devolved upon me of paying a highly-deserved compliment to one whose path in life you have many years cheerfully shared. No one will feel more worthy pride, more deep and true satisfaction at this proof of the high estimation in which her husband is held, than the wife who has lightened, by dividing with him, all the trials of life, and from whose affection (as all men must do) he has derived much of the determination and perseverance with which he has been able to overcome the obstacles, at one time or other, besetting every man's path. Your husband, in his continued intercourse for many years, principally with a class of men who, from their profession, must necessarily possess some amount of discrimination and insight into character, and possibly less of that 'charity which endureth all things,' has earned and maintained a character for integrity and urbanity which has won for him the respect and esteem of all with whom he has come into contact. During many years in which your husband was engaged in the public business of this great riding as the representative of that highly-respectable firm (Messrs. Foljambe and Dixon), in his official capacity as high constable, and in his more private post as secretary to the West Riding Law Society, which he has held for about 32 years, he has proved himself an excellent man of business, and has secured the esteem, respect, and confidence of all parties. As an acknowledgement of these services, we wish you to accept at our hands this portrait of your husband, which is painted by Mr. Hemingway, one who stands deservedly high in his profession. We wish you to consider this as the most honourable vehicle which we could devise for the expression of our respect and esteem for your husband. Could we have decided upon one more complimentary to you or to him, it would have been adopted. But we feel certain that you will agree with us on this point, that you will set a high value upon this picture, and that you, your children, and your grandchildren will look upon it with those deep emotions of pleasure with which a good wife and an affectionate family always regard any token of the high estimation which the devoted husband and father has secured from those around him. That you and your husband may happily pass many more years together, cheered by the delight of the happy family I see around me, cheered also by the conviction of possessing the respect and esteem of your numerous friends, is, I am certain, the unanimous wish of the large body of gentlemen of whom to-day I have the honour to be the sincere though unworthy spokesman. We will, if you please, gentlemen, with every good wish, drink in a bumber the health of Mr. and Mrs. Pitt."

The other members of the deputation having joined their good wishes with those of the president for Mrs. Pitt's speedy recovery, and with hearty good wishes for the success in life of his wife and family,

Mr. PITT rose to respond, but, after the utterance of a few words, he was overcome by emotion; and, at the request of the deputation, Mr. Cousins, his son-in-law, read the following reply in his behalf:—

"Mr. President and Gentlemen,—I am afraid you will make me proud—there you see that splendid and shining memorial before you (a silver cup) that was presented to me thirty years ago by your society, and you are now following that kindness up by a second memorial. Gentlemen, this portrait of myself to my wife is invaluable. How am I to express my feelings on the part of her, my children, and grandchildren, and of myself for this repeated token of your kind favour? I can better conceive in my mind than speak of it with my tongue, how it should be done than do it. You, sir (Mr. Badger), thirty years ago, were on the committee to present the cup, and here you are now, I hope in good health. Gentlemen, be pleased to accept the warmest thanks of my wife through me, she being very unwell, and not able to meet you to return her personal thanks for this splendid portrait. My children and grandchildren also wish me, on their part, to express the same kind feeling. You all know that I am an old servant and officer of the West Riding, having served as such for half a century (save one year), i. e. nearly twenty years in the office of the Clerk of the Peace, and thirty years as the High Constable of the Upper Division of Agbrigg. I believe I am the oldest officer that attends the Sessions. I may say that all the magistrates that were then (in 1803) upon the list as acting magistrates, are deceased, with the exception of Mr. Hugh Parker. The Bar during that period has had many changes, as also the attorneys. Now, gentlemen, my time is getting near a close: how uncertain whether I shall ever meet you again at Pontefract Sessions, where I have attended the court with very great pleasure for forty-six years, without being absent once; but three score years and eleven are past, and my shadow is going down. I have the greatest reason to be thankful to a kind Providence for the good degree of health I have enjoyed. I would here (though late) add that I have always received the kindest attention from the Bench, Bar, and the Profession, during the whole period. Gentlemen, I will now conclude by expressing my earnest wishes for the prosperity of the West Riding Law Society."

At the conclusion of these interesting proceedings, the deputation, with Mr. Pitt, and several other members of the society, adjourned to the George Hotel, where the annual dinner of the society took place, under the able presidency of Mr. Badger, the vice-chair being occupied by Mr. Eastwood, one of the vice-chairmen of the society. The repast was of the most sumptuous character, and served up in Mrs. Wigney's well-known style of profusion and taste. After the cloth had been drawn, the usual loyal, professional, and complimentary toasts were given from the chair, and elicited brilliant addresses from the professional gentlemen present, and after doing justice to the ladies and "our noble selves," the proceedings terminated in the most harmonious and agreeable manner.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

RESIGNATION OF THE LORD JUSTICE GENERAL OF SCOTLAND.—The Right Hon David Boyle, of Shewalton, has resigned the conjoint offices of Lord Justice General of Scotland and Lord President of the Court of Session, which he has held since the retirement of the late Right Hon. Charles Hope, of Granton, in 1841. Various rumours are in circulation as to the probable changes his lordship's retirement may occasion among the legal dignitaries of Scotland, but that which obtains most general credence is, that the Right. Hon. John Hope, Lord Justice Clerk, will be promoted to the highest legal offices, and which were for a long time filled by his late father; that Lord Colonsay (formerly Duncan M'Neill, M.P.) will be appointed Lord Justice Clerk; and that Adam Anderson, esq. Lord Advocate, will be elevated to the Bench.

APPEALS TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS.—The Lord Chancellor was unable, from indisposition, to preside in the House of Lords on Tuesday, but, in justice to his lordship it should be stated that it was with the greatest reluctance he relinquished his intention of sitting, and that, by his express direction, every precaution was taken to prevent any inconvenience to the various individuals concerned in the hearing of the causes appointed for that day, and due information was, at the earliest possible moment, conveyed to the agents in those causes.

DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT.

WE believe we are correct in stating that the Dissolution, so long protracted, will take place on the 20th of June. It will be seen that the Charitable Trusts Bill is finally abandoned for the session.

POSITION AND PROSPECTS OF THE BAR.

A JUNIOR has published his lamentations upon the present state and prospects of the Bar, with some suggestions for staying the decline that has begun, and the fall that is impending. (a)

He asserts the undeniable fact, that the mass of the business has flown from Westminster Hall to take refuge in the County Courts; that of the business that remains Juniors can have but a small share, because its importance compels the Attorney to intrust it only to the experienced. Hence, a Junior has now no opportunity for learning his business, and acquiring the experience necessary for the conduct of such heavier cases as yet linger in the superior Courts, while the prohibitory clause of the County Courts Act has practically excluded him from the Courts whither the smaller business has gone. The consequence is, that the Bar no longer offers to its younger members even the hope of a maintenance. A Junior cannot live, much less thrive, by his profession. The future promises no improvement. If it is bad now, it will be worse hereafter.

In these desperate circumstances, our Junior comes forward with a pamphlet, promising some suggestions, by which he proposes to prop the falling fortunes of the Bar, and as in extremis, when the wisest confess themselves baffled, every adviser is entitled to a hearing, we submit these hints to the consideration of our readers.

First, he proposes that the expenses of going to the Bar should be diminished. In this we cannot agree with him. There is no profession so cheaply entered. If anything, its cheapness is a defect, to be amended by increasing the cost. The cheapness of the Bar has made it a sort of refuge for the destitute; the resort of those who cannot set up any other calling. A man can be called to the Bar, at an expense of less than 200*l.* True, that other larger expenses are usual, but they are not necessary. Chambers are not requisite to studentship, nor is pupillage with a conveyancer or a pleader an indispensable preliminary to a call. To eat sixty dinners, deposit 100*l.* and pay some 40*l.* of term fees, is the sum of disbursements that constitutes a qualification. All beyond this is luxury. Our Junior sets down the total cost at 1,700*l.*; but he includes in this a college education, which is not only not necessary, but is not, in fact, enjoyed by one in three of all who are called to the Bar. If, indeed, the writer were correct in his estimate, we should be the better pleased, for such an outlay would much tend to diminish the superfluous members, and to increase the fading respectability of the Bar.

With more justice he complains of the extravagant cost of Chambers and of other expenses which, after his call, are necessary to his practice. But even here he exaggerates the cost. "The garrets," he says, "in the highest part of the buildings in the most inaccessible courts will command sums averaging from 35 to 50 guineas annually." We know not on what data this calculation is based, but we do know many Chambers, very decent but small, the rents of which vary from 15*l.* to 25*l.*

He proposes that all these expenses should be reduced. But suppose the rent of Chambers diminished by one-fourth, the condition of the Bar would not be much improved. The complaint is not that the expenses are disproportioned to the business, but that there is no business to maintain the expenses. No change in the costs of Counsel will help him; he wants some practical hints for bringing back the business that has passed away from him.

As to Quarter Sessions, our Junior thinks that nothing is to be got out of them. "It takes," he says, "a very great number of briefs to make up the sum of fifty or seventy guineas."

There remains for the young Barrister nothing but the County Courts. But County Courts' fees are not better than those of Quarter Sessions, and it will take an equal number of briefs to make up a like sum there. Still, says our Junior, though not profitable, "they may be the means of bringing many a young man into notice." But, we ask, what is the use of his getting into notice if there is no business to be obtained by notoriety? And when the question is, How is he to live? is it not disappointing to be told only that the utmost he can hope for is the opening to him of "more frequent opportunities of developing his talents,"—without profit, and without object?

The writer then reviews the various propositions that have been already before the Profession for regulating the practice of advocacy in the County Courts, and he agrees with us in condemnation of all of them, as fraught with danger to the character of the Bar, and in conclusion he submits his own remedy.

He proposes that a scale of fees should be established in the County Courts, to be paid to the Advocate, regulated by the amount of debt or damages sought to be recovered, and to be "payable alike to Attorney, Advocate, or Counsel, giving the public the option of selecting their advisers."

The consequences which he anticipates from this alteration, slight as it is, are thus stated:

> Surely, if Counsel are not expected to volunteer their services gratuitously, such a scale of fees is not a cause of complaint to the public; particularly when it is to be presumed that the Attorney-advocates do not perform their double duties under the present system at a single fee.
> Again, there is no reason why a clause with a prospective aspect which should establish such a fixed scale of fees as that proposed should not during the present session be introduced into the "County Courts Extension Act;" nor why another clause should not be framed, which should, to a certain extent confine the duties of Advocates to their proper representatives under such a new system of emoluments; and it is to be hoped that some similar scheme will not entirely escape the observation of our legal members of Parliament; the establishment of which would be, moreover, a further check on the cupidity of those who would exclude the Barrister from his proper sphere of business, and prevent, to a great extent, the recurrence of similar agreements as that before alluded to. If, then, the Barrister and Attorney were thus placed on a level and fair footing, it is easy to foresee the result in the speedy formation of local "Bars" throughout the country. This would be desirable on more accounts than one, for in addition to the relief it would afford to the over-crowded state of the Superior Courts of the metropolis, by abstracting a numerous band of competitors for the "remanets" which there so "scanty bloom;" it would benefit the country districts generally wherein such a "Bar" would arise. The Courts would be attended regularly by a class of men both well educated and talented, whose professional services would always be at command at a very small expense, and who would be able to carry up to the Superior Courts of Westminster, on appeal without further intervention and consequent expense, any causes on which a legal dispute might arise on technicalities, or a verdict be given contrary to the rules of evidence or the requirements of justice.

Considering the greatness of the evil to be grappled with, the remedy proposed certainly appears ridiculously small. The Bar is threatened with extinction; no Junior can live by it now, or can hope to do so henceforth; and the only remedy that can be suggested by our Junior, in a pamphlet of 31 pages, is that, instead of the fixed fee of 21s. or 42s. as at present allowed to Barristers, there shall be a scale of fees proportioned to the sum recovered! What a mountain! What a mouse!

THE LAW REFORMS.

IT is as we had anticipated. All the Law Reforms are abandoned for the session. The illness of the LORD CHANCELLOR is the excuse; the causes are, the imminency of a dissolution, the position of the Government, and the manifest impropriety of submitting measures of so much importance to the House of Commons, that is thinking only of the coming elections. The ATTORNEY-GENERAL expressed a feeble purpose to forward the Charity Estates Bill, but the tone betrayed a foregone conclusion—there was no hope in it. The Militia Bill will be the single product of four months of legislative labour, and that will not be a work of which any party will have cause to be proud; imperfect in its structure, insufficient for its objects, likely to be unpopular, and certain to be troublesome. The session is now fast drawing to a close; it can scarcely be protracted beyond the second week in June.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

THE suggestion we made, a fortnight since—for securing a better, wider, and more impartial selection of judicial officers, by removing from the Government the temptation to give a preference to partisans, and from Lawyers [illegible] inducement to seek legal honour thro[illegible] illegitimate path of politics—appears [illegible] excited a good deal of interest in the [illegible] sion. We have received several letter[illegible] sing warm approval of the design: and [illegible] an opportunity offer in the next Parliament for submitting the proposition to the House of Commons, it shall assuredly not be forgotten. The more the subject is considered, the more will its propriety appear.

(a) Thoughts of a Junior on his Position and his Prospects: with a few Hints to Reformers. London: Simpkin and Co.

But it is not merely as a matter affecting the judgment-seat that we would recommend this question to the support of the Lawyers; it is one of considerable professional concern. It would immensely increase the influence of the Lawyers in the legislature, if they were relieved from all suspicion of interested motives. It is not true, in fact, that all the Lawyers who go into Parliament do so for the purpose of obtaining judicial office as rewards for their political services; but because some do so, the suspicion attaches to all, and all suffer in the esteem of the public, and lose a portion of the confidence of the fastidious audience to whom they address themselves. If, however, the law would make it impossible for any Lawyer to gain judicial office by political services, this suspicion would be removed from the entire class; and instead of a Lawyer being less esteemed in the House because he is a Lawyer, he will be the more esteemed, and the more influential, because it will be known that, so far from being there with interested motives, he has thereby sacrificed his chances of promotion, and put himself out of the path of judicial honour.

Thus, not only the administration of justice, but the character and position of the Lawyers, their respectability in the House of Commons, and their credit out of it, would be promoted by a law that should effectually prevent politics and Parliament being made a stepping-stone to the Bench.

AN ABUSE.

WHIPPING has been recognised by the Legislature as an appropriate punishment for juvenile offenders, and it is usually awarded as a substitute for imprisonment, in cases where it is feared that the contamination of a gaol and the social degradation that follows an imprisonment, may be more injurious than otherwise to a youth not yet hardened in crime. This use of the punishment of the lash is strictly observed by all the Judges of Assize, by all Recorders, and by most of the Chairmen of Quarter Sessions.

But there is one exception. In the county of Devon it is the practice of the Quarter Sessions to award whipping almost indiscriminately. We have seen grown men sentenced to it—aye, married men—fathers of families!

At the last assizes, Mr. Justice TALFOURD, in sentencing a little boy to be whipped, told the gaoler to give him moderate correction, and then went on to say that, for many reasons, the punishment of flogging had been discontinued save with young boys, and he used very strong language of disapproval of the lash.

He little thought that in the very Court, in which he was uttering his invective, magistrates were wont to set the practice of the Judges at defiance, and to inflict flogging upon grown men.

The attention of the Home Secretary ought to be called to this malpractice of the Devon Sessions. If the fact were stated in the House of Commons, it would scarcely be credited. There it would excite universal and righteous indignation. We earnestly direct to it the attention of such of our readers as are members of that House. We would respectfully ask Lord CAMPBELL, or Lord BROUGHAM, to bring it under the notice of the House of Lords. The proper course of proceeding would be, to move in both Houses for a return, from the County of Devon, of all the prisoners sentenced to . . . during the last two years, with the date of the sentence, and the age of each prisoner so punished. This would supply the facts, which the Legislature would undoubtedly visit with indignant reprobation; and if the Government would not interpose its authority, a power so abused should be limited by a law.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

THE scheme of improved legal education announced by the Inns of Court does not extend to a compulsory examination previously to admission to the Bar. The student will be permitted, as a matter of grace and favour, to submit himself to an examination for the purpose of obtaining a prize, or a certificate of competency. But of what advantage to him will that be beyond the limits of his Hall, or what security will it give to the public that he is a real Lawyer, and not a mere be-wigged place-seeker? He cannot pin the benchers' certificate to his gown, or advertise it in the LAW TIMES, or post it in his window, to give the world assurance that he is what he is. Still, among the circle of wigs at the Bar table, there will be no distinction to mark the man who has proved his fitness to be there from the man who has not proved it, because in truth he is not fit. Still the mischief will remain, if a Bar crowded with men who join it, not with any purpose of practising the profession, but of grasping through interest the offices and honours that ought to be the reward of those who work for them; still these waiters upon Providence will carry off enough of the lesser business, which connection can command, to leave little for the real Lawyer, taking that which "not enriches them," but leaves their fellows "poor indeed." Still the Bar will be thronged by those who, not being there from any legitimate motives, ought not to be there at all.

An examination, to be effective, must be compulsory: it must be made the condition of a call, and it must be a stringent, not a sham, examination. It is required in every other profession. A man is not permitted to practise Divinity or Medicine without proving his competency. He cannot become a clergyman, a physician, a surgeon, or even an attorney, without a strict examination. Why should the Barrister alone be privileged to be ignorant of the science he professes to practise?

SHAM LAWYERS.

THE following specimen of the productions of one of this fraternity has been sent to us. It is a lithographed circular:—

Manchester, 8th May, 1852.

Mr. Thos. Buckley,

Sir, I am instructed by Messrs. J. and A. Hannay, of 72, Grosvenor-street, to apply to you for the sum of 12s. 10d. and costs; if the same is not paid, or arrangements made for the payment thereof within six days from this date, I shall commence an action against you in the Ashton County Court, without further notice. I am, &c.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

COMMON LAW PROCEDURE BILL.

Tuesday, May 18.—Lord LYNDHURST wished to know, from his noble and learned friend opposite, what progress the committee on the Common Law Procedure Bill had made?—Lord CAMPBELL was glad that the question had been put to him, because he had heard it hinted that the Bill was to be abandoned for the present session, which he should look upon as a great calamity. The Bill was the result of the labours of some of the greatest men who had ever applied themselves to the amendment of the law. The operations of the committee had been delayed in consequence of the illness of the late Lord Chancellor, Lord Truro; but the committee would meet on Wednesday, at two o'clock, and they would certainly proceed with the Bill, and be actively employed in considering and amending it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

FRIDAY, May 14.—Mr. W. PATTEN asked whether it was the intention of Government to press this Bill?—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said it was their (the Government's) most anxious wish that the Bill should pass during the present session. Of course its position in the paper was not under his control. It depended entirely on the state of public business. He regretted the inconvenience that members had been put to in watching the Bill. At the same time he hoped that an opportunity would be afforded him of making progress in committee.

SUITORS IN CHANCERY RELIEF BILL.

The House went into committee on this Bill.—On clause 1,—Mr. WALPOLE said that he had altered the compensation part of the clause in such a manner that the amount of compensation would be fixed by the Lords of the Treasury instead of by the Lord Chancellor.—Mr. W. WILLIAMS would rather see the precise amount stated in the Bill.—The clause was then agreed to.—The remaining clauses were agreed to, and the Bill passed through committee.

COUNTY COURTS FURTHER EXTENSION (COMPENSATIONS, &c.)

Monday, May 17.—The House, in committee of the whole House, passed a resolution empowering payment of compensations for abolished offices.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

Wednesday, May 19.—Mr. WALPOLE, in reply to a question by Mr. Rice, stated that, considering the number of amendments of which notice had been given with reference to this bill, and considering at the same time the state of public business, the Government had come to the determination not to go on with the Bill during the present session.

COSTS IN CROWN PROSECUTIONS.

THURSDAY, May 20.—Mr. LENNARD wished to know from the Attorney-General whether, in consequence of what fell from him the other night, he had any intention of introducing a measure during the present Parliament, not with the view of passing it at present, but merely of considering it, for the purpose of doing away with the obnoxious privilege now enjoyed by the Crown, of not paying costs whe there was a verdict against it?—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said, that in the course of the discussion to which the hon. gentleman had referred, he certainly stated that his attention had been called to the question of the payment of costs in prosecutions by the Crown, and he took occasion to correct a misapprehension which prevailed on the subject, it being generally supposed that the Crown received costs, but did not pay any, the fact being that the Crown neither received nor paid cost. Undoubtedly cases had arisen of very considerable hardship, where parties who had had a verdict in their favour had been obliged to pay costs; but when the hon. member suggested an amendment of the law it was his (the Attorney-General's) duty to call attention to the circumstance, that any alteration in respect to the payment of costs in Crown cases must be reciprocal, and that defendants who had verdicts against them must in that case be made to pay costs; and his experience led him to say that in nine cases out of ten the Crown was successful, care being generally taken that no prosecution was instituted without good grounds, so that it became a question whether it was desirable to make an alteration of the law which would, doubtless, remove inconvenience and hardship in particular cases, but which in the large majority of cases would impose a greater hardship upon defendants than now existed.—Mr. LENNARD gave notice that he would, if possible, introduce a Bill, and lay it upon the table for consideration in the present Session, to take away on the one hand the privilege now enjoyed by the Crown of not paying costs in cases of adverse verdicts, and on the other hand to enable the Crown to receive costs in cases where it obtained verdicts in its favour.

LUNACY PROCEEDINGS EXPENSES BILL.—Lord Lyndhurst's Bill to diminish the expenses of proceedings in lunacy has been printed. It contains eleven clauses. The Lord Chancellor is empowered to direct inquiries by fiat, in lieu of a commission, and the Masters in Lunacy will, after the inquisition, make orders and give directions respecting the persons and properties of lunatics, as well as make a special report or order to the Lord Chancellor, to whom an appeal will lie. The costs of all proceedings will be at the discretion of the Masters, and will be made under their order.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

WE had occasion to notice last week a very absurd specimen of technicality pushed to an injustice,—a formal document of a magistrate avoided, because it did not, in precise words, express something which was not necessary for any practical purpose, and even without which no two persons could have differed as to the meaning of the document. We have now to notice a decision equally repulsive to common sense, though in strict accordance with the law.

In Ex parte Haylock, 19 Law T. Rep. 125, a warrant of commitment for writing up offensive words calculated to cause a breach of the peace, was set aside, because, although it stated the offence distinctly, it did not distinctly state that the adjudication was for that offence,—the offence being, the writing of something tending to produce a breach of the peace, and the adjudication that he should enter into recognizances to keep the peace. What puerilities!

Reg. v. The Recorder of Leeds, 19 Law T. Rep. 126, was a curious case in the law of Bastardy. A. was adjudged to be the father of twins, and two separate orders were drawn up and served. Having given notice of appeal, he entered into two recognizances, and sent a single notice, which stated "that he had entered into a recognizance, &c. to try an appeal, &c. against an order dated, &c. whereby he was adjudged to be the putative father of two bastard children." Two appeals were entered, but it was objected that the notice of recognizance was not good, as there was no such order and no such recognizance as mentioned in the notice. The Court, however, held the notice to be good, and that the Sessions should have heard the appeal.

What has become of the Expenses of Prosecutions Act? It was passed, with representations of urgency, early in the last session of Parliament, but no proceedings have been taken for carrying its provisions into effect. Mr. WALPOLE, indeed, is new to office, and has had a great deal to do, as well as much to learn, so that no fault can be found with him for having neglected it. But Sir GEORGE GREY, who was its author, had quiet possession of his place for some months after the Bill became law, and yet nothing was done with it. It is strange, that after such a fuss made about this Bill in its progress, it should have been laid upon the shelf as soon as it became law; and stranger still that the subject has not been mentioned in the House of Commons, and the Home Secretary questioned about it. Was the Act found to be unfit for use when it came to be practically applied, or is it thwarted by some powerful but invincible influences?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I have read with pleasure your strictures upon the Examiner's article on the (so termed) "Abuses of Advocacy."

Allow me, as one who is most intimately acquainted, from personal knowledge, with ALL the facts of the case which gave rise to the Examiner's remarks, to state most emphatically and distinctly that the charge against counsel is in this case entirely unfounded.

The defence was, to my knowledge, a "true," and not an "invented" defence. A judge who but seldom errs, did in this case err grievously in his estimate of the credibility of the witnesses for the defence. This will be substantiated elsewhere; but in the meantime it is but just to the council and others who urged the "defence" in question, that they should be cleared, as far as possible, in this stage of the matter, from the imputation of either inventing a defence, or in any way endeavouring to pervert, prevent, or distort truth.

I enclose my name and address, and am,
Sir, yours, &c.
City, 19th May, 1852. J. M. D.

SUPPLY OF BOOKS TO WORKHOUSE SCHOOLS.—The Poor-law Commissioners, with a view of promoting the introduction of suitable books into workhouse schools, for the use of scholars and teachers, have made arrangements with several publishers to supply for the use of such schools books and maps, at prices varying from 32 to 55 per cent. the average being 43 per cent. under the price at which the books are sold to the public. Among the subjects embraced in the list of books are reading lessons, grammar, arithmetic, geography, English history, mensuration, vocal music, &c.; orders for which are to be transmitted to the Poor-law Board, who will direct their booksellers to supply such as may be ordered.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.—By an order in Council dated May 15, 1852, her Majesty has been pleased to direct that petitions from the inhabitants of Brighton, Sussex, and from the town of Middlesborough, in the North Riding of the county of York, praying that charters of incorporation may be granted to them, be taken into consideration.

SUMS LEVIED FOR POOR-RATES.—A return to the House of Commons has been printed, shewing the sums levied for poor-rates in England and Wales for the last 22 years. The largest amount, 8,622,920*l.* was in 1832, when the average price of wheat was 63s. 4d. Last year the amount was only 6,778,914, when the average price of wheat was 39s. 11d. per quarter.

On Wednesday a communication was received by Messrs. Lewis and Lewis, solicitors for Thomas Robert Mellish, from the Home-office, to the effect that Mr. Secretary Walpole had advised her Majesty to grant a free pardon to him, and he has been liberated from Newgate.

AN EX-SHERIFF COMMITTED FOR FORGERY.—The ex-sheriff of Gloucester, William Henry Barrett, who absconded to the United States about this time last year, and was brought back to England, as already reported, last week, was brought before the Gloucester magistrates on Wednesday, for final examination on several charges of forgery. Four cases of forgery of acceptances for amounts reaching some thousands of pounds in the aggregate, were gone into, and at the close of the examination, which lasted nearly the whole of the day, the prisoner was fully committed for trial at the next Gloucester assizes on all four charges. It would seem from what transpired at the examination, that the acceptances forged were those of the prisoner's customers, with whose handwriting he had become acquainted; that he was in the habit of dealing largely in bills, and that on his absconding to America, several of these bills became due, and then the forgery was discovered. The court was crowded to excess during the examination.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

A SHAREHOLDER filed a bill against the directors of a company established by royal charter, alleging that the charter had been obtained by misrepresentation and fraud, and that the terms of it had not been complied with, and praying that the directors might be decreed to repay to the plaintiff the moneys paid upon his shares, and the company prohibited from proceeding against him for further calls. Such decree was refused; first, because plaintiff's case was that of all the other shareholders, and he had asked relief only for himself; secondly, that as he had taken shares after the grant of the charter, he could not ask relief merely because the directors and the other shareholders had concurred in the alleged illegal acts; and, generally, it was laid down that one member of a company cannot call upon the Court to compel repayment of his advances on the ground of an alleged fraud by the directors of the same copartnership. (Macbride v. Lindsay, 19 Law T. Rep. 120.)

In Carr v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 124, the effect of a special contract upon the general liabilities of a railway company as carriers came under consideration. The plaintiff sent a horse by railway, and by a special contract agreed "to take all risks of conveyance whatsoever or howsoever caused." The horse was killed during the journey, through the gross negligence of the company's servants. Did the express contract extend to an injury so caused? The Court, with one dissentient, held that it did. "The contract is," said PARKE, B. "that the owner shall abide by all the damage done." "All that the company were bound to do was to find their own carriage in the ordinary way provided by them for the regular conveyance of horses upon the railway, and the owner is then to take all risk of conveyance whatsoever."

Mr. Turquand, the official manager, applied to be permitted to make a partial distribution among the shareholders of the assets in hand, and realised by recovery from the directors, but the Master declined to direct any division until all outstanding matters were closed, so that any division of the funds should be final.

STAMP ON TRANSFER OF MORTGAGE, WITH FURTHER ADVANCE AND FURTHER SECURITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—As questions on the New Stamp Act are of material importance to the Profession, I am induced to submit the following case for the opinion of your readers, in the hope that as similar cases are likely to have already occurred to some of them in practice, they may be able to give information as to the proper stamp to be used.

A. being seised of the fee of Nos. 1 and 2, mortgaged No. 1 to B. for 400*l.* for a term of 1,000 years. A. subsequently conveys the equity of redemption in the fee of Nos. 1 and 2 to C. subject as to No. 1 to the mortgage to B. and further subject as to Nos. 1 and 2 to an annuity to A. for life. C. wishing to obtain a further advance of 100*l.* and to transfer the old mortgage, a deed is prepared, by which, in consideration of payment of the mortgage debt due to B. he assigns the mortgage debt and No. 1 for the residue of the 1,000 years to D. subject to the same equity of redemption, and with same powers as B. held same, and both A. and C. confirm same; and in consideration of further advance of 100*l.* paid by D. to C., A. and C. convey the fee in Nos. 1 and 2 to E. upon fresh trusts for sale for securing to D. the original mortgage debt of 100*l.* and the further advance of 100*l.* and interest: new covenants by C. for title and payment of the money are entered into.

The question for consideration is, What stamp will this latter deed require? It is clearly a transfer of the old mortgage with a further advance; but this further advance is made not to the original mortgagor, but to a quasi purchaser from him; and inasmuch as the fee and another estate (No. 2) is conveyed, and a fresh covenantor for payment is inserted, it is also a further and additional security.

It would appear from the recent Stamp Act (see title "Mortgage," "Transfer," &c.), that a simple transfer of a mortgage for 100*l.* without any additional advance, would require a 10s. stamp, but if on such a transfer a further advance of 100*l.* was made, then the only stamp required would be 2s. 6d. This certainly appears strange; but it is the plain reading of this clause. The natural supposition would have been that the Act would have imposed in the latter case the stamp of 2s. 6d. in addition to the stamp of 10s.; but the words of the Act appear not to admit of this construction.

It would also appear clear, from the proviso at the end of the clause relating to transfer of mortgage, that the deed containing further and additional security or covenants, such as the conveyance of the fee, an additional estate and a new covenantor and mortgagor, would not make it liable to a further stamp than 2s. 6d.

But before concluding, I should draw attention to the part of the Stamp Act immediately following the last-mentioned part, and which refers to and makes mortgages made as additional or further security for sums under 1,100*l.* liable to the same duty as on a mortgage for the amount thereof, and in any other case to a stamp of 1*l.* 15s and particularly to the proviso following it, which provides merely for cases where, on a further advance, a further or additional security is given by the mortgagor, or by any person entitled to the property mortgaged, by descent, devise, or bequest from such mortgagor. Now in the case in question, although A. the original mortgagor, joins in the deed, yet C. the purchaser from him, has the beneficial interest; and to him the further sum is advanced: he neither takes by descent, devise, or bequest from A. and consequently is not within this proviso (unless he could be said to be the mortgagor within the meaning of the above), and therefore this deed may be said to come under the operation of the words "in any other case," and liable to a 1*l.* 15s. stamp. But here it is submitted that the deed comes also within the first-mentioned proviso, and as such would only be liable to a 2s. 6d. stamp. The question, therefore, is, which proviso is to govern the case put? It appears clear that both or either proviso might apply to the deed, and that both provisoes would generally apply to all cases of transfer, with an additional advance, as there would, in all such cases, be at any rate fresh powers and new covenants given. Here a 1*l.* 15s. stamp would be greater than the stamp on a new mortgage for the full amount secured. Your obedient servant and subscriber

COPYHOLDS ENFRANCHISEMENT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—In answer to a question put by a correspondent signing himself "A Lord of a Manor," as to whether the present Bill before Parliament, for the extension of the provisions of the Copyhold Acts, alters the mode of descent in cases where the lands to be enfranchised descend by custom of borough English, gavelkind, &c. I beg to say that the Bill, as it stands amended by the Commons' committee, contains no clause altering the mode of descent, &c. It is merely declaratory of the mode in which the enfranchisement shall be carried out.

Of the existing Copyhold Acts, viz. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 23, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 55, the first one only alters the mode of descent of borough English, gavelkind, &c. and that, too, in cases of commutation only, and not of enfranchisement. It states (s. 79) that the "lands shall thenceforth (after commutation) cease to be subject to the customs of borough-English or gavelkind, or any other customary mode of descent, or to any custom relating to dower, or freebench, or tenancy by the courtesy of England; and all the laws relating to descents, or to estates of dower, or estates by the courtesy of England, which shall for the time being affect and be applicable to lands held in fee and common soccage, shall thenceforth affect and be applicable to the lands included in every such commutation."

Section 80 is the proviso of section 79, and excepts the county of Kent, as to its gavelkind lands, from the operation of section 79. Section 81 applies to cases of enfranchisement only, and enacts that the lands enfranchised "shall become and be in all respects of freehold tenure." This expression, "freehold tenure," does not exclude tenures of gavelkind, &c. which are varieties of "freehold tenure." The above enactments are the only ones in the Copyhold Acts which have particular reference to change in the mode of descent, and from them it will be seen that at present it does not follow, because an estate is enfranchised under these Acts, that therefore its peculiar mode of descent is altered by the enfranchisement.

I remain, Sir, yours truly,

Middle Temple. W. T.

INCUMBERED ESTATES IN IRELAND.—It is proposed, by a Bill in the House of Commons, which was printed on Thursday week, to continue the powers of applying for a sale of lands under the Act for facilitating the Sale and Transfer of Incumbered Estates in Ireland. Within four years after the passing of the Act, applications for sale of lands under the Act relating to incumbered estates may be effected.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

ANOTHER question of jurisdiction has arisen where plaintiff sues by leave of the judge for the district in which the cause of action arose under sec. 60 of the County Courts Act. It seems that the whole cause of action must have arisen in such district.

Where, therefore, A. resident in Norwich, drew a bill of exchange on B. who resided in London, at which place he accepted it, and transmitted it back to A. at Norwich; and B. having indorsed it, paid it; and on its being dishonoured sued A. in the County Court; it was held by COLERIDGE, J. in the Bail Court, that the County Court had not jurisdiction. "The contract was made in London, therefore the whole cause of action did not arise in Norwich." (Wilde v. Sheridan, 19 Law T. Rep. 126.)

MIDDLESEX COUNTY COURT.

(Before ARTHUR POLLOCK, Esq.)

Marylebone, May 13.

Sarah Newton, administratrix of the estate and effects of Joseph Hobbs, deceased, plaintiff, v. William Houlton, defendant.

Non-appearance of plaintiff—Withdrawal of plaint.

Quære, What is reasonable notice to the defendant of the withdrawal of the plaint?

Held, that where notice of the withdrawal of the plaint is given to defendant's attorney on the evening of the day preceding that upon the afternoon of which the cause is to be heard, the full costs of the defendant for the day will be allowed.

Macrae appeared for the defendant, and applied for his costs, as he had just been informed by Mr. M'Duff (of Castle-street, Holborn), the defendant's attorney, that he had received a letter by post, at 7 o'clock P.M. on the preceding evening, of the withdrawal of the plaint, and the defendant himself had only received a similar notice by post, at 7 o'clock that morning. They had two witnesses in attendance, and counsel had been instructed some days previously. Under these circumstances, he submitted that it would be reasonable to allow the defendant his full costs of the day.

The learned DEPUTY JUDGE made an order for the plaintiff to pay the defendant the full costs of the day's attendance.

The 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 10, enacts "that in every case where the plaintiff shall not appear either by himself or his attorney upon the day of the return of any summons for hearing, or at any continuation or adjournment of the said hearing, and the defendant shall appear either by himself or his attorney upon such day of hearing, continuation, or adjournment, it shall be lawful for the judge to award to the defendant or to his attorney, by way of costs of his attendance and satisfaction for his trouble, such sum as the judge in his discretion shall think fit; and the sum so awarded shall be recoverable from the plaintiff by such ways and means as any debt or damage ordered to be paid by the same Court can be recovered."

This would appear to be an unlimited discretion, and such costs might exceed those allowed by the Act to counsel and attorneys. It was, no doubt, intended to secure defendants against being put to needless trouble by litigious plaintiffs. See Cox and Lloyd's C. C. Practice, p. cxlviii.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

IN order to obtain a commission to examine as witnesses the parties to an action resident abroad, it is not sufficient to shew that they are so resident, but it must be made out to the satisfaction of the Court that it would be conducive to the due administration of justice. (Castelli v. Groom, 19 Law T. Rep. 121.) In this case the application was refused. Lord CAMPBELL well observed that "if the rule were to prevail in all cases, the parties would only have to sail across the Channel, and then they might insist on being examined on interrogatories."

A plaintiff had issued execution for debt and costs, at the time when 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, came into operation. Afterwards he issued a fresh writ of execution for the interest on the judgment debt only, and subsequently received, under the first execution, the debt and costs. It was held that the defendant was not entitled to enter up satisfaction on the judgment until the interest was paid under the second writ. (Bishop v. Hatch, 19 Law T. Rep. 122).

An interesting question upon the reception in evidence of an unstamped document, which was both an agreement and a receipt, was decided by the LORD CHANCELLOR in Evans v. Prothero, 19 Law T. Rep. 117. The judges of the Courts of Common Law had differed upon the point, but Lord ST. LEONARD'S has now thrown the weight of his opinion into the scale. He says,—"This long litigation has been occasioned by the want of an additional sixpenny stamp, for, if it had been properly stamped, there would have been an end to all dispute. The want of this additional stamp has had the effect of rendering this document inadmissible as a receipt; but at the outset of these trials we find that this document was tendered in evidence as a receipt, but was rejected by the judge. Now is this document to be treated as a nullity simply because it is on a sixpenny instead of a shilling stamp? If this paper is not receivable as a receipt, in consequence of the defect in the stamp, why should it not be so received as an agreement?"

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

WHERE a man enters into a contract avowedly as agent for another, but having, in fact, no authority to do so, it appears from Lewis v. Nicholson, 19 Law T. Rep. 122, that the other party to the contract cannot sue him upon the contract itself, but his remedy is to sue him for the deceit, in representing that he had such authority. Lord CAMPBELL corrected a prevailing error on this point, to which we would ask the attention of the reader. He said, "It has been reported that BAYLEY, B. laid down the general rule, that where an agent makes a contract in the name of his principal, and it turns out that the principal is not liable, for the want of authority in the agent to make such a contract, the agent is personally liable on the contract. I must dissent from that doctrine. I think it must be confined to cases where the party professing to give the undertaking could undertake...... I go further, and say that where a party clearly and expressly contracts in the name of, and as agent for, another, he cannot be sued upon the contract.

In Lyth v. Ault, 19 Law T. Rep. 124, it was held to be a good defence to an action against A. and B. for goods sold, that defendants A. and B. were partners, and the goods for which the action was brought were bought by them as such; that A. was about to retire from the partnership, and it was agreed that he should pay plaintiff 12*l*., for which plaintiff agreed to abandon his claim against A. for the residue and that B. should be solely and separately liable to plaintiff for the said residue. The possible advantage of being able to sue one instead of both appears to have been deemed by the Court a sufficient consideration to support the agreement.

THE MERCANTILE MARINE ACT.—The first report to Parliament under the Mercantile Marine Act (13 & 14 Vict. c. 93) was printed on Friday. The total income for the year 1850-51 was 21,631*l*. 13s. 7d.; and the expenditure, 25,129*l*. 4s. 7d. The excess of expenditure over the income was 491*l*. 11s.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

Her Majesty has appointed Alban Lewis Gwynne, of Monachty, esq. to be Sheriff of the county of Cardigan, in the room of John Inglis Jones, of Derry Ormond, esq.

The vacant office of Solicitor-General for Scotland has been conferred upon Mr. Charles Neaves, who has to resign the sheriffship of Orkney, which has, it is said, been given to Mr. W. E. Aytoun.

Her Majesty having been pleased to appoint the Right Hon. John Frederick Earl Cawdor to be Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the County of Carmarthen, his lordship this day took the oaths appointed to be taken thereupon, instead of the oaths of allegiance and supremacy.

We hear that her Majesty, at the recommendation of her Ministers, is about to confer the honour of a baronetcy on Lord Boyle, late Justice General and President of the Court of Session, as a reward for his long and valuable services on the bench of Scotland. It is also reported that a like honour will be conferred on Professor Alison, on account of his distinguished literary attainments.—Standard.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Duncan McNeill, esq. one of the Lords of Session and of Justiciary, to be Lord Justice General and President of the Court of Session in Scotland.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.—County of Carmarthen: David Jones, of Pantglâs, in the said county, esq. in the room of the Hon. George Rice Trevor, now Lord Dinevor, called up to the House of Peers.—Town of Perth: The Hon. Arthur Fitzgerald Kinnaird, Hyde-park-gardens, London, in the room of the Right Hon. Fox Maule, now Lord Panmure, called up to the House of Peers.

Lord Colonsay (Mr. Duncan M'Neill), one of the permanent Lords Ordinary of the Court of Session in Scotland, is appointed Lord Justice-General and President of the Court, in the room of the right hon. David Boyle, resigned. Mr. Adam Anderson, Lord Advocate, is appointed a Lord of Session of the Outer House, in the room of Lord Colonsay. Mr. John Inglis, Solicitor-General for Scotland, is appointed Lord Advocate, in the room of Mr. A. Anderson.—Observer.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LAW ASSOCIATION.

We take some of the most interesting passages from the Fifth Annual Report of this Society.

RENEWING CERTIFICATES.

The committee have procured an alteration in the practice of attorneys renewing their annual certificates, which will give to the council of the Incorporated Society increased facilities in performing the duty which is entrusted to them as registrar of attorneys and solicitors, of raising any proper question before the judges, on any such application. When certificates are first taken out, or renewed, in the regular way, each application must, of course, come under the notice of the registrar; but, until the present time, when an application was made to a judge at chambers, for leave to renew a certificate without the regular notices—and it is precisely in such cases that supervision is most likely to be needed—the application was ex parte, and, if duly supported by affidavit, was granted almost as a matter of course. The committee, therefore, suggested that, in all such cases, a summons to shew cause should be served upon the registrar of attorneys; and they are happy to say that the judges, concurring in the expediency of the adoption of his practice, have given the necessary directions for that purpose.

PROSECUTIONS BY MAGISTRATES' CLERKS.

Most of the members are no doubt aware that there is a difference, for which there does not appear to exist any substantial reason, between the privileges of the clerks to magistrates in boroughs and those in counties; inasmuch as, while the latter are generally employed somewhat extensively in conducting prosecutions, the former are, by the 162nd section of the Municipal Reform Act, expressly prohibited from being concerned in prosecutions. On the occasion of the passing of the "Act for Providing for the Expenses of Prosecutions" last session, the Association of Clerks to Magistrates endeavoured to get this prohibitive clause repealed, and the committee was requested to assist that endeavour. After carefully considering the question, however, they felt compelled to decline moving in the matter on two grounds—first, that it was a question of privilege, not between the profession, as a whole, and any other body attempting to effect an encroachment, but between one class of the profession and another, and that the effect of the repeal would, practically, be to give to the magistrates' clerks, from the advantages incident to their position, almost a monopoly of that branch of criminal business—a result which, whether in itself desirable or not, the committee felt was certainly not within their province to promote. But, secondly, the committee, upon the merits of the question, would be more inclined to advocate the extension of the prohibition to the clerks of county magistrates than its repeal with regard to those of boroughs; for it is, in their opinion, so important to keep the office of prosecutor entirely separate from that of judge, that they think it wise to provide that an officer, who, like the clerk to the magistrates, frequently exercises a deciding influence upon the question of whether an accused party shall be committed, shall not be open to the possibility of having any pecuniary interest connected with the prosecution.

COUNTY COURTS ABUSES.

In the course of the year the committee have had communicated to them several instances in which, as it appears to them, judgments delivered in different County Courts have been clearly illegal. They think that it would be very advantageous to form a collection of such cases, and also any cases of peculiar hardship resulting from the present scale of cos allowed, for the purpose of their being, at a proper time, submitted to Parliament. They have therefore prepared a register for the purpose, and they invite their subscribers to communicate to them any instance that may occur within their own immediate knowledge. The only mode of checking these illegal decisions, and making the law uniform throughout England in matters within the jurisdiction of the County Courts, is, to give in all cases a right of appeal to the superior Courts. A clause for this purpose was introduced into the Bill, as brought into the House of Lords this Session, but was afterwards struck out. The Committee have endeavoured to have the clause re-inserted in the Bill in the House of Commons.

COUNTY COURTS EXTENSION BILL.

The County Courts Further Extension Bill of last year was returned from the Commons to the Lords, in a shape so entirely different from that in which it had passed the Lords, that, there being only a day or two of the Session left, the Bill was allowed to drop. At that time, the Bill provided that barristers might be heard, if instructed by or on behalf of a party, though without any exclusive or preaudience, and Lord Brougham this year introduced the Bill in the same shape. The provision was, however, objected to by several of the law lords, and especially by Lords Truro and Campbell, and Lord Brougham at length unwillingly consented to the present law being only qualified by the introduction of a clause, that attorneys shall not appear as advocates unless they are instructed directly by the parties in the case. In most other respects, the Bill left the Lords very nearly in the same shape as it was left in by the Commons last year; it is, however, clumsily drawn up, and the committee have placed in the hands of Mr. Mullings several suggestions for its improvement. Since it has been in the Commons, it has been a good deal altered, and, the committee regret to say, rendered decidedly more objectionable. The right of attorneys are proposed to be sacrificed, on the one hand, by permitting barristers to be instructed directly by the parties; and, on the other, by confirming the objectionable practice of the original Act, of allowing any party, whether in the profession or not, and whether n tl e employ of the party or not, to appear and plead by leave of the judge. A clause passed by the Lords to provide for judgments by default, which would have been a great boon to the suitors, has been struck out; while, on the other hand, clauses have been inserted to increase the salaries of the judges, and to provide for them retiring pensions. The committee would not object to these clauses if justice were done to all parties; but, in its present shape, the Bill is certainly open to very serious animadversions. One other point is sufficiently important to be noticed here. The advocates of the County Courts have from time to time, obtained returns of the amount of money sued for in these courts, the amount recovered, and the amount of costs allowed, and it has been taken for granted that these returns show the total expense at which, by means of the new machinery, debts may now be recovered. The representations and expostulations of attorneys have been either unnoticed altogether, or considered untrustworthy, as being the interested complaints of men who have been deprived, for the benefit of the suitors, of the remuneration they had been previously receiving for the performance of merely technical and unnecessary labour. It has been overlooked that those returns of costs, with the exception of the small proportion composed of the ...cate's fee, includes no costs on either side except fees and witnesses' expenses. It is true, that by one of the most objectionable provisions of the Acts, the suitors are compelled to commit some important portions, of what ought to be the business of the attorney, to officers of the court not selected by, or practically, at any rate, responsible to them, and to pay them by court fees; yet, in every case in which either plaintiff or defendant requires professional assistance in preparing his case, he must himself bear the expense of obtaining such assistance, whatever be the result of the trial. It does not require any great experience to know, that with the exception of the simplest cases of "small debts," which, under any system, would be collected by the parties themselves, some professional assistance is needed in "getting up" almost every case that is submitted to a court of justice. But, besides what may be strictly termed professional assistance, the majority of plaintiffs, if compelled to conduct their own legal business themselves, must either provide a special staff of assistants for that purpose, or withdraw some portion of their establishment, from time to time, from their regular duties; and, of course, in either case, will be subjected, without compensation, both to trouble and expense. In every way, therefore, in which the subject can be looked at, we must come to the conclusion that the ordinary principle on which the settlement of legal disputes should be founded, is that which has always obtained in our Superior Courts; namely, that each party should be allowed to obtain professional assistance, and that he who is declared by the ultimate judgment to be in the wrong, must pay all the reasonable expenses incurred in consequence of his own default.

PUBLIC INDEXES.

The imperfect and inconvenient way in which the various public indexes are kept, is a practical evil which more or less affects solicitors throughout the country. It would seem, also, to be capable of a simple and easy remedy, as it cannot be the interest of anyone that the indexes should remain imperfect, and the expense necessary for their improvement would be provided from the search-fees. The committee have, therefore, collected information as to the mode in which the various public indexes are at present kept, and are preparing a short bill to provide that they shall in future be all kept upon a system which shall facilitate searches, and, as far as possible, prevent mistakes. In many cases where the entries are not frequent, the lexicographical form may be completely carried out; and in all it might be so, as far as the initial letter and first vowel. The committee find that the index kept in the Legacy-Duty Office by Mr. Trevor, the nature of which is explained in the evidence given by that gentleman to the Registration commissioners, although dealing with complicated materials, yet affords great facility for reference.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

The subject of the Ecclesiastical Courts has continued in abeyance; and, considering the extent and variety of the schemes for Law Reform, to which the committee have had to give their attention in almost every other department, they think that this may be considered a fortunate circumstance. For, although their conviction of the absolute necessity for a thorough reform of these Courts remains unabated, yet the subject is one of such magnitude, that they would be glad to see it dealt with at a time when a greater amount of careful consideration could be bestowed upon it. In the meantime, it can hardly be doubted that the reforms which are taking place in all the other Courts, will render it certain that when the subject is taken up—as it must be—by Government, a more complete and satisfactory scheme will be proposed than could have been hoped for, had it been the first instead of the last of the series.

THE NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE LAW STUDENTS' DEBATING SOCIETY.

The first half-yearly meeting of this society was held in the committee-room of the Literary and Philosophical Institution, on Thursday, the 13th inst. when a report of its proceedings was read by the secretary, from which it appeared that the society was in every respect in a flourishing condition, and that the discussion on the various subjects which had come under consideration had been productive of much benefit to the members.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

Mr. George Coode has published a second edition of his treatise on Legislative Expression, written with the laudable purpose of improving the composition of Acts of Parliament. The subject is one of great importance, and of great perplexity. It is easy to indicate faults, but he who has ever tried the experiment of writing a law, will admit the difficulty of avoiding them. Mr. Coode proposes to do so by the observance of certain rules of construction, which he has described specifically. He suggests that a law should state, first, the legal subject; secondly, the legal action. But we doubt the advantage of any such rules. Before we can determine how to express a law, it is necessary to understand precisely in what manner law is construed by the Judges. Will they look to its spirit or to its letter only? Will they regard it as an enemy to be cabined and confined, or as a friend to be treated in a friendly spirit, and with a resolve to advance its design?

Is a law to be read technically or liberally;—as if it were in an alien language, or as the expression, in the English tongue, of certain purposes designed to be described by Englishmen to Englishmen, and to be understood as those words would be understood in every-day life? It must have occurred many times to our readers to notice the remarkable difference between the old statutes and the modern ones, and how much the former excel the latter, not only in brevity, but in clearness of expression. We create confusion by our attempts to be more express and explicit than language will permit; in vain endeavours to say all we mean, and to provide for all contingencies, we introduce new difficulties and doubts; we create the confusion we seek to avoid. Nobody will say that he understands the meaning of the curt statutes of our ancestors less perfectly than that of one of our own verbose laws; usually they would be better understood. And if their meaning is palpable, their object is accomplished, and they are as effective as if they had sought to express that meaning in a multiplicity of words.

We recommend Mr. COODE's pamphlet to the perusal of our readers, who must desire to see the language of our laws redeemed from its present perplexity and redundancy. We have not space now to follow him through his able arguments and illustrations, but we shall take some early opportunity of recurring to the subject, and throwing out some further thoughts upon the important and interesting question of the composition of statutes.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

TRINITY TERM EXAMINATION.

THE Examination of persons applying to be Admitted Attorneys will take place on Thursday, the 3rd of June next, at half-past nine in the forenoon, at the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, in Chancery-lane. The examination will commence at ten o'clock precisely.

The articles of clerkship and assignments, if any, with answers to the questions as to due service, according to the regulations approved by the judges, must be left on or before Saturday, the 29th instant, at the office of the Law Society, Chancery-lane.

Where the articles have not expired, but will expire during the Term, the candidate may be examined conditionally, but the articles must be left within the first seven days of Term, and answers up to that time.

If part of the Term has been served with a Barrister, Special Pleader, or London Agent, answers to the questions must be obtained from them, as to the time served with each respectively.

A paper of questions will be delivered to each candidate, containing questions to be answered in writing, classed under the several heads of—1. Preliminary. 2. Common and Statute Law, and Practice of the Courts. 3. Conveyancing. 4. Equity, and Practice of the Courts. 5. Bankruptcy, and Practice of the Courts. 6. Criminal Law and Proceedings before Justices of the Peace.

Each candidate is required to answer all the Preliminary Questions (No. 1); and it is expected that he should answer in three or more of the other heads of inquiry,—Common Law and Equity being two thereof.—Legal Observer.

CAPTURE OF A FRAUDULENT BANKRUPT. GLOUCESTER, TUESDAY.—Some months ago Mr. W. H. Barrett, corndealer and miller of this city, and who, a short time previously, had been elected sheriff of Gloucester, absconded to America, taking with him a large sum of money, which he had raised chiefly by the use of forged bills, the names of several merchants with whom he had had transactions, and others having been forged to acceptances by him. He was traced to the United States, where he was captured, and he was brought to this country in custody, arriving by steamer at Liverpool, on Sunday. He was immediately brought down to Gloucester by railway, and lodged in gaol, and yesterday he was taken before the mayor and magistrates for examination on the charge of forgery. Acceptances amounting to some thousands of pounds, all of which are alleged to have been forged by the prisoner, were produced against him, and, after the examination of several witnesses, he was remanded for a week, to give time for the production of further evidence.

THE DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT.—The prevalent opinion has been that the present Parliament would be dissolved on or about the 10th of June. A later day seems now probable, since it appears that the Queen intends to hold another drawing-room about the 3rd of June, and contemplates giving a state ball about the 18th of the same month at St. James's Palace. A grand ceremonial like a state ball is not likely to be given after the dissolution.—Daily News.

PROCLAMATION OF OUTLAWRY.—At the Sheriff's Court yesterday the following persons were called upon to surrender to the custody of the sheriff under penalty of outlawry:—Algernon Massingberd (at three suits), Osborn H. Sampayo, W. David Sherriff, Wm. Frederick Smith (at two suits), Wm. Thomas Thornton, Wm. Wilson the younger, Augustus Mayhew, George Cowie, the Rev. John Prendergast Walsh, Henry H. Griffin, John Cruickshank, Sidney W. Alston, Thomas Griffiths, Mary Sabina Melfort (commonly called the Countess de Melfort), John Armine Morris, Alfred Lewis, Joseph Benson, Thomas Barrett Lennard the younger, Walter Lockhart Scott, Hon. Brownlow Cecil (commonly called Lord Brownlow Cecil), John Hugh Wadham Pigott Smyth Pigott, John Lloyd, and George Dracato Papanicolas.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MAY 29, 1852.

THE NEW LAWS OF THE SESSION.

THE LAW TIMES' Editions of the New Laws of the present Session, will be published as soon as possible after its close. Should the Law Reform Bills pass, the series will comprise:—

- The Militia Act, with the Statutes embodied in it, with Notes, Forms, and Index. By THOMAS W. SAUNDERS, Esq. Barrister-at-Law; Author of "The Supplement to Burn and Archbold," "The Duties of Magistrates," &c.
- The Common Law Procedure Act. By R. M. KERR, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.
- The Chancery Reform Act. By OWEN TUDOR, Esq. Barrister-at-Law; author of "Leading Cases in Equity," &c.
- The Practical Statutes of 1852. By WILLIAM PATERSON, Esq. Barrister-at-law—in continuation of those for 1850 and 1851—with Notes and Index.
- The General Highways Act, with the subsequent Statutes, Cases, Forms, and Practical Notes. By WILLIAM FOOTE, Esq. of Swindon.
- The Copyhold Enfrachisement Act, with Practical Notes and Index. By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law; author of "The Practice of Sales," "Concise Precedents in Modern Conveyancing," &c.

Orders should be sent as soon as possible, that the Publisher may make his arrangements accordingly.

FLOGGING IN DEVONSHIRE.

AGAIN we beg respectfully to ask the attention of Lord CAMPBELL, Lord BROUGHAM, Lord CRANWORTH, Lord LYNDHURST, or either of the other Law Lords who honour the LAW TIMES with a perusal, to the circumstances which we described last week, relating to the monstrous abuse, in Devonshire, of the punishment of flogging. The Session ought not to pass without an inquiry into it, and as a first step, a return should be ordered from the clerk of the peace of that county, of the persons sentenced to flogging during the last two years, and their ages.

COPYHOLD ENFRANCHISEMENT AND THE ATTORNEYS.

AFTER passing quietly and with universal approval through the Commons, the Bill for the Enfranchisement of Copyholds has met with an unexpected opposition in the Lords. It seems that some of the Lords of Manors are unwilling to part with their feudal privileges, and object to the compulsory provisions of the Bill, although voluntary enfranchisement has been tried for several years and has failed.

We regret, also, to see that the noble obstructives have found a champion in the LORD CHANCELLOR, and that, at his instance, the Bill is to be sent to a Select Committee, which, at this period of the Session, is, as Lord CAMPBELL observed, equivalent to its defeat. The country would have much preferred an open opposition to this sort of covert hostility.

The Times, we observe, very unjustly attributes the opposition so suddenly shewn by the Government, to the promptings of the country Attorneys, thus pampering the public prejudice against the Lawyers. But the fact is entirely otherwise. So far from opposing the Enfranchisement of Copyholds, the country Attorneys are its warmest advocates, and have been and are among its most energetic promoters; and among no class of the community will the proceedings of the Government in the obstruction and delay of this Bill produce more indignation, and give more real vexation, than among the country Attorneys.

Should the issue be, as now is to be feared, that this Bill will be lost for the session, the promoters of it should not only enlist popular feeling for a still more energetic demand for copyhold enfranchisement in the next session of Parliament, but they should take care that the same favourable terms be not offered then as now. The proposal for compensation to the Lords of Manors contained in the present Bill is extremely liberal. If they should reject it, let them see that they are playing a losing game, and that every successive offer will be less favourable than its predecessor. Only thus can unreasonable men be brought to reason.

THE CHANCERY REFORMS.

AFTER it had come to be generally understood that these Bills were abandoned for the session—when half of the members of the House of Commons are canvassing, when the real business of the session was supposed to be almost done, the LORD CHANCELLOR has suddenly announced that it is his purpose to endeavour to make these Bills law before the dissolution. We doubt the propriety of this, even if it be practicable. They must be hurried through their stages without examination or discussion. The Commons must take them as they come, without even a committee, or they cannot be carried. But is it right that measures of such moment should be introduced at all into a dying Parliament, whose members are dispersed, whose thoughts are otherwise occupied, who cannot give them attention if they would? Will it be to the advantage or credit of the measures themselves, that they should be hurried into laws without even the consideration usually given to Bills of the smallest public concern? Ought legislation like this to be sanctioned by such a precedent for keeping back important measures to the end of a session, and then trying to carry them through in a rush? Chancery Reform is much to be desired, and we should lament its delay; but we should still more regret if it were to be imperfectly and hurriedly effected—dragged through a deserted Parliament, instead of being carried formally through a full House, with due deliberation.

FORMA PAUPERIS.

A REMARKABLE instance of the abuse of this privilege has been brought under the notice of the House of Lords, by Lord CAMPBELL.

A petition was presented by Mr. JESSE OLDFIELD, stating that he had been reduced from wealth to poverty by a series of actions in formâ pauperis, that had been brought against him by a Mr. CORBETT, and that no less than seven of such actions were now pending against him.

More than once we have directed the attention of our readers to the great abuse of that which was intended to be a great privilege. The law designed for the benefit of the poor has been perverted to the purposes of oppression; for inasmuch as a pauper suitor pays no costs, it is in the power of any man, by swearing that he is not worth 5*l.* to ruin any other man against whom he has a grudge, by harassing him with lawsuits. In the Profession, it is well known that this form of action is often used for the mere purpose of extorting money, the defendant knowing that although successful in defeating the pauper plaintiff, he must pay his own costs, and therefore it is cheaper to buy off his persecutor.

It was doubtless supposed that the certificate of a Barrister, that in his opinion there is a good cause of action, and which is a necessary preliminary to obtaining permission to sue as a pauper, would be a sufficient protection against wrongful suits. In practice it is found not to be so. Unfortunately, the Bar contains many disreputable men, who have no characters to lose, and still more ignorant men, who are incompetent to determine what is a good cause of action,—such being, indeed, the natural consequences of the facility of access to it, and the absence of all checks upon admission to an honourable and learned profession,—and from one or the other of these it is always easy to obtain a certificate.

A remedy for the mischief ought not to be delayed. It might be introduced into the Common Law Procedure Bill, now passing.

We have already proposed, as a cure, that all actions in formâ pauperis should be brought in the County Court, on the principle that a party who claims the privilege of suing another on such unequal terms as paying no costs if he fails, while he obtains them if he succeeds, should be compelled to go to the cheapest tribunal,—giving to the defendant the option of taking the case to the Superior Courts if he should prefer them, and even permitting the plaintiff to remove it, with leave of the Court above, on good cause shewn.

This would be the best remedy. But if this should be objected to, then we would suggest that there be a clause introduced into the Procedures Bill,—1st. Abolishing the certificate of counsel, and instead of it requiring leave from a Judge in Chambers, on good cause shewn, to sue in formâ pauperis. 2nd. Providing that, inasmuch as the plaintiff sues gratis, he shall recover no other costs than the money paid to witnesses for their attendance. (This would prevent speculative pauper suits, by Attorneys who take the chance of gain, knowing that they can lose nothing.)

We commend these hints to Lord CAMPBELL, who has interested himself in the case of Mr. OLDFIELD. If acted upon, they would prevent such abuses for the future. As for the past, could not the Court interfere to stay proceedings in actions manifestly vexatious, unless security be given for the costs?

WHAT'S TO BE DONE?

THIS is what our correspondents of the Junior Bar continually ask of us.

We fear that we can honestly return but one answer. Quit the Profession. It does not, it cannot, and it will not, give you a maintenance. It is vain to wait and hope. There is no hope. The fact is palpable, that there is an enormous superabundance of Barristers; and until the demand and supply are brought to their fair proportions, a large number must pine in idleness. It is folly to disguise the fact, that law has declined; that Lawyers are not so much in request as they used to be; and that in exact proportion to the falling off in the demand for them, the supply of Lawyers has increased.

The consequences are obvious, and they are inevitable.

But what to do? If we cannot live by the law, how are we to live?

Emigrate. Go to "the diggins." Cultivate wool in Australia, or corn in Canada. Take to some honest employment at home. Anything, rather than rust your life away in idleness or uselessness,—a burden to yourself and others. Happily, at this time all other callings are prosperous. There is no lack of employment. Hands are wanted everywhere, especially if they are linked with a head that can guide them. Labour will soon have capital at its mercy. It will dictate its own terms; appoint its own wages. A thousand ways are opened, and are daily opening, for industry and ability to thrive—in almost everything but the law. Trade is extending; agriculture is improving; the law alone is declining and drooping. The reason is, that the public have grown wiser, and prefer to settle their disputes without going to law; and this tendency is rapidly increasing. Upon the Attorneys, the effect has been comparatively trifling; for only a small fraction of their business was composed of law-suits, while they have found compensation for the decline of writs in the many new demands for their assistance, in their character of general agents, or advisers, growing out of the increased occupations of other classes. But to the Bar, whose business was almost entirely the product of actual litigation, the decline of this form of strife has been a falling off in employment that nothing can compensate, and no reforms can restore.

Until the numbers of the Bar are reduced to some reasonable proportion to the reduction of the business for which barristers are required, it will be the most unprofitable and hopeless profession for any man to adopt as a means of obtaining a livelihood; and therefore it would be wise for all who have not a fortune to maintain them, to hasten the restoration of the balance between the business to be done and the wigs to do it, by betaking themselves, as soon as possible, to some more profitable and promising occupation, either at home or abroad.

COMMON LAW PROCEDURE BILL.

This Bill has been revised and much reformed by the committee of the Lords and is sent down to the Commons, but whether with any hope of its becoming law this session we do not know.

It was very strange that, after the Law Reform Bill had been abandoned, the Government should have changed its mind, and suddenly resolved to make an endeavour to thrust them through Parliament at the end of the session, when the House of Commons is almost deserted, and the business was thought to have been completed.

As to the Common Law Bill, it does not matter much whether it become law this year or next. It does little towards restoring the lost business. It will cheapen the cost of an action enough to destroy the present small profits of the Attorney, without so cheapening it as to induce suitors to prefer the Superior Courts to the County Courts. The real cause of the preference for the County Courts is the speed with which a trial can be had there, and the small cost of bringing up witnesses. The Common Law Bill does not propose to supply these requisites, to enable the Superior Courts to compete with the inferior ones. It makes no provision for more speedy trial, by more frequent Assizes; nor for diminution of cost by sending the Judge to the witnesses instead of the witnesses to the Judge: without these provisions, no reform in procedure will be of any material advantage to the suitor or to the Profession, nor will it save the Common Law Courts from desertion.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

COMMON LAW AMENDMENT.

Monday, May 24.—Lord Cranworth brought up the report of the committee on common law proceedings, and moved that it be received.—Lord Lyndhurst would trouble their lordships by calling their attention to a rumour that had obtained circulation, to the effect that this measure was distasteful to the Government, and that they had retarded its progress through the select committee, to prevent its passing into law during the present session; and he (Lord Lyndhurst) thought it right to say that there was not the slightest foundation for this rumour. The Bill had been introduced by his noble and learned friend who lately held the great seal; it was read a second time, and referred, as a matter of course, to a select committee. The members of that select committee examined the Bill, clause by clause, for several days; a change then took place in the Government, and for a short time the meetings of the select committee were suspended for the purpose of ascertaining what course the new Government intended to pursue with respect to this Bill. The Bill, as a matter of course, came under the consideration of the Government; the sittings of the committee were then renewed, and continued until the indisposition of his noble and learned friend. As the Bill had been framed by him, it was considered proper and respectful that the sittings of the committee should be suspended during his illness; but in order that no delay should take place, such of the law lords as were members of the committee met in private, to continue the examination of the clauses, so that when the committee again met, the measure should be as mature as possible, and no further delay should take place. When his noble and learned friend was in a condition to attend the committee the Bill with all the amendments was considered, and adopted, and now reported to their lordships' house. He thought that after that statement their lordships would be of opinion there was not the slightest foundation for the report that had been in circulation respecting the hostility of the Government. He begged the House would indulge him while he made a few observations on the Bill itself, because little had been said of it in its progress through the House. The object of the Bill and of the select committee was to simplify and abridge the proceedings in the superior courts of common law, as far as was consistent with a due regard to justice; and he thought those objects had been successfully accomplished. He would not go through all the clauses of the Bill, but there were a few points to which he would refer. It was a well-known fact, that of actions commenced in the superior courts, not more than two per cent. or one in fifty, were contested; and when he told their lordships that by the operation of the Bill, in all that numerous class of cases the costs would never exceed 3*l.* their lordships would admit that the labours of the committee had been very beneficial to the country. The case in which hitherto there had been more perplexing technicalities than any other was in action for slander or defamation; but all that would be required by the present Bill was, that the statement of the defamatory words should be placed upon the record with the injury plaintiff attributed to them, and all the jury would have to find was, were the words spoken, and the sense they applied to them. It had been a question whether it was desirable to retain the forms of action, or whether it would not be better to allow each party to state his own case in his own words. The question was much considered by the committee, and, after a careful examination, they were of opinion that it was not advisable to adopt the latter course of proceeding. In the first place, it was said, that from inadvertence, carelessness, or ignorance of the law, errors would arise; and, again, if they let a party state his own case in his own words, a great deal of unnecessary matter would be introduced, and a great deal of perplexity would ensue. The consequences would be—what the committee was desirous to avoid—applications to the judges in chamber to strike out unnecessary matter. The committee therefore had adhered to the ancient forms, but they had struck out every word that was unnecessary. There was another point, and a material one, to which he would refer, with respect to the plurality of pleading. It was supposed by the public that nothing could be more inconvenient than to allow the defendant to resort to a great variety of different pleas. The abuse had been carried to a very great extent; but at the same time, if a party had two good defences, and was obliged to abandon one and select the other, it would be the greatest possible injustice. The committee had therefore allowed double pleas in cases of that description. A party against whom a claim was made might contest a claim and say there was no foundation for it, and he might also rely upon a set off; and it would be an injustice to say that a party who had thus a double defence should be compelled to rely only upon one of them. There was another point to which he also desired to call attention, which had not originated with him, but with his noble friend the late Lord Chief Justice. It had reference to the law of ejectment, and he had received a communication from his noble and learned friend that if the third reading were fixed for Thursday, he would be able to attend and urge the amendments he desired to have adopted. In order to obviate the inconvenience that might arise from bringing forward those amendments on the third reading, his noble and learned friend had sent to him the form of notice which he proposed to place upon the votes; that notice would be printed before the discussion came on, so that noble lords might know the points to which he meant to refer. Lord CRANWORTH was rejoiced, in common with their lordships, to hear the statement that had been made by the noble lord; but he hoped their lordships would not conceive that the points to which he had adverted were the only important points in the Bill. They might fairly be taken as samples of the amendments, which would have a tendency to make the law in the Superior Courts of law more cheap and intelligible. He did not give credence to the general notion that the Government were opposed to this measure. He considered that it was looked upon as a question unconnected with party, and that the measure would lead to beneficial results.

The motion was then agreed to.

FORMA PAUPERIS.

Lord CAMPBELL presented a petition from Mr. Jessie Oldfield, complaining of the losses to which he has been subjected through the proceedings of Mr. William Cobbett, under the Habeas Corpus Act, and under the law enabling a party to sue in forma pauperis, and praying their lordships would enact a law to prevent the monstrous abuses now perpetrated by means of writs of habeas corpus and actions in forma pauperis.—The LORD CHANCELLOR thought that writs of habeas corpus had been issued more liberally than they ought to have been, and had been converted into instruments of persecution against this unfortunate man.—Lord CAMPBELL begged leave to move for a return of the number of writs of habeas corpus issued by Mr. William Cobbett since the 1st of October, 1839, and the result, and likewise for a return of the number of actions brought by him since that day, suing in forma pauperis, and the judicial result of them.

COPYHOLD ENFRANCHISEMENT.

TUESDAY, May 25.—Lord CRANWORTH moved the second reading of the Copyhold Enfranchisement Bill, and after entering into a detail of the absurdities and inconveniences of the existing system, concluded by stating that the object of the Bill was to enable lords to compel tenants, and tenants to compel lords, to enfranchise under certain modifications, which would not operate with hardship upon either lord or tenant.—The LORD CHANCELLOR admitted the great inconvenience resulting from the existing system, but thought the Bill in its present shape could not with safety be allowed to pass, and therefore proposed that it be referred to a select committee.—Lord CAMPBELL had hoped that the Bill would have become law during the session, but feared the speech of the Lord Chancellor was fatal to it.—After some further discussion, in which the LORD CHANCELLOR assured the House that the Government had no intention, when they proposed that the Bill should be referred to a select committee, of throwing it over for another session, the Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be referred to a select committee. — Some other Bills were also forwarded a stage, and their lordships adjourned.

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLDS BILL.

THURSDAY, May, 27.—The LORD CHANCELLOR named the select committee on this Bill.—Lord CAMPBELL was understood to decline to act on the committee. He did not think that under the circumstances there was any chance of passing the Bill this session, and there was no use, therefore, in going into the details.—The names were then agreed to, Earl Fitzwilliam being substituted for Lord Campbell.

COMMON LAW PROCEDURE AMENDMENT BILL.

Lord TRURO, on moving the third reading of this Bill, highly eulogised the report of the commissioners upon which it was founded, and stated that the object of the Bill was to facilitate justice and lessen its cost. He did not expect that it would be found to be a perfect measure, but a power was reserved to the judges to correct any errors which might be found to exist, and carry into full effect the objects of the Bill; not an absolute power to be exercised by them in the first instance, but subject to the approbation of Parliament. The noble and learned Lord, in conclusion, said he should propose a clause giving power to the judge of a superior court to verify warrants issued from inferior courts, with a view to seize the goods or persons of defendants in any other county to which they may have removed.—Lord DENMAN was exceedingly happy to bear testimony to the merits of the Bill.—Lord CAMPBELL expressed his gratification at hearing that his noble and learned friend approved of the Bill. He believed that it would effect a vast improvement in common law procedure.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said he should be very glad to see this Bill, if found to work well in England, extended to Ireland.—The Bill was read a third time, and two clauses, one moved by Lord Truro and the other by Lord Denman, having been added, the Bill passed.

REFORM OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY.

FRIDAY, May 28. — The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of the Improvement of the Jurisdiction of Equity Bill, and that it should be referred to the same select committee as had already under consideration the Bill for the Abolition of Masters in Chancery.—Lord CRANWORTH said, that although he approved of the Bill in the main, he must not be supposed to commit himself to the approbation of all the details. The Bill had only been recently printed, nor had there yet been adequate time for fully considering it. Should any difficulties arise when it was under consideration before the select committee, and should it therefore be found impossible to pass it during the present session, he hoped that would not be allowed to impede the progress of the Bill for the Abolition of the Masters in Chancery.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that he could hardly conceive any circumstances which could arise to prevent this Bill going on. Although there had been despatch there had been no hurry in the preparation of this measure. In the first place this Bill, and that for the abolition of the Masters in the Court of Chancery, were the result of the labours of a commission appointed by the Crown, which had not only upon it the most able persons to direct its proceedings and to carry them into effect, but which gave the utmost time and deliberation to the subject. He had himself taken every possible care that a man should with regard to so important a measure. He had that day gone through the whole of its provisions with the equity judges, and as all the law lords were members of the select committee to which it was proposed to refer it, they would have the fullest means of meeting any difficulty, should such arise. This Bill, and that for the abolition of the Masters' office, were so connected that he was not disposed to press one without the other, as in that case the judges might find themselves placed in a situation in which it would be very difficult for them to carry on the due and proper administration of justice in the country.

The Bill was then read a second time, and referred to the select committee on the Bill for the abolition of the Masters in Chancery.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

GRAND JURIES ABOLITION.

MONDAY, May 24.—In answer to a question put by Mr. FRESHFIELD, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that he did not see any reason for giving compensation to clerks of the peace or clerks of arraigns, in consequence of the abolition of grand juries. The case of the crier was, however, different, and he was not aware of any objection to the transfer of the fees of 6d. paid upon swearing witnesses before grand juries, at present received by the crier, to oaths administered in court, and upon which no fee was now taken by that functionary.

LAW OF WILLS AMENDMENT BILL.

THURSDAY, May 27. — The House went into committee. Mr. BETHELL objected to the wording of the first and principal clause of the Bill, and proposed to substitute an amended clause. After a debate of some length, a motion to report progress was negatived upon a division, and ultimately the Bill passed through the committee without amendment.

PUNISHMENT OF CRIMINALS.

FRIDAY, May 28.—Mr. CARTER wished to ask the Secretary for the Home Department, if he was aware that men above thirty years of age, married men, and fathers of families, are subjected to the degradation of whipping, as part of their punishment, on conviction of larceny or other petty offences; and, if there is any law or statute the intent of which was to authorize county magistrates to inflict the lash on such persons of mature age?—Mr. WALPOLE was aware that by the statute of Geo. 4 persons convicted of felony or larceny were liable to be ordered to be whipped at the discretion of the Court before whom they were tried.

INCOME TAX.—A return of the House of Commons, which has been printed, states that the amount of property and income tax refunded for all the schedules, in the year 1850, was 105,959*l.* under the following heads:—On incomes under 150*l.* 65,002*l.*; on errors, &c. 1,675*l.*; on hospitals, schools, &c. 11,337*l.*; on ecclesiastical bodies under schedule A, 4,618*l.*; on friendly societies, 19,863*l.*

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

THE following facts were held to be evidence of a settlement by payment of rates, and renting. A. and B., father and son, were joint tenants of a farm of requisite value. B. lived in the farm-house, but the rent was paid by the hands of A. During the year of occupation, three rates were made, which were demanded of A. and paid by him. In the rate-book the property was rated for the first two rates in the name of "Mr. A." and to the last in that of A. (Reg. v. Inhabitants of Uthwaite, 19 Law T. Rep. 136.)

There has been no end to doubts and difficulties arising out of the various opinions of the Judges, as to what constitutes a threat or inducement, such as to exclude a prisoner's confession. One of the questions has now been before the Criminal Appeal Court. The constable, on apprehending the prisoner, said,—"You need not say anything to criminate yourself. What you do say will be taken down, and used in evidence against you." Many previous decisions of single judges had held this to be a threat or inducement. But the Court of Criminal Appeal has at length determined otherwise, and that it does not exclude a confession that the prisoner has been told it will be used against him at his trial. POLLOCK, C.B. said,—"I deem it important, for the protection of innocence, that every man when he is charged with an offence should be distinctly told the nature of it, and that attention should be paid to anything which at that moment he may choose to say with regard to it, as he may be in a situation to make some statement which may ultimately lead to the proof of his innocence; but it is also important that he should be reminded that he is under no obligation to criminate himself, and that if he does state anything to criminate himself, it will be given in evidence against him." (Reg. v. Baldry, 19 Law T. Rep. 146.)

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

THE House of Lords has taken very nearly the same rational and just view of the claims of land owners against companies which we have lately noticed as being prevalent in the Courts of Equity. In Anstruther v. The East of Fife Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 130, a landowner had agreed to withdraw his opposition to the Bill on his claims being referred to arbitration. The Bill passed, but the railway was never made, and therefore the land was not required. But, nevertheless, a bill was filed to restrain the company from dissolving and returning the money to the shareholders because the plaintiff's claim was unliquidated, that is, a claim for nothing rendered on his part. But the House of Lords, almost with indignation, rejected the application. "It has never been established," said the judgment, "that a mere landowner, as such, can come and ask that a company, not having taken a single step towards the execution of the intended project, and I speak now of a railway, shall be compelled to execute that railway."

The Lords Justices have decided on appeal the questions raised in the Court below, and already commented upon here in the case of Sparrow v. The Oxford, &c. Railway Company, 19 Law. T. Rep. 131, holding that land adjoining a manufactory, and taken for the purpose of being covered with buildings in extension of it, formed a part of the manufactory itself, within the meaning of the 92nd sec. of the Lands Clauses Act; and, therefore, the company was bound to take the whole. Tunnelling under the manufactory was also held to be taking a part of it.

In the same case the general rule was asserted, that in construing an Act of Parliament under which property is to be compulsorily taken, it will be read most favourably to those who seek to defend the property from innovation

A question as to the liability of a railway company as carriers, was raised in the form of an appeal from the County Courts. In Morville v. The Great Northern Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 140, the facts were, that a horse had been sent to be conveyed from A. to B. The owner signed a ticket, which stated that he was "to bear all the risk of injury by conveyance, and other contingencies," and "to see to the efficiency of the carriages before he allows his horses or live stock to be placed therein." And then the owner certified that he had "inspected the carriages, and was satisfied with their sufficiency and safety." The horse was injured. The Court of Q. B. held it not to be a mere notice under sec. 4 of the Carriers Act, but a general contract within sec. 6, and protected the company from damage done even through their own negligence.

WINDING UP.

The winding-up litigation is gradually declining. No further attempts are likely to be made to apply these statutes to the cases for which they were not designed, as they are entirely inapplicable to companies projected only, and not formed. For the winding up of real companies, having a positive existence, so that their members can be readily ascertained, and whose respective liabilities are unquestionable, these statutes are most useful and efficient, they have only failed when sought to be applied to illegitimate purposes.

It seems from Re the Staffordshire, &c. Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 106, that unless a party having money of the company in his possession admits it to be the company's money, he will not be ordered to give it up; sec. 66 of the Winding-up Act not being applicable to a case in which a party admitted that he had money of the company in his hands, but said he had parted with it.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

No less than five cases on Wills were reported last week. Most of them turn on nice points of construction of particular words, and involving no general principle, do not require to be noticed in this summary, which is designed to present such only of the new decisions as should be remembered or noted by practitioners. In Edwards v. Edwards, 19 Law T. Rep. 133, the Master of the Rolls stated a rule which may be conveniently borne in mind, viz. that when a bequest over is in case of the legatee's death, and no other reference can be made, the period taken is the life of the testator; but where another can be found, that will be preferred, in order to avoid the supposition of the testator having contemplated and provided against the lapse. A preceding gift for life, or any other interest less than the gift of the property, will furnish this reference.

In Wilson v. Eden, 19 Law T. Rep. 137, a will made before the new Wills' Act, but republished by a codicil made after it, was held to come within the provisions of that statute, so that, by the 26th section, leaseholds passed under a general devise of real estate, no contrary intention appearing, and in considering whether such did appear, the Court said, "We are not to look at any mere technicalities, but taking into account the facts which existed, and which are applicable to the explanation of the will, we must see, if we can, what was the intention of the testator as it appears by his will."

In The Attorney-General v. Lord Henniker, 19 Law T. Rep. 144, A. gave power to B. to appoint 2,000l. to his wife, if he thinks fit, and in the same instrument he imposed on her the condition of relinquishing her dower or free bench. Was this a purchase of the dower, or a condition on receipt of a legacy, so as to be liable to legacy duty? It was held to be only an appointment of the legacy with a condition, and liable to the duty.

In O'Grady v. Buist, 19 Law T. Rep. 147, all the children of an intestate were advanced. But it was held that this did not take the case out of the 2nd section of the Statute of Distributions, but that the assets must be brought into hotchpot and distributed equally.

Query.

Sir,—Can you, or any of your readers, inform me whether it is necessary that a woman, who is a trustee under a will, and after the death of the testator marries, should, on a mortgage by her of part of the trust estate, acknowledge the deed?

Manchester, May 20, 1852. G. J.

Sales of Encumbered Estates.—Three properties were sold yesterday at rates which indicate a steady improvement in the state of the Irish land market. Twenty acres of building ground situated in the township of Rathmines and suburbs of Dublin, subject to 247l. per annum head rent, and yielding a profit rent of 121l. sold for 1,620l. over 13 years' purchase. The Meath estates of Mr. Edward Knox, comprising 120 statute acres, partly unset, and producing a net rental of 192l. a-year, but estimated b the Poor Law valuation at but 364l. realised 9,100l. equal to 18½ years' purchase on the rental, or years, according to the lower valuation. The estate of Lady Hesketh, also lying in the county of Meath occupying 2,770 statute acres, yielding a net rent o 2,713l. per annum, to be sold subject to a jointure o 461l. 10s. 9d. produced the large sum of 51,190l or 19 years' purchase. The gross amount of the day's sale was 61,910l.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

The Reports of the last week abound in County Court cases, most of them appeals.

The first we have to notice is a decision of very great interest to practitioners. It had long been moot point whether execution could be had for the residue of debt and costs, or for costs only, where judgment had been obtained, and an order made thereon, to pay the debt and costs into Court, bu a portion of the sum so ordered has been paid to the plaintiff out of Court. The Q. B. has now decided that execution may issue in such case for the residue. "It is obvious," said Lord Campbell, C. J. "that the plaintiff's power of settling with the defendant, without an execution, may be the means of saving expense; by so settling for a part, he does not, in our judgment, incur any incapacity in respect of obtaining execution for the remainder. I wish it to be understood that it is our clear opinion, that if the whole of the debt has been paid, there may be execution for the costs: and if a part has been paid, there may be execution for the residue and for the costs." (Reg. v. The Clerk of the County Court of Surrey, 19 Law T. Rep. 136.)

The duty of the clerk in orders to pay by instalments was considered in Robinson v. Gill, 19 Law T. Rep. 142. An action was brought against A. and B. A. did not appear, and in his absence judgment was given for plaintiff, and an order made for payment of debt and costs, by weekly instalments. The clerk prepared an incorrect notice of the order, which was served on A. and, upon his nonpayment, according to the terms of the original order, his goods were seized. For this he brought an action against the clerk. But the C. B. held that he was not liable, inasmuch as no such duty is imposed upon the clerk as the preparation of a notice of an order for payment by instalments. It was contended that the 114th rule threw this burden upon him. But Jervis, C. J. said "In our opinion this rule has no such operation. It does not enlarge the duties of the County Court clerk beyond the provisions of the Act of Parliament, but was formed merely for the purpose of pointing out by whom service was to be made. The orders which require service within the provisions of the statute, or by the practice of the Court, do not include judgments. The rules of practice drawn up by the Judges are not an exposition of the statute."

There are two other cases of appeals from the County Courts, but as they relate wholly to questions of general law, and not to the law and practice of the County Courts, they are noticed in their proper departments.

A very curious point in Insolvency has been raised, but not decided, in Re Hunter, 19 Law T. Rep. 147, viz. whether where the Court has no power to enforce a compulsory setting aside of the pay of an East India Company's officer, it can enforce a voluntary undertaking to do so in order to avoid opposition by creditors.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

Common Law Practice.—In an Anonymous case, 19 Law T. Rep. 148, it was intimated that where an attorney states, in entering an appearance, a place to be his residence, a notice may be served at such place, although the inhabitants state that he does not reside there, and refuse to take any papers for him.

In Williamson v. Livesay, 19 Law T. Rep. 148, a witness attending a petty sessions to give evidence was held to be privileged from arrest.

A question of Evidence was decided in a County Court appeal, although the real question intended to be raised was upon the Truck Act. In an action for wages by a collier, it was proved that he had received the sum due, in coin, at a pay-office adjoining a shop kept by his employers for the sale of goods to their own workpeople and others, and that immediately on receipt of it he had spent the money in the shop. To prove that he had dealt at the shop under compulsion evidence was offered of a conversation between the plaintiff and the overlooker under whom he worked. The overlooker was not authorized to employ or dismiss the men under him, which was the proper duty of the coal agent, but he stated that he had received a paper from a clerk in the office of the coal agent, whose principal duty was to ascertain the amount of the work done by the men, containing a list of the persons whom he was to remember as not dealing at the shop; that this paper contained the plaintiff's name, and that he produced it at the time of the conversation, in which the overlooker threatened the plaintiff with his employers' displeasure if he did not deal more largely at their shop. The Court of Q. B. held, that this statement was not admissible as evidence against the employers, he having no authority to make it. "If," said Coleridge, J. "a person employed in a subordinate situation does or says something within the scope of his employment, it may fairly be presumed that he has a general authority, which renders such declarations binding on his employers; but when he goes beyond the sphere of his duties, and still more, if he does something illegal, and attended with penal consequences, it would be very unjust and unreasonable to hold his employer bound by his acts." (Olding v. Smith, 19 Law T. Rep. 140.)

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

Where a merchant, resident abroad, desires to preserve his right in property transmitted to England, until certain bills drawn by him to cover the purchase-money are accepted, the bill of lading should be transmitted by him indorsed in blank to an agent, to be delivered over, when the bills have been so accepted. Where this precaution was neglected, the property in the goods was held to have vested at once in the consignee. (Key v. Cottesworth, 19 Law T. Rep. 145.)

In Ex parte Harris, 19 Law T. Rep. 146, Mr. Commissioner Ayrton has decided that the Court of Bankruptcy cannot annul with the creditor's consent, except under secs. 130 and 131; and that even if it had such jurisdiction, it would not so annul, where the bankrupt may have to be prosecuted for offences against the bankrupt law.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

ORDER OF COURT, MAY 7, 1852. — INVESTMENTS UNDER TRUSTEES RELIEF ACT.

THE Right Honourable Edward Burtenshaw Lord St. Leonards, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, with the assistance of the Right Honourable Sir John Romilly, Knight, Master of the Rolls, doth hereby, in pursuance of an Act of Parliament passed in the 10th and 11th year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for better securing Trust Funds, and for the relief of Trustees," and in pursuance and execution of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, order and direct in manner following, that is to say :—

Where any trustee, desiring to pay money or transfer stock or securities into the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, under the said Act is, under a General Order of the said Court, dated the 10th day of June, 1848, directed to file an affidavit, intitled in the matter of the Act and the trust, setting forth certain matters and things in the said Order of Court specified and declared, in future such affidavit in every case where the parties deem it necessary to have the money, or the dividends, or interest of stock or securities invested in the mean time, shall further contain a statement to that effect; and if the affidavit shall contain no such statement, the Accountant-General shall be at liberty to invest, as soon as conveniently may be, the said cash in Bank 3*l.* per cent. Annuities, in the matter of the particular trust; or in cases of dividends or interest on stock or securities transferred, such dividends or interest in the like stock, and all accumulations of the dividends of the stock in which such cash shall be invested, and of the dividends or interest on such stock or securities as aforesaid, from time to time in the like matter, without any special order, made by the Court in that behalf, and without any formal request for that purpose: and the Accountant-General is to declare the trust thereof when purchased subject to the Order of this Court. And for the purposes aforesaid the Accountant-General is to draw on the bank, according to the form prescribed by the Act of Parliament and the General Rules and Orders of this Court in that case made and provided.

Provided always, that if at any time a request in writing, by or on behalf of any party claiming to be entitled, that such investment be discontinued, shall be left with the Accountant-General, he shall be at liberty to cease making any further investment in the particular trust until the Court shall have made some order in their behalf.

SOLICITORS' AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

THE sixth annual general meeting of the Proprietors of this Company was held on Thursday, 27th inst. at the Gray's Inn Coffee-House, for the purpose of presenting the annual report and accounts, and for the election of officers.

WM. MURRAY, Esq. was called to the chair.

Mr. GILL (the Secretary) read the advertisement calling the meeting, and the minutes of the last meeting, which latter having been confirmed,

Mr. NEISON read the following

REPORT.

The Directors, in submitting their Sixth Annual Report, beg to state, that since the last meeting of the shareholders of this Society, the number of new policies issued has been 161 for Assurances, amounting to ...... £64,316 and yielding annual premiums to the extent of 2,132

During the same period six annuities, of the value of .... 2,308 have been granted.

In connection with the above statement, the Directors feel a pleasure in bringing under the consideration of the meeting the amount of business transacted by the Society since its commencement, for, although the new policies effected during the past year have not yielded so large an income as those of preceding years, the general result of the Society's operations cannot be looked upon in other than a favourable light, and must be considered to hold out most encouraging prospects both to the shareholders and to the assured, as evinced by the following analysis of the business which has been done, and of the present condition of the Company :—

Total number of policies issued since the commencement of the Society, exclusive of 18 annuities		1,195
Number of policies since discontinued and lapsed	212
Number of policies become claims, assuring 29 lives	32
		244
Number of policies now in force		951
The amount of assurances effected since the commencement		£564,577
Assurances since lapsed and discontinued	£122,204
Assurances under policies which have become claims	13,310
		135,514
Total amount of policies now in force		£429,063
The amount of yearly premiums payable under the whole of the policies from the beginning was		£17,875
Deduct the yearly premiums payable on lapsed and discontinued policies	£3,294
Also the yearly premiums on policies which have become claims	496
		3,790

The existing yearly premiums on policies now in force	£11,095
In addition to the above, 18 annuities have been granted, of the value of	6,113
The following is a succinct statement of the present engagements and funds of the Society:—
Amount of Assurances in force	420,063
Annuities of the value of	6,113
Capital realized and invested	53,700
Annual income derivable from premiums and investments	16,200
It has been stated that claims have arisen to the extent of	13,310
but at the same time the premiums which have been received on lapsed and discontinued policies have been no less than	7,155
Consequently the actual loss sustained by the Society, which is to be met from other sources, has been only	6,155

Fifteen policies on twelve lives have become claims during the past year, for assurances amounting to 7,612*l* being an average of 635*l*. on each life, or an average of 507*l* on each policy, but this amount of loss, though much larger than that experienced in any previous year, can only be considered as accidental, and due to the fluctuations to which small numbers are always subject, and should fairly have been expected from the natural reaction of the very low rates of mortality which prevailed in the former years.

The gross amount of claims has averaged about 2,220*l*. yearly, and the surplus of claims over premiums received in respect of lapsed and discontinued policies has averaged no more than 1,027*l*. yearly.

Notwithstanding the greater amount of losses, the Society has increased its funds during the past year to no less a sum than 10,700*l*. thus placing at its disposal a largely increased amount of capital, for which advantageous employment has been found.

The Directors have the satisfaction of announcing that the whole of the Society's shares are fully subscribed for, thus affording to the assured the security of a subscribed capital of one million, without subjecting them to any liability for interest on capital or guarantee fund.

The Directors cannot refrain from calling attention to the fact that this office has been enabled so to employ the paid-up capital as to make it a source of profit, the whole being invested on good securities, yielding interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, while the interest payable to the proprietary in respect of it is 4 per cent. per annum, and therefore (its amount being 25,000*l*.) adds 250*l*. per annum to the profits of the Society.

It will have been seen by the annual account transmitted to the shareholders that an unusual item of expenditure appeared there under the head of "Extension Expenses;" and the directors, in calling attention to it, have to remark that it was an expense unwillingly incurred by them but considered necessary, inasmuch as the active competition for life business, caused by the establishment of several new, and the revived energy of the older offices, did not allow them to depend, as heretofore, on the shareholders alone for the introduction of business, but compelled them to devise some means by which the advantages offered by the society could be prominently brought under the notice of the profession, and which they had reason to believe would be best accomplished by sending agents throughout the country, to explain those advantages, and to solicit the co-operation of the profession.

The Directors cannot, however, but feel that the expense referred to has been, in a great measure, forced upon them; for had the shareholders more actively exerted themselves in furthering the business of the office, consisting as they do of 392 members, it would only have been necessary to have kept the society in the view of the public by occasional advertisements.

The Directors, however, must not be understood to regret the expense to which they have specially referred, inasmuch as the promises of support which have been given by the solicitors in the counties visited cannot ultimately fail to produce most beneficial results; no less than 1,170 members of the profession having subsequently required the necessary forms and instructions for effecting insurances, and intimated their intention of favouring the office with business.

The Directors have great pleasure in informing the shareholders that they have succeeded in obtaining a long lease of most eligible premises in Chancery-lane, and that the business of the office will be transacted there by the end of the current year, at which time the lease of the chambers now occupied will expire. The Directors have every confidence that the change into the new house, which will be entirely devoted to the requirements of the Society, will also be productive of good consequences, as, independent of other advantages, the premises themselves, from their advantageous position, will keep the Society continually in view of the profession and the public—a point not lost sight of by elder offices, as is manifested by the situation and appearance of their respective establishment.

The statement of the receipts and expenditure of the Society for the year ending the 31st of December last, duly audited, has been forwarded to every member of the Society.

The Directors retiring by rotation are Messrs. William Jones, John Smale Torr, Charles Wordsworth, and John Michael Morris, who are eligible for re-election, and offer themselves accordingly.

Since the last meeting of the proprietors a vacancy has occurred in the direction which the Board have refrained from filling up pro tempore, but have left the election entirely in the hands of the proprietary; Thomas Butts Tanqueray Willaume, esq. of New Broad-street; and William Roberts Harris, esq. of Essex-street, Strand, both being shareholders duly qualified, are candidates to fill up the vacancy.

In the terms of the deed of settlement all the auditors go out of office, but are eligible for re-election, and offer themselves accordingly, and Charles Horsley, esq. of Staple-inn, also offers himself as a candidate for the office of auditor for the ensuing year.

In conclusion, the Directors cannot too strongly urge upon the shareholders the necessity of their co-operation, feeling assured that if the influence of so large a number of the legal profession were fairly exerted in extending the business of the Society, they would, at the next meeting, when the profits will be declared, have to give a flattering and satisfactory account of their stewardship.

The CHAIRMAN, in moving that the report be received and adopted, stated that the number of general board meetings during the past year had been fifty-three, and the aggregate attendances of directors 487, shewing an average attendance of nine directors at each board. He also corrected an error in the last year's balance-sheet; under the head assets, the 3¼ per cent. stock was carried out as 13,000*l*. 8s. 1½d. instead of 13,486*l*. 10s. 6d. the auditors having taken the balance of the sale of long annuities in the interval, without having ascertained the cost of the 3¼ per cent.

Mr. J. THOMPSON, referring to the item of 819*l*. 10s. for "business extension expenses," wished to know whether that expenditure had left behind it any permanently beneficial result to the society, in the appointment of local agents; or whether it was merely so much money sunk, and no tangible good derived from it? He also wished to know the amount of the building contract; and whether it was to be paid for out of the profits of the past, or distributed over future years' business.

The CHAIRMAN replied, as to the first question, that the expenses stated had been incurred in sending gentlemen of experience and ability round the country, to communicate with the solicitors in the provincial towns, and urge them to support the society; the directors thinking personal communication by such means better was than by circular. The expenses had been greater than the directors had at first contemplated; but they had very good reason to believe that the money was not thrown away, and that it would have its desired effect on future years. With reference to the building contract, the estimated amount was 1,100*l*. which the directors would adhere to as nearly as they practically could. The amount, whatever it was, would be borne by future profits.

A SHAREHOLDER thought that the solicitors were a body quite strong enough to carry out their purpose without spending their money for travelling expenses in hawking about the country the utility of their society, with the view of increasing its income.

Mr. THOMPSON did not agree with the objection of the last speaker, because he had been informed that the Anchor Assurance Office employed a gentleman entirely as travelling director, who, wherever he went, left permanent fruits behind him, by the establishment of local agencies in Manchester, Liverpool, and other leading towns of the country, thus creating a nucleus around which the solicitors in the district might rally. This gentleman's exertions had been stated to be worth all the cost of his expenses, and the office which he had promoted had made great and rapid strides in the estimation of the public. Therefore he (Mr. Thompson) considered it a very judicious expenditure of money.

The CHAIRMAN, in replying to these observations, agreed with the gentleman who said that the solicitors ought not to require canvassers for the office, but it was because they did not as a body do their duty that the directors, in the exercise of their best discretion for the interest of the society, had thought fit to take the step now commented upon. If the shareholders would be their own advertisers they would save the expense of employing others to do what they ought to do themselves; and if they did not exert themselves they ought not to complain at the annual meeting that the directors, in sending round the country gentlemen to canvass the solicitors quietly, were doing wrong. He should be most happy to move the discontinuance of the expense of advertising, if each shareholder would undertake to forward to the office one policy during the ensuing year. The return at present was, that eighteen policies had been gained, and the expenses of advertising saved.

Mr. HORSLEY wished to test the expenses of the society by those of the "Clerical and Medical," and "National Provident" Societies, the former of which was three and a quarter, and the latter three and three-quarters per cent.

The CHAIRMAN said, the "Clerical and Medical" office was nearly thirty years of age.

Mr. HORSLEY observed, that the "National Provident was only two years older than "The Solicitors'" office.

The CHAIRMAN admitted that the question was a very important one, but the application of it might be quite misunderstood. There never was an instance of an office, of an age of the present society, managing so large an amount of business upon such a very reduced scale of expenditure. Both the offices named had been most unprecedentedly successful, but the expenses of the management of this company for the corresponding periods of both those societies was much less than either of them. One of those offices was known not to be a type of economy; but it was not properly a life office or trading company: it was, strictly speaking, a Friendly Society, and in consequence of that had evaded Acts of Parliament, which had made it popular, and against those evasions petitions had been presented to both Houses of Parliament. Having acquired a very enormous revenue, that revenue required very little more expense for management and control, than a young company like the "Solicitors'" was obliged to incur; it was, therefore, very difficult to compare the expenses of two such institutions. As to the "Clerical and Medical," the high rate of its premiums was such that its revenue was enormous—110,000*l*. a year; but a larger expenditure was not required for its management. The solicitors were a body of men so intimately connected and identified with their own office, in carrying policies to it, that he had no doubt when it was as old as the "Clerical and Medical," it would have a much larger revenue. Besides, in another point of view, the comparison would not hold good, for the "Clerical and Medical" was not a remarkably successful project in its infancy. It was impossible to confine the expenses to 3 per cent. upon the revenue. The same question which had been asked as to how the building expenses were to be charged, would apply to the general expenses of management, and could only be properly answered when a valuation was made of the net liabilities. He knew of no office where more economy was practised than in the "Solicitors'," and, in fact, it was its extreme economy which retarded its progress.

Mr. THOMPSON was quite satisfied with the economical management of the office, but he would have been more satisfied if he had seen some tangible return for the sum of 819*l*. spent in the travelling expenses of canvassers. While he agreed that it was desirable to advocate the claims of the office to the support of the country solicitors, by means of a travelling agent, he thought it might be better done by paying such agent a very liberal commission on all policies which he collected.

The motion for receiving and adopting the report was then put, and carried.

Messrs. W. Jones, John Smale Torr, Charles Wordsworth, and John Michael Morris, the retiring directors, were then re-elected.

Mr. JONES, in returning thanks as the senior director, assured the meeting that nothing that transpired in the way of inquiry at the office or at the meetings of the society could be otherwise than satisfactory to the feelings of the directors. There must be always differences of opinion as to the best means of acquiring business for such a society. Some persons said the directors ought to spend 100*l*. a year in advertisements; others suggested that, in consequence of the great competition which was going on throughout the country in establishing local boards and agencies, the directors ought to send gentlemen of intelligence and good address to wait upon the solicitors, and inform them of the advantages of insuring in the society. He confessed (though he was opposed to it) that the directors had felt themselves called upon to incur the expense that had been alluded to, because they really did feel that there had not been those exertions made by the members of the society throughout the country that there ought to have been. If they only multiplied the premiums already received, the expense would soon be recouped, and there was no reason to doubt that that would be the case, from the returns made to the board. It was not intended to be a continuing expense, but the plan was merely tried as an experiment, under the best advice, with the greatest consideration, and he hoped on sound judgment and discretion. In conclusion, he assured the meeting that he knew of no body of men who were more anxious to protect their interest than the directors of the Solicitors' and General Life Office, as the attendances during the past year would amply testify.

Mr. FLOWER then proposed the election of Mr. Thos. Butts Tanqueray Willaume, in the place of Mr. J. C. Symons, who had retired from the direction.

Mr. WARE seconded the motion.

Mr. J. THOMPSON proposed Mr. Wm. Roberts Harris as a candidate for the vacant seat in the direction, and in doing so, stated that he was himself in some degree responsible for the contest about to take place; but when he was applied to by a gentleman to assist him upon grounds which he could not resist, he could not advise him to withdraw, merely because another gentleman had been nominated; and, therefore, he felt that that was a sufficient justification for putting the society to the expense of the contest, and for bringing to the meeting such an unusually large attendance of members. He never had had any other feeling than that of confidence in the management of the society, and in proposing Mr. Harris, he did not desire to cast any reflection upon those who had proposed another gentleman for the office of director, but he introduced Mr. Harris to the meeting because he was supported by a very large and influential body of persons in the country, who were unable to attend the meeting. Since Monday last, he had had placed in his hands a list of the shareholders of the society, and he was much surprised to find that so large a proportion were country members, and so few resided in London, which gave him the notion that the Solicitors' Insurance Society was substantially a country society. Therefore, when he turned to the deed of settlement, and found in it a clause which had the effect of swamping the influence and the votes of the country members of the society, he was indeed surprised, and was anxious to find out how such a clause came to be interpolated in the deed, as that by which any member was prohibited from holding more than three proxies. Supposing sixty of the members resided in the country, and forty in London, why should the influence of the provincial members be swamped if they could not get independent members to hold their proxies? He thought it was a most unjust clause. Since the formation of the society three directors had gone out of office—Mr. Bowstead, Mr. Cox, and Mr. Symons, all barristers; and he had understood, though it was not so expressed in the deed of settlement, that the members of the bar should form one-third of the directors; he could not understand why one branch of the profession should be nominated in preference to the other. He had been told that the society did not want barristers for directors, as it was said barristers brought no business to the office; but he had heard a clergyman say that it was a Solicitors' Society, and, therefore, he would not join it,—so that both classes had their objectors. Was it true, he asked, that barristers brought no business to the office? Did they not insure their lives, perhaps, to a greater extent than any other class of the community? Now, there had been some vacancies with regard to the auditors. But, at the very same time that the members received the notice of those vacancies in the office of directors and auditors, they were also informed of gentlemen who were candidates for the vacant offices. The very circular convening the meeting was dated the 6th of May, which was the first intimation the shareholders got of there being any vacancy at all (hear, hear), and yet in three weeks the general meeting was to be held, and there was in small print at the bottom of the circular a notification that unless within fourteen days previous to the meeting a member sent in a written notice of his intention to become a candidate for the office of director, he could not be allowed to stand; therefore allowing only six days to prepare for a possible contest. That was sharp practice, to say the least of it, and contrary to the course pursued by other societies, who sent round a notice of the vacancies a very considerable time before the election; thus affording to the members ample time to certify to the directors who were fit persons to be elected. A more extended time was especially necessary for this office, which had so many country members. Mr. Harris finding this state of things to exist, sent round a notice to the country members, and received a very large number of promises; and upon seeing the extent of those promises and his testimonials he confidently proposed him, as a gentleman, from his extensive connections and business habits, well fitted to promote the prosperity of the society.

Mr. D. T. EVANS seconded the nomination.

The CHAIRMAN postponed the ballot till the close of the meeting, and proposed the re-election of Messrs. Ayrton, Blandy, Gossett, Hand, and Nation, as auditors, who were accordingly duly re-elected.

Mr. GOSSETT returned thanks.

Dr. WADDILOVE moved "That the sum of 500*l.* be awarded to the directors for their services during the past year," and in doing so expressed his approval of the wise course adopted by the directors in sending gentlemen into the country to promote the society.

Mr. THOMPSON said that the most pleasing duty he had to perform that day was in seconding this motion, and he did so with great pleasure, because he had had the honour of moving on a former occasion that the sum should be increased from 300*l.* to 500*l.* and he had never had reason to regret it.

The motion was carried unanimously.

Mr. HORSLEY remarked that the Chairman had not alluded to the fact of his being a candidate for the office of auditor. He had written a letter to the directors to that effect, from a feeling that it was desirable to infuse new blood into the management of the society, and avoid anything like the appearance of a family compact. Although he had not been nominated on this occasion, he trusted to be more fortunate in future.

The CHAIRMAN then moved "That the sum of ten guineas be paid to each of the auditors for their attendance during the past year, in addition to their travelling expenses, and that the thanks of the society be presented to them for their services."

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

The meeting here adjourned for the purpose of proceeding to the ballot, and on re-assembling

The CHAIRMAN announced the result to be—

For Mr. Willaume............ 456

Mr. Harris 205

Consequently, he declared Mr. Willaume to be elected.

Thanks were then voted to the scrutineers, Mr. Flower and Mr. Thompson.

Mr. HARRIS, in alluding to the result of the poll, stated that it had not caused him any surprise, although he had received promises of support from upwards of 100 shareholders, holding the largest number of votes, also letters from fifty leading solicitors in the country; therefore he felt quite justified in going to it. He also said that he had received a letter, intimating that he would be objected to because he was connected with a rival office; he now ... to disavow any connection whatever with an ... company. He returned his thanks to the shareholders who had voted for him, and hoped they would support him on a future occasion, when he trusted he should not again be opposed by the personal canvass of one of the directors and the solicitor of the company.

A vote of thanks was unanimously given to the directors for their valuable services during the past year.

Mr. MAYNARD, in returning thanks, assured the meeting that the directors would always devote their most zealous services to the interests of the society.

Mr. D. T. EVANS said, that before the meeting separated, it was, he considered, the duty of the society to express its regret at the retirement of Mr. Symons from the direction. That gentleman had rendered valuable services to the society, at its commencement, and down to the period when his duties precluded his further attendance at the board. His name was one which had reflected credit on the direction; for he was widely and honourably known as an able writer on some of the most important, social, and political questions agitated in our times. He concluded by moving, "That this meeting expresses its regret at the retirement of Mr. Symons from the direction, and tenders to him a vote of thanks for his services."

Mr. HARRIS seconded the motion, which was then put and carried unanimously.

Thanks were then voted to the chairman, and the meeting separated.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE LATE LORD JUSTICE-GENERAL OF SCOTLAND.—The retirement of the Lord Justice-General is an event which the country will learn with less surprise than regret. Some days ago the venerable judge tendered to her Majesty his demission of his high offices of Lord Justice-General of Scotland and Lord President of the Court of Session; and we now learn that the resignation has been formally accepted. The right hon. David Boyle, second son of the hon. Patrick Boyle, and grandson of John, second Earl of Glasgow, was born on the 26th of July, 1772, and has thus all but completed his 80th year. He was called to the Scotch bar towards the end of the year 1793; was appointed Solicitor-General under the Duke of Portland's administration in 1807; and was chosen member for the county of Ayr in the spring of the same year. He continued to sit in Parliament and to hold the office of Solicitor-General for Scotland until February 1811, when he was appointed a Lord of Session and of Justiciary. He took the title of Lord Boyle, but was not long known by that style, for at the end of seven months (in October 1811) he was promoted to the office of Lord Justice-Clerk, which had been vacated by the elevation of the late right hon. Charles Hope to the Presidency of the Court of Session. Lord Justice-Clerk Boyle had filled the chair of the second division of the Court of Session, and presided in the High Court of Justiciary for thirty years, when, in October 1841, the resignation of the distinguished judge whom he had succeeded as Lord Justice-Clerk opened to him the still higher honours of Lord Justice-General of Scotland and Lord President of the Court of Session. These offices he held until a few days ago, having thus presided over one or other of the divisions of the Court of Session for the unusual period of more than forty years. Although now in his eightieth year, and not altogether exempt from the infirmities of that great age, his lordship retains in a remarkable degree the full possession of all his faculties, and great vigour both of body and mind. It may almost be said of him that "his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated." Yet it might be seen that the severe pressure of the last winter session, though he went through it without being one day absent from the court, made it perilous to attempt a much longer strain upon his powers; and the conscientious resolution which we believe his lordship had long formed not to retain office a day after he should be unfit for the full discharge of its duties, has induced the step which we have now to record. The late Lord Justice-General was called to the chair of one of the divisions of the Supreme Court at an earlier age than fell to the lot of most of his predecessors. But his remarkable energy and industry, his habits of acute observation, and his retentive memory, soon supplied that experience which alone was wanting to make him a distinguished judge. In the Criminal Court he was almost without an equal for the patience and pains with which he discharged his laborious duties, as well as for his thorough acquaintance with our criminal jurisprudence. In the Civil Court he displayed some of the greatest excellences of the judicial character: a clear and strong perception of the side where truth and justice lay—a perfect acquaintance with life and affairs—a studious anxiety to understand and administer the law as it is, without being led into plausible speculations or subtle over-refinements—an earnest desire to hear all that could be said, and to master all that had been decided—an utter absence of any undue attachment to his own opinion; these, with the still higher qualities of assiduous and devoted application, and an unsullied integrity, that was at once an instinct and a principle, have endeared this eminent judge to all who know him, of whatever party and profession, and have made his name an expression for all that is venerable and exemplary in a public man. His lordship—who has been twice married, and has a numerous issue—succeeded to the paternal estate of Shewalton, in Ayrshire, on the death of his elder brother in 1837. On the 8th of April, 1820, he was appointed a privy councillor—being the first person on whom that honour was conferred by King George IV.—and we are assured that we only give voice to a very general feeling when we express a hope that some farther and more enduring mark of honour may be in store to show the sense which his sovereign and the country entertain of the long and distinguished services of the right hon. David Boyle.—Edinburgh Courant.

LEGAL EDUCATION.—The council appointed by the four Inns of Court on the subject of legal education, apprise us that notices of the intention of the council to proceed to the election of a Reader on Constitutional Law and Legal History, have been published in the halls and libraries of the respective inns, and that it is the desire of the council that applications and testimonials for the appointment be made, and sent to Lincoln's Inn, addressed to the council, on or before the 7th day of June next.

INDISPOSITION OF THE CHIEF BARON.—We understand that the Chief Baron was prevented from attending Divine service at St. Paul's with the other judges, in accordance with the universal custom, in consequence of a rheumatic attack, which likewise prevented him from appearing at her Majesty's State ball, and at that of the Duke of Wellington, recently given in honour of the Princess Mary of Cambridge.

PUBLIC OFFICES.—A Parliamentary document, which has been printed, states that the increase of persons employed during the year 1851 in all the public offices was 732, of whom 647 were added to the Post-office, and 71 to the convict establishment; the consequent increase of expense was 54,469*l.* The diminution which was effected during the same period in the number of officials was 122, and in the expenditure the decrease amounts to 51,442*l.*

THE COURT OF SESSION.—Lord Anderson completed his trial as Lord Probationer on Saturday last, by hearing and delivering judgment on a case before the First Division, after which his lordship was formally installed as a senator of the Supreme Court, by taking his seat on the bench in presence of the assembled judges. On Monday, Mr. Neaves presented his commission, appointing him Solicitor-General to the Court, and, having had the oaths of office administered to him, took his seat within the bar.

COURT OF SESSION.—On Friday, Mr. Anderson, the new judge, passed a portion of his trials, and he is to undergo the remainder to-day, and to take his seat in the outer house on Tuesday. He intends to adopt the title of Lord Anderson, and will, we understand, supply the vacancy in the Court of Justiciary caused by the transference of Lord Colonsay to the place in that court occupied by Lord Justice-General Boyle.—Scotsman.

DEATH OF THE HON. JOHN TALBOT, Q.C.—On the assembly of the committee on the Watford Water Bill, at the House of Commons, Mr. Serjeant Wrangham, in a very affecting address, stated that he was unable to proceed with the case in consequence of the death of his learned friend, Mr. Talbot, Q.C. who was also engaged in it. The learned serjeant added that the melancholy event occurred at Brighton. The information was received with deep regret by the bar and the hon. members present, and the committee almost immediately afterwards broke up.

DRIVERS OF HACKNEY CARRIAGES.—From a return to the House of Commons (printed on Monday), it appears that on the 1st September last there were 6,039 drivers of hackney carriages licensed, including 1,061 proprietors. The amount received for the licenses, at 5s. each, was 1,509*l.* 15s.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JUNE 5, 1852.

THE WIG AND GOWN.

IT must be admitted that many sincere friends of improved legal education object to a compulsory examination before admission to the Bar, and they adduce reasons for that objection.

They say that an examination would exclude a great number of persons who now join the Bar, not for the purpose of practising, but for other purposes.

That the public does not require the protection of an examination, because the duties of a Barrister are exercised publicly, and incompetency is at once detected, and the employers of Barristers are not the unskilled clients, but the skilled Attorneys, who are able to form a judgment of the abilities they retain.

Undoubtedly an examination would exclude many who now go to the Bar. But we contend that such a result would not only be no disadvantage, but a positive boon, to the Profession. Of what use is a crowded table of wigs, of whom only a small fraction are competent to conduct the business of the Court? What credit is conferred upon the calling by the presence of a number of men who know nothing about it, and do not seek to know?

But if no advantage comes of it, there is much disadvantage. True, they join the Bar, professing to be Lawyers, without being really such, for other objects. What are those objects? Offices, which if they obtain, it is upon a false pretence. When the Legislature has required certain posts to be filled by "Barristers of five (or seven) years' standing," it has intended, by this term, real Barristers, not mock ones,—men who have studied and practised the profession for the requisite number of years, and not men who are entirely ignorant of it, and who have joined it in name for the very purpose of obtaining these offices. In truth, it is a fraud upon the Legislature and the community, and no less so upon the Profession itself, for thereby these pretenders obtain the honour and emoluments which are properly the reward of industry and ability, dedicated to the study and practice of the law. Thus the system inflicts an injustice alike upon the public and upon the Lawyers, and there will be no real reform in the organization of the Profession, which does not extend to its entire destruction.

It is notorious that many gentlemen who have influential connections, eat their dinners and are called to the Bar, with no other object in view than nominally qualifying themselves for the acceptance of some office which a Barrister must fill. They join a circuit, and, through their connections, command a few briefs in small prosecutions, and such like unimportant matters, which are supposed to be within the compass of anybody. They look out for all the "good things" that fall vacant, and through interest secure them over the heads of the men to whom they properly belong, and who have earned them by their devotion to the law.

Formerly this was not so serious a matter as it is now, because an industrious and competent Junior could hope to make a comfortable bachelor's livelihood by the junior business of the Bar. That cannot now be done, and will not be in future. For Juniors, therefore, the only prospect that the Profession offers, to help them through the period of juniorship, is the possibility of a windfall in the shape of a revising barristership, or a commissionership, or perchance an arbitration now and then. If these are still to be filched from them by persons who are Lawyers only in name, and who have donned the gown and wig with no other purpose, the Bar itself must go to decay; for no man who has not an independence will be enabled to endure the cost of waiting in idleness the dying off of his seniors. Even the few briefs that these Lawyers in pretence are enabled, by their connections, to pick up, worthless almost to themselves individually, in the aggregate constitute a considerable sum, which, if confined to the real, working Lawyers, the true members of the Profession, would be an addition to their small incomes which would, perhaps, just enable them to exist through the period of probation that must precede the flowing of the tide of practice.

For these reasons we have no hesitation in holding that the Profession and the Public are equally interested in the establishment of a strict examination as the condition of a call to the Bar.

We should then see fewer Wigs and Gowns, but more Lawyers.

FLOGGING IN PRISONS.

THE HOME-SECRETARY has been questioned in the House of Commons upon the practice of flogging in prisons, and answered that it was authorized by statute. We did not complain that the Magistrates were acting illegally, but only that they were departing from the practice of the Judges, and carrying the punishment of the whip beyond the limits contemplated by the Legislature, recognised by the authorities, or that would be sanctioned by public opinion. The question put to Mr. Secretary WALPOLE was not that we had desired. It was not necessary to ask him if the law allowed the flogging of grown men, fathers of families; but if it was the practice of the Court to award it, and if that practice had received the consideration of the Government, and was approved by them. We repeat, that it is a most objectionable practice; that the Judges deem it so, because they strictly limit the application of flogging to boys, that the flogging even of young men has been condemned from the Bench, and that if brought under the notice of the public, it would excite general and deserved complaint. The proper course for directing attention to it, and for making it the subject of Parliamentary consideration, will be to move for a return of the floggings, to which prisoners have been sentenced in Devonshire, as well at the Assizes as at the Sessions, with the ages of the convicts, and then, with the facts before him, it will be competent to any member of either House who interests himself in the criminal law and its improvement, to destroy the abuse we have described, by restricting the punishment of flogging to youths under the age of sixteen.

Since the above was in type, Mr. CARTER has obtained an order for the return we have suggested. We see among the Parliamentary proceedings of Thursday the following:—

On the motion of Mr. CARTER, an address was agreed to for a return of all the prisoners sentenced to be whipped during the last three years in this kingdom at the various Courts of Quarter Sessions, oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery, and by summary jurisdiction, the date of the sentence, and the offence for which awarded, with the age of each prisoner so punished.

This will provide the materials upon which further proceedings can be taken to put an end to this terrible abuse of magisterial power.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

NOBODY will give a Lawyer credit for a desire to be useful to the Public by going into Parliament, but only for a design to serve himself.

Unjust and unfounded as is this aspersion, we cannot ignore its existence, and it is felt even more inconveniently within the House of Commons than without: it destroys a great deal of the usefulness of the Lawyers in Parliament, and is, perhaps, the reason why their influence bears no proportion to their numbers.

We have already shewn that, in the vast majority of instances, it must be an unfounded suspicion, because, in truth, a Lawyer who goes into Parliament before he is a Leader certainly sacrifices his Profession. To be a candidate for Parliament is practically to announce to the world that he is going to quit the pursuit of the Law in the Courts at Westminster for the more exciting duties of the House of Commons. Manifestly, he cannot do duty in both. He must neglect either his clients or his constituents. Experience has shewn in all cases which has the preference, and therefore it is that, for a Junior to be in Parliament, he must practically retire from the active labours of his Profession—that is, from such of them as require his continual presence in the Courts or on Circuit.

Now, it is unjust to charge with interested motives a man who makes such a sacrifice of all his Professional profits and prospects. He has nothing to gain and everything to lose by the choice he has made, and he is entitled to the credit of a test such as no other class of members in the House has been subjected to.

Nevertheless, so long as judicial offices can be made the rewards of political prowess, the Lawyers will not emancipate themselves from the prejudice which now destroys so much of their usefulness as Legislators. It is not enough that they should declare themselves disinterested; while some of them are not so, and offices are to be thus acquired, the world will be uncharitable enough to attribute to every Lawyer who seeks to enter Parliament the illegitimate object of looking for a place.

Hence it would be as desirable for, and as creditable to, the Profession, as it would be beneficial to the public, were the proposition to be adopted, which we suggested some time ago, for prohibiting the acceptance of any judicial office by any person who is a member of Parliament, and for six or even twelve months after he shall have ceased to be a member. It would purify the judgment-seat, increase the respect in which its occupants will be held, insure better appointments, and compel those who seek the honours of the Profession to do so in the legitimate path, in and through the Profession. Indeed, for the sake of the purity of Parliament and the protection of the constituencies, as well as for the dignity, and reputation, and true Parliamentary influence, of the Profession itself, we would exclude from all legal appointments whatever, except the two political offices of Attorney and Solicitor-General, all who may be liable even to the temptation of reaching them through politics.

We trust that the opinion of the next House of Commons will be taken on this question. The proposal has been heartily applauded by the Profession generally, and we do not think it will find a less cordial welcome from the public.

LAW OF COPYRIGHT.

A CASE of much interest to the musical world, and of considerable importance to the Profession, as settling a curious point on the law of Copyright, was lately decided in the Common Pleas—we allude to the case of Novello v. Sudlow, of which a full report will be found under the head of that Court in the present number. The question in dispute between the parties came before the Court on a special case. It appears that the plaintiff is the proprietor of a musical work called "Benedict's Part-songs," which is published periodically. One of the numbers contained a song called "The Wreath," the notation of the four vocal parts being expressed not on separate cleffs, but given together. A copy of the work was purchased by the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, which consists of a large number of members, who occasionally give public concerts, to which strangers are admitted on payment of an entrance-fee. A committee existed for conducting the affairs of the institution, of which the defendant was a member. It having been determined by the committee that "The Wreath" should be performed at one of the concerts of the society, and as it was necessary the several parts should be provided for the orchestra and voices, the defendant, to carry out that purpose, caused the parts to be copied separately for the trebles, altos, tenors, and basses, had them printed in lithography to the number of 235, and then distributed them amongst the performers. After the concert the several parts were collected, and it was admitted that they had not since been used. The plaintiff hearing of these circumstances, then wrote to the society, requiring the delivery to him of the lithographed copies, and that they should take of him a number of copies of his original work equal to those they had caused to be lithographed. This having been refused by the society, the plaintiff brought an action on the case, and the facts having been agreed on, the special case now under notice was submitted for the opinion of the Court. The case appears to have been very fully and ably argued by the counsel on both sides; and the Court, referring to the importance of the question, took time to consider their judgment. By the statute 8 Anne, c. 19, copyright is expressed to be "the sole right and liberty of printing." The last Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, extends the privilege; for by sec. 2 "copyright" is defined to mean, "the sole and exclusive liberty of print ing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject to which the said word is in the Act applied." The remedy for infringement is given in the 15th section, which enacts that if any person "shall print, or cause to be printed, either for sale or exportation, any book in which there shall be subsisting copyright, without the consent in writing of the proprietor, or shall import for sale or hire any book so unlawfully printed, or shall sell, publish, or expose for hire any such book, or shall have in his possession for sale or hire any such book so unlawfully printed or imported, such offender shall be liable to a special action on the case, at the suit of the proprietor of such copyright." Such being the statute law, the question arose whether, as the act of the defendant was not a printing for sale, hire, or exportation, nor indeed, within either of the cases directly provided for in the 15th section, the plaintiff could maintain his action? For the plaintiff it was contended that the common-law right for infringement was not necessarily taken away by the statute; and that if it was, still there was sufficient in the statute, not merely in consideration of its spirit and purpose (which the preamble states to be to afford greater encouragement to the production of literary works), but in the statement that copyright, after the passing of the Act, was to secure to the proprietor "the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies," to entitle the plaintiff to recover as for an infringment of his copyright. On the other hand, it was urged for the defence, that the Legislature had, in the 15th section of the Act, clearly defined to what cases of infringement the prescribed remedy by action should apply, and it was limited to those cases alone; and whether there existed copyright at common law or not, the Legislature, if it ever existed, had abolished it by the statute, and in lieu thereof had made sufficient provisions for all rights which it intended should be perpetuated. The Court, however, held, that the remedy by action on the case was not confined to the particular injuries expressly specified and provided for in the 15th section of the Act, but applied to an infringement such as that before the Court, and accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiff. With respect to the restriction of a plaintiff's right, by the 15th section, the language of the judgment is clear and strong; and as it embodies the entire effect of the decision, we give place to it here:—

"We cannot think that such a restriction could be in the purpose of the Legislature, which would have been directly accomplished by omitting to introduce the words "otherwise multiplying," and therefore we conclude that it is impossible to gather from the 15th section that clear intention to limit a right expressly given, which is necessary to the argument for the defendant. It may also be observed that the following section, 16, when requiring the defendant to give notice of his objection to the author's clause, 'in any action for printing any such book for sale, hire, or exportation,' implies that an action will lie for printing for hire, to which the special action on the case, given by the 15th clause, is not in terms applied, and thus fortifies the conjecture that the 15th section was not intended, by enumerating certain cases of infringement, to take away the common law remedy in all others. It is, however, enough for us to determine that we cannot collect from this or any other clauses of the Acts, an intention of the Legislature to restrict the right which in express terms it gave. It is admitted that the plaintiff preserves the right; the act of the defendant in multiplying copies of his work without his consent for extensive, though gratuitou circulation, is a violation of the right; the remedy by action on the case therefore attaches, on principles which are not disputed, and the plaintiff is conse quently entitled to our judgment."

This decision will no doubt be regarded with very different feelings by the proprietors of copyright and the general public; but its soundness can hardly be questioned; for if the argument for the defence were to prevail, and it had been held that the right of action is limited to the cases provided for in the 15th section, the statute would be wholly inoperative, the remedy it affords not being co-extensive with the grievances which arise in transactions affecting copyright.

LEGAL EDUCATION.

THE Benchers of the Inns of Court are at least resolved to carry out vigorously the limited reform they have resolved upon. The Benchers of the Middle Temple have revived the Lectureship on Jurisprudence and Civil Law, and they are now ready to receive applications for the office from competent men. The salary is to be 300*l.* per annum, but the addition of the fees will probably make it equal to 600*l.* an acceptable post for a Barrister, in the present prospects of that branch of the profession.

SHAM LAWYERS.

A NEW class of practitioners, under the title of County Court Agents, has lately arisen. We trust that the Judges of the County Courts will spoil their trade by refusing to hear, or to recognise them in any way. They are swarming now in all the courts. Here is a specimen of one. They are printed forms of application.

[No. 2,052.]
No. 11, Waymouth Terrace, near Canal Bridge, City-road.

SIR,—I am directed to apply to you for 17s. due to Mr. Butler, of Abchurch-lane, and have to request your immediate attention to the same, so as to prevent further application, as well as further expense. —Waiting your early reply, I am, Sir, yours respectfully, BENJAMIN JONES, Agent to the New County Courts for the Collection of Rates, Rents, and Debts.

P.S.—At home, from 8 till 9 in the morning, and from 7 to 8 in the evening.

London, May 14th, 1852.

[No. 2,063.]
LAST APPLICATION.
No. 11, Waymouth-terrace, City-road, Near the Canal Bridge.

SIR,—I again apply to you for 17s. due to Mr. Butler, of Abchurch-lane, and unless the amount is sent to me by nine o'clock on Wednesday morning, the 26th day of May, I shall, without further notice, commence proceedings for the recovery of the same. Trusting your immediate attention will render such a step unnecessary, I remain, Sir, yours respectfully, BENJAMIN JONES, Agent for attending the New County Courts for the collection of Rates, Rents, and Debts.

At home from 8 till 10 in the Morning, and from 7 till 8 in the evening.

London, May 22nd, 1852.

THE COMMON LAW PROCEDURE BILL.

THIS Bill, as amended by the Committee of the Lords, and by their Lordships sent down to the Commons, is now before us.

Great changes have been made in it by the Law Lords. It is, in fact, a new measure, vastly improved in its details; a real reform, to some extent, which it certainly was not when it left the hands of the Commissioners.

But it is still very far indeed from being perfect. It goes further than the timid Commissioners, but not far enough to accomplish its object,—a cheap and speedy trial of a dispute. Still it leaves the County Courts to be preferred by suitors to the Superior Courts.

Hence its practical effect upon the Profession will be to diminish their profits in each case, without compensating by increase of business. The reforms effected will go to the point of taking away from the Practitioner without going so far as to attract more suitors. As for the Bar, its operation will be utterly to destroy the Juniors, for it sweeps away all that has hitherto constituted their support while waiting for fame and seniority.

The Bill consists of 230 sections, of which it would be a waste of space to give even an analysis just now, when it may possibly be subjected to other alterations. Suffice it to say, for the present, that it is to come into operation on the 1st of November next. Should it become law, we shall, of course, devote the interval to making its provisions, and the practical application of them, familiar to our readers in a series of articles, which will explain to them the changes thus effected, and describe the practice as it will be. For this purpose an experienced and skilful writer will be retained.

From a rapid glance at its contents, it appears to us that the most useful portion of the measure is that which relates to the obtaining of judgment and execution in debts and undisputed demands. In this it accomplishes a great improvement, and for such purpose will make the Superior Courts far preferable to the County Courts. It provides that a special indorsement of particulars of debts or liquidated demands may be made upon the writ, and then, in default of appearance, final judgment is to pass upon the writ, without any declaration or other intermediate process, so that the entire cost of judgment and execution in an undisputed action will not exceed 3*l.*

It is obvious at a glance how vastly superior a process is this to the tedious one of the County Courts, where a plaintiff is compelled to produce his witnesses, and prove his debt, even though the defendant does not dispute it. Strange to say, by some mysterious agency, and by a hostile influence that cannot be explained, a clause which we were fortunate enough to procure to be inserted in the County Courts Amendment Bill, now in the Commons, and which had passed the Lords with unanimous approval, providing that judgment shall go in default of notice of defence, has been expunged in Committee. Could not some one of our M.P. readers procure its re-insertion? If it be not restored, we shall have the practical absurdity of a judgment and execution being procurable for large sums in the Superior Courts in eight days, while, in the County Court, a small sum cannot be recovered without the trouble and cost of a formal proof, and a delay of some weeks.

At all events, there should be a clause in this Bill giving concurrent jurisdiction to the superior Courts in all cases above 10*l.* so that suitors may go to the Court they may prefer. Hitherto the objection to this has been, that a plaintiff should not be permitted to put a defendant to the greater costs of the Superior Courts; but now that the costs will not be more, the objection is removed, and so should the prohibition.

So far the reform is admirable and perfect. It is in the procedure when a demand is disputed that the measure is imperfect, and it is in this that the County Courts are so excellent.

In the trial of a dispute, two objects are to be sought—simplicity in the pleadings, speed in the trial. No measure of Law Reform that does not effect both of these will be of much value to the public, or benefit to the Profession.

The Bill before us certainly does fail to effect either of these objects.

It retains, with little alteration, the existing system of pleading. By consent, indeed, questions may be tried without pleading; but otherwise there is still to be the writ, the declaration, the plea, the demurrer. Express colour and special traverses are abolished; repetitions and needless averments are not to be made; objections by special demurrer are prohibited; profert and oyer are expunged; and needless words and formulas are struck out of the pleadings; but still several matters may be pleaded; still one new assignment is to be allowed: in fact, we do not see in what respects pleading has been materially improved or simplified.

The truth probably is, that pleading is incapable of simplification; that its abolition is the only remedy for its abuses. In the County Courts they do very well without it. No practical inconvenience is experienced from its absence. Save in very rare instances (one in a thousand, perhaps), the plaintiff contrives to state his demand, and the defendant understands him; and the Court eviscerate real question at issue between them out of a few lines in the summons and particulars of demand, with at least as much ease as the Judges can construe the more formal pleadings of the Superior Courts. To this it must come. We believe that if a system of pleading is to be retained at all, it would be difficult to make it more simple than this Bill proposes it. But it will fail to secure simplicity.

And the Bill is yet more defective in the absence of all provisions for securing more frequent trial. We ask again, of what use is it to reduce the procedure to fourteen days, if the trial cannot be had for eight months? We shall not cease to reiterate, that without more frequent Circuits, a quarterly assize, at least, all improvements of procedure are of the least practical value. They will not enable the Superior Courts to compete with the County Courts, that sit monthly, and where six weeks is the longest interval that can elapse before a dispute can be brought to trial.

A schedule of forms of pleading is appended to the Bill. These consist of the very forms that are to be found in CHITTY, with a few superfluous words struck out.

GOSSIP OF WESTMINSTER HALL.

BY ONE OF THE BRIEFLESS.

HAVING but little business left to us, with probability of less, we juniors have time to listen to the Legal Gossip that is always floating about Westminster Hall. In lack of more profitable employment, I propose to collect the most interesting that reaches my ears, for the information and amusement of your distant readers.

Whether the LORD CHANCELLOR's New Wills Act will have the effect of setting at rest the vexata quæstio of how a will should be executed, time alone will shew. The disputes between the learned members of the Legal Profession who took part in the debate of the 27th ult. are somewhat ominous upon the point. Before the measure has passed into a law, they are divided as to the meaning to be attached to its words. Sir P. WOOD unceremoniously called one of its clauses "a farrago of words;" a criticism to which Mr. J. STUART replied by observing that it was not becoming to hear a Bill, which had been drawn up by "one of the greatest of living lawyers," styled "a farrago of words;" a defence which may be very courteous, but is very unsatisfactory. Great lawyers are oftentimes the very worst of draughtsmen; their habit of refining (called by the uninitiated "quibbling") upon words, rendering them utterly incapable of expressing themselves in a plain and straightforward manner. It is a well-known fact that the will of a very accomplished and celebrated conveyancer gave rise to an enormous amount of doubt and litigation. It is very desirable that the execution of a will should be clothed with as little ceremony as possible; for all that is requisite is, that conclusive proof should be given that the paper writing offered for probate is the expressed will of the testator, and anything beyond this becomes merely a snare to the unwary.

The excellent and well-reasoned decision delivered by Lord ST. LEONARD's, on the 26th ulto. has at last set the Wagner case at rest for ever. The decision of the LORD CHANCELLOR will, we feel convinced, be hailed with extreme satisfaction by all rightly-thinking men; for the public can much more easily afford to lose for one season, or even for perpetuity, the advantages of listening to Mdlle. WAGNER's singing, than to the reproach that solemn contracts and deliberate engagements can be broken with impunity in this country. Commenting upon the subterfuges resorted to by her advisers, Lord ST. LEONARD's made use of these severe but impressive words:—"He must tell Mdlle. Wagner that she was mistaken if she thought she could for such reasons, escape from the contract, for the Court declared that she was not released from any of the obligations of it. She had no reason to complain of the manner in which she had been treated; and it would be folly on her part now to attempt to escape from the performance of her agreement." Pondering over these words, WAGNER, père, may return to Berlin a sadder but a wiser man; for he may learn from them that England has somewhat else to boast of besides her money, namely—an incorruptible spirit of justice. Rumour says that Mr. BETHELL is more disappointed than any one else at the result of the appeal, as it was at his expense, instance, and in consequence of his special and confident advice, that it was undertaken.

The enormous quantities of bullion pouring over the Atlantic from California, and the intelligence we have received of the inexhaustible gold-fields of Bathurst, cause much disquietude as to the condition of the currency. In long leases for terms of years, conveyancers have in some cases lately inserted a proviso that the rent shall be paid in silver if demanded, with the view of guarding against the effect of any serious depreciation in the value of gold.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

FRIDAY, May 28.—The Royal assent was given by commission to the following Bills:—Property-Tax Continuance, Copyright Amendment, Poor Relief Act Continuance, Loan Societies, Repayment of Advances Acts (Ireland) Amendment, Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, Stock in Trade, Highway Rates. About fifty other Bills, local and private, also received the Royal assent.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY ABOLITION BILL.

On the motion that this Bill be read a third time, Lord CAMPBELL presented a petition from the Metropolitan Solicitors' Association, suggesting some defects in the companion Bill to this (Improvement of the Jurisdiction of Equity Bill), and objecting to the proposition for printing papers in the Court of Chancery.—The LORD CHANCELLOR concurred with the petitioners on the subject of the printing, and added, that at a meeting of judges at his house the majority were against the alteration.—Bill read a third time and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE JURISDICTION OF EQUITY BILL.

On the order for the third reading of this Bill, Lord TRURO said, that although this Bill might not be without defects, it would yet confer great and important advantages on the country, and he would remind the most respectable body of gentlemen who had petitioned against some of its provisions, that it was a step in the right direction, and would facilitate their object in obtaining further reform. He congratulated their lordships on the fact, that although the present was a short session, more important steps had been taken in the improvement of the law than by any Parliament since the time of Edward III. They had completed full and searching inquiries, both into equity and common law, and the result was (partly) the Bill they were then discussing. No time had been lost when he (Lord Truro) held the Great Seal, or by his successor, the noble and learned lord now on the woolsack, in preparing measures founded on the reports of the commissioners.—Lord CRANWORTH approved of the Bill, as a whole, as tending to improve the administration of justice. With respect to the question of printing, he differed from his noble and learned friend on the woolsack, and thought that it would ultimately be found to be the cheapest plan. Although approving of the general scope of the Bill, he had strong objections to clause 50, and should at the proper time move its omission.—The Bill was then read a third time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

CHANCERY REFORM.

FRIDAY, May 28.—Mr. WALPOLE said he had to move the first reading of a Bill of some importance, which had just come down from the Lords—namely, the Masters in Chancery Abolition Bill. He had also to move the first reading of the Improvement of Equity Jurisdiction Bill.—Agreed to.

COMMON LAW PROCEDURE.

Sir F. THESIGER said he had to move the first reading of a Bill which had that evening come down from the Lords : namely, a Bill for Amending the Course of Practice and Pleading in the Superior Courts of Common Law.—Agreed to.

COMMON LAW PROCEDURE BILL.

THURSDAY, June 12.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL moved the second reading of this Bill, expressing a hope that the House would allow it to be advanced a stage, and that the discussion would be taken on another occasion.—Sir A. COCKBURN did not wish to throw any obstruction in the way of the Bill, but could not help expressing his regret that one of the most important features had been struck out, namely, that portion which was intended to get rid of forms of action, which had nothing to do with the furtherance of justice. But, notwithstanding that objection, he considered the measure to be one of the most important that had ever been introduced into Parliament. It must not, however, go forth to the public that the commissioners had discharged the whole of the duties imposed upon them, in bringing forward this measure. This was only the first instalment in the way of the removal of technical difficulties, which were so great an obstruction to the administration of justice. He trusted the Government would not stop here, but that a mixed commission of members of the departments of law and equity would be appointed, with a view of seeing how far they could remedy the evils existing in both courts, and amalgamating the two systems. The present state of the law was most disgraceful. It was a sealed book to the subjects of the realm, and required the life of a man to understand it. It was not sufficient to improve the mode of procedure. The law must be codified, and made intelligible to the people. The Bill was then read a second time.

FLOGGING PRISONERS IN GAOLS.

Mr. CARTER moved an address for a return of all the prisoners sentenced to be whipped, during the last three years, in this kingdom, at the various Courts of Quarter Session, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery, and by summary jurisdiction, the date of the sentence, and the offence for which awarded, with the age of each prisoner so punished. —Agreed to.

CHANCERY REFORM.

On the motion of the SOLICITOR-GENERAL, the Abolition of Masters' Offices and the Equity Procedure Bills were read a second time.

MILITIA BILL.—This Bill (as amended in committee) has been printed. Six clauses have been added. By the first, personal property is to be deemed equivalent to landed, in conferring a qualification for deputy-lieutenants, majors, and officers of a higher rank. By the second, a supplemental corps may be raised by voluntary enlistment in one county, where the full number has been enrolled, to supply a deficiency in another. The next two clauses refer to publication of lists, notices of meetings, and appeals. By the fifth, Quakers are not to be committed to gaol when they do not possess property sufficient to be distressed. The sixth relates to the raising of the miners of Cornwall and Devon, under 42 Geo. 3, c. 72.

METROPOLITAN BURIALS BILL.—The Bill brought in by Lord John Manners and Mr. Walpole to amend the laws concerning the burial of the dead in the metropolis has been printed. It extends to forty-five clauses and two schedules. It is proposed to repeal the Metropolitan Interments Act, passed in 1850. On representation by the Secretary of State, her Majesty in council may order the discontinuance of burials in any part of the metropolis. The bodies of inhabitants of a parish in which the burial-ground is closed are not to be buried in other parishes, or in non-parochial grounds (except as otherwise provided), without the penalty of misdemeanour being incurred. Exceptions are made in favour of interments in St. Paul's or Westminster Abbey, under the royal sign manual, and in new burial-grounds, which must have been previously approved of by the Secretary of State. The vestries will appoint burial boards, and the expenses will be charged on the poor-rates. The Public Works Loan Commissioners may advance money for the purposes of the Act. Moneys raised and the income arising from the burial-ground to be applied towards defraying expenses.

REFUNDS PROPERTY-TAX.—A Parliamentary paper has been issued (procured by Mr. Alcock) of the amount refunded under income-tax for the year 1850. The total was 105,959*l.* 16s. 0¾d. The sums were repaid under the following heads: —On incomes under 150*l.* per annum, 65,002*l.* 1s. 11d; on dividends on foreign and colonial funds the property of foreigners, 616*l.* 10s. 1d.; on errors and double assessments, 1,675*l.* 10s. 5¼d; on hospitals, schools, &c. 11,327*l.* 14s. 7d; on ecclesiastical bodies, under Schedule A, 4,618*l.* 12s. 3d.; on friendly societies, 19,863*l.* 11s. 5d.; on diminution of income, 2,707*l.* 0s. 11½d.; and on overpayment by collectors, 148*l.* 14s. 5d.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

THE case of Whitaker v. Wisbey, 19 Law T. Rep. 150, is of considerable interest to our readers, for it determines a question upon which considerable doubt has hitherto prevailed in the Profession, viz. up to what period a prisoner on a criminal charge can safely assign property, so as to evade the barbarous law of forfeiture. It was generally understood that inasmuch as the entire Assizes are treated as one day in law, after the opening of the commission no such assignment would be valid. But after an elaborate argument, the Court of C. B. has held otherwise. WILLIAMS, J. observed,—"The result contended for by the defendant would be, that the Court is constrained by an arbitrary rule of law to say that the conviction, which in point of fact took place on the 24th of March, was on the 19th. I do not think this is so. The conveyance is perfectly good if made before the actual conviction of the person executing it."

As forfeiture is thus easily evaded, and in point of fact, almost always is so, and as it is an extreme cruelty, to say the least of it, to innocent families, would it not be better to abolish it, and to substitute restitution of the value of the property taken from him, or compensation for the injury done to the prosecutor or party robbed or injured? This would be much more equitable and rational.

LONDON CORPORATION REFORM BILL.

THE committee to whom this Bill was referred have declared the preamble not proved, and the Bill will, therefore, be lost.

The Corporation of the City of London was, it will be remembered, exempted from the general Act, 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 76, and formed, in 1837, the subject of a separate report of the Municipal Corporation Commissioners, which has, up to the present time, given rise to no Government measure for effecting the suggested reforms.

The present Bill was brought before Parliament as a private Bill, on the petition of the lord mayor, aldermen, and common council, and its principal object was to invest the resident ratepayers with the municipal franchise, a change which was strongly opposed by the livery companies.

Mr. Talbot, Mr. Hope, and Mr. Clerk conducted the promoter's case; and Sergeant Wrangham, Sir Walter Riddell, and Mr. Pulling, were counsel for the Mercers' Company, on behalf of the liverymen of London generally.

The case set up on the part of the livery was that, as against a mere private Bill, they were entitled to retain their franchises, and to oppose the surrendering the control of the civic property to non-freemen. It was contended that the grants of the franchises and estates of the corporation were made exclusively to the freemen of the city of London, of whom the livery were the better and most numerous class.

The witnesses for the promoters all agreed that the present members of the corporation were as respectable as could be looked for under the proposed change; and though some evidence of bribery at city elections, &c. was given, it appeared that this was principally practised by the celebrated long-shore-men, who were, for the most part, not liverymen at all.

The committee—after sitting several days, and hearing a mass of evidence as to the constitution of the corporation, the number of electors, &c. the provisions of the various charters by which the civic franchises were confirmed, and hearing the speeches of counsel, pro and con—declared their opinion that the promoters had not made out their case.

ATTORNEY MAGISTRATES.

CAN any of your correspondents inform me what has been the practice of Home Secretaries or Lord Chancellors respecting the appointment of attorneys to the commission of the peace under the Municipal Act? Are not attorneys excluded from the commission for counties by Act of Parliament? And was not a Bill brought into the House of Commons by the late Lord Nugent (about 1830), to extend this exclusion to the borough magistracy? Y. S. N.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

THE House of Lords has decided some interesting points of considerable practical importance to the directors and officers of companies, in the case of Inglis v. The Great Northern Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 149. After bringing an action for calls, the company, under the powers of their Act, forfeited and cancelled the shares and issued new shares in lieu thereof. This was held not to be a good plea in bar to the action, but the Court should stay proceedings, on the defendants paying the excess of the sum due beyond the value of the new shares, with costs.

In the same case it was determined that when the register of shareholders was kept in several volumes, it was sufficient if the last volume of the series was authenticated by the seal of the company.

A meeting of the committee of directors was adjourned and only the minute of the adjourned meeting was signed by the chairman of both meetings, but subsequent minutes treat both as one meeting. It was held that the unsigned minute was admissible as evidence of the first day's proceedings, and that what took place there could also be proved by a witness who was present, sec. 98 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, which makes the signed minute evidence, not excluding evidence aliunde.

It was also intimated, although not expressly decided, that where a call had been made by a finance committee of the directors, it must be proved, in an action for calls, that the committee were duly appointed.

In Gage v. The Newmarket Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 155, the company had by deed contracted with an opposing landowner, that in the event of the Bill passing they would, before entering on any part of the lands, pay him 4,500*l.* for any portion they might require, and 7,100*l.* for damages by the severance of the land. The Court of Q. B. held that the company were not bound to pay either of these sums before taking possession, and that to do so would be an illegal misapplication of the funds of the company.

PETITIONS, ORDERS, MEETINGS, APPOINTMENTS, CALLS, &c.

[Announced, issued, and made, during the past week.]

Royal Thames Steam Navigation Company.—Call of 5*l.* per share on 10th June.—Rose.

Boston and Thorp Arch Bath Company.—Call of 3*l.* 10s. per share on contributories, on whom notice for a further call has been served, by 5th July.—Horne.

Pennant and Craigwen Consolidated Lead Mining Company. —To settle supplemental list of contributories, on 21st June.—Tinney.

A RAILWAY IN DIFFICULTIES.—A circumstance, perhaps unprecedented in railway annals, has, within the last few days, occurred to the Preston and Longridge Railway, the result of which has been that the line has been unavoidably closed, the locomotive power, carriages, and all the rolling stock having been taking possession of and sold under a warrant of execution.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

AN important case on the construction of the Trustee Acts was that of Re Boden's Estate, 19 Law T. Rep. 150. The facts were, that a mortgagee in fee died intestate as to the mortgaged premises, but appointed an executor. The heir-at-law could not be found. On a petition by the executor, the Court held that, under the 19th sec. of this Act, it had jurisdiction to make an order vesting in him the mortgaged premises, subject to the equity of redemption, thus providing for the case of a conveys generally, and not confining it to the simple case of a reconveyance.

There are some cases worthy of note on the construction of wills. In Bainbrigge v. Cream, 19 Law T. Rep. 151, where the devise was of certain freeholds and leaseholds to testator's wife for life, or until she should marry again, and on her death or her marriage, he gave same to trustees, in trust to sell and divide the proceeds among certain nephews and nieces, or "such of them as should be living at the death of his wife," and the wife married again, it was held that the nephews and nieces living at the time of the second marriage, took vested interest in the proceeds of the sale. In Webb v. Woolls, 19 Law T. Rep. 153, it was laid down that where the latter words of a sentence in a will go to cut down an absolute gift contained in the first part of the sentence, and are unconnected with it, the Court will, if it can, give effect to the absolute gift.

In Durrant v. Friend, 19 Law T. Rep. 152, certain articles were specifically bequeathed by a will, but both the testator and the articles were lost in a shipwreck. The articles were insured. It was held that the insurance money did not belong to the legatees. In the same case a manifest injustice was done through adhesion to the letter of the law, which does not recognise illegitimate children. Property was given to A. the interest to be paid to her half-yearly, until her first-born son should attain twenty-one; one half for the said son, the other half for the mother. She had an illegitimate son, who was maintained by the testator. There could be no doubt as to the intention. Nevertheless, it was held that the illegitimate son had no interest in the property.

A point in the law of Vendor and Purchaser was determined in the case of Wallis v. Sorel, 19 Law T. Rep. 152, which should be noted in the text books. A reversionary interest, subject to a life estate, was put up for sale by order of the Court. One of the conditions was, that if from any cause whatever the purchase-money should not be paid on the day named, the vendor should pay interest at five per cent. The abstract was not delivered until long after the day fixed by the condition. It was held that the condition did not apply, but that the purchaser having had the benefit of the wear of the lives should pay interest at four per cent. only.

An extremely able and interesting judgment, by Lord Campbell, C. J. on the law of voluntary conveyances is reported from the Q.B. and should be read by every student and practitioner. His Lordship stated that, "the principle on which voluntary conveyances have been held uniformly to be fraudulent and void, as against subsequent purchasers, appears to be that by selling the property for a valuable consideration the seller so entirely repudiates the former voluntary conveyance and shews his intention to sell, that it shall be taken conclusively against him and the person to whom he conveyed that such intention existed when he made the conveyance, and that it was made in order to defeat the purchaser. Such deeds had been held fraudulent and void, as against such purchasers, even when they have had notice of them. Where the same person executes the voluntary conveyance, and afterwards sells and conveys the property, the application of the principle is obvious and easy; but where the seller is a different person from him who executed the voluntary conveyance, it is quite otherwise, for the act of one man cannot shew the mind and intention of another." After reviewing all the cases that bear upon the point, his Lordship concluded, "Upon the whole, we are all clearly of opinion that a purchaser from the devisee of one who has made a voluntary conveyance in his lifetime is not within the statute." (Doe dem. Newman v. Rusham, 19 Law T. Rep. 153.)

In Whittaker v. Wisbey, 19 Law T. Rep. 156, an assignment of property by a prisoner on a charge of felony made after the commission day, but before conviction, was held to be valid.

Wadsworth v. Weaver, 19 Law T. Rep. 158, was a question on the 46th section of the Building Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 84). A party-wall was built partly on the plaintiff's and partly on the defendant's land; the expenses had been paid by the plaintiff and none by the defendant. The plaintiff brought an action of trespass against the defendant for letting jambs into the part of the wall within his boundary. It was held that the Buildings Act only vests the wall in the builder of it, for the purpose of enabling him to recover his expenses, by proceedings under the Act, and not so as to enable him to maintain trespass against the other party using it.

In Flory v. Denny, 19 Law T. Rep. 158, it was held that a chattel may be mortgaged without a deed.

STAFFORDSHIRE, ETC. RAILWAY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—In the summary of "Winding-up" law, in the Law Times, 29th ult. you have mis-stated the effect of the judgment in this matter, as you will see by referring to your report, 19 Law T. Rep. 106 (as stated in the summary, but in reality 136). So far from Mr. Archibald having money of the company "in his possession," it was clearly proved that he had not, and that was the ground of the judgment.

The question in dispute was, whether a constructive possession of the funds was sufficient to bring the case within the 66th section of the Winding-up Act; and the constructive possession was made out thus:—Mr. Archibald admits he had, at one time, the funds in his possession, but says he afterwards parted with them; we (the company) say you, Mr. A. had no authority or right to do so, and are consequently liable to us for the amount, therefore you must be held still to have possession of the funds, because you ought to have possession. The Master agreed to this proposition, which the Court dissented from. The knowledge of your anxiety and desire for correctness in every part of your valuable paper, is my reason and apology for thus addressing you.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

William Boorman,

Clerk to the Solicitors for Mr. Archibald.

COPYHOLD ENFRANCHISEMENT.

(From the Spectator.)

Amid the noisy but resultless bickerings of ministers and their opponents, a Bill to abolish the tenure of copyhold—a relic of feudalism relinquished in every other kingdom of Europe—has been steadily keeping the noiseless tenour of its way through Parliament. It passed with prosperous gales through every stage in the Commons, and was about to clear the straits of the second reading in the Lords, when a storm has arisen that threatens to sink it almost within sight of port.

The Bill is to enact, that in the event of a fine falling due on any copyhold lands after July 1853, the lands shall be enfranchised on the application either of tenant or lord, by commissioners named by the Crown, who shall award an equivalent for the lord's rights. This Bill is the result of a compromise between two rival measures, remitted last session to a Select Committee of the Commons, over which Mr. Aglionby, the champion of copyhold enfranchisement, presided, and in which both the owners of manorial rights and the advocates of free trade in land were duly represented. Thus sanctioned by all parties, and approved by Government, the Bill has in this session passed through the House of Commons without opposition; it was read a first time in the Lords, and a day fixed for the second reading, without any serious demonstrations of hostility. But then the Chancellor began to doubt whether the enfranchisement should be compulsory even to the small extent provided by this Bill: a week's postponement was conceded to allow Lord St. Leonards time to dispose of his doubts; and while he is dubitating the Earl of Ellesmere gives notice of a motion to remit the Bill to a select committee, with authority to hear counsel against the Bill! If a committee to be nominated after Tuesday next is to sit on the Bill, and listen to the long-winded wranglings of lawyers, it cannot pass this session; and if the enfranchisement is not to be compulsory, the Bill need not be passed at all, for laws merely permitting law reforms have never proved effectual.

The last unlooked-for rally of the lords of manors is utterly unaccountable. The annoyance to the copyholders, and the deterioration to their property resulting from this mode of tenure, are glaring and notorious; but the benefits accruing to the lords of manors are precarious, and fruitful sources of litigation. Lord Ellesmere and his noble allies are in fact contending for a shadow. Their friends in the Commons, by the stand they made last session, induced the copyholders to consent to pay for enfranchisement: if the Bill based upon this compromise be rejected, the next (and another is sure to be brought in) may have the compensation clause omitted. Copyholders, lawyers, farmers, all are bent upon the abolition of a mischievous tenure, which Sir Robert Peel called "a blot on the law of this country." Ultimately the lords of manors must give in, and the longer they cling to their privileges the less chance they have of being bought off.

Query.

STAMPS.

Will any of your practised readers be so good as to answer the following.

Suppose there be a deed of eighty-eight folios—purchase-money 5,000*l.*—the regular stamps should be 25*l.* ad. val. and four followers, each 10s. making in all five skins, and the entire duty 27*l.*

But instead of five skins being used, there are only three employed, the first stamped 25*l.* and each of the other two with one pound single stamps, and not double followers. Full duty 27*l.*

Is the deed properly stamped, or is it necessary for the followers to be stamped as double followers, and if not, why?

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEEDS BY MARRIED WOMEN.

It is the practice for married women who are merely trustees to acknowledge any deed executed by them, and this practice is adopted in the Masters' offices. There is no doubt but that a married woman should acknowledge a deed in which she joins as trustee only, unless she has a power of appointment vested in her, and which she exercises by the deed. In the case put by "G. J." the married woman must formerly have joined with her husband in levying a fine, and the effect of the Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act is, that in all cases where a fine was formerly required, an acknowledgment is now substituted.

June 1, 1852. G. W. G.

I would call the attention of your correspondent "G. J." writing from Manchester, to the following passage in 1 Pr. Ab. 337, last edit.:—"But as the law does not take any notice of trusts, the better opinion, sanctioned by uniform practice, is, that as to the estates of freehold, which a married woman has as trustee, no effectual conveyance can be made by her without a fine or common recovery." From this it would appear that in the case put by your correspondent, the married woman should acknowledge the mortgage-deed.

Sale of Incumbered Estates.—Another satisfactory proof of the rapid rise in the value of land was afforded by the sale of the extensive estates of the late Mr. Robert Hedges Eyre. This property is situate in the town and county of Galway, and was put up for competition in no less than forty lots. Of these thirty-two composed the town estates, consisting of townlands and houses, the net annual rental of which was estimated at 2,400*l.* Every lot was keenly disputed for, the whole realising the sum of 45,485*l.* or equal to 19 years' purchase. The county estates contained 1,905 statute acres, which were divided into eight lots, the gross value of which was 556*l.* a-year. The sum produced was 9,210*l.* or 16½ years' purchase. The town estates were sold subject to two annuities, one for the life of a lady aged sixty, the other for the life of a man aged forty-five. The average purchase-money of both estates was at the rate of 18¾ years.

Sale of Incumbered Estates.—The estates of Mr. Penrose Fitzgerald, situate in the county of Cork, were sold on Friday, in Cork, by order of the commissioners. They were offered in seven lots, two of which were reserved, the sum required to discharge the incumbrances having been realized by the sale of five only. The gross rental of those disposed of was about 900*l.* per annum, which produced the sum of 16,255*l.* The prices obtained averaged twenty years' purchase.

St. Pancras Freehold Land Society.—In addition to the several estates already purchased by the above society at Walthamstow, Sudbury, and Peckham, a further purchase has just been effected of the most valuable building land, situate in the High-road, Upper Holloway, at a cost of 10,000*l.*

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

It willl be observed that in the case of Re Clabburn, 19 Law T. Rep. 160, Mr. Commissioner Law has decided that the Insolvent Court has not the power to order the rehearing of a case in the County Court, as formerly it had to order the rehearing of a case before the Commissioner on Circuit. But such a rehearing may be ordered by the County Court.

THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS AND THE COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Some eight or ten days before a simple contract debt would have been barred by the Statute of Limitations, I issued a summons against the debtor in one of the metropolitan County Courts, and on my searching the cause a day or two before the hearing, I was informed that the defendant's residence was just out of the jurisdiction of that Court, at the same time receiving back the money that I had paid for the summons. The six years had then expired about a week.

Can any of your readers inform me whether, under these circumstances, this debt is barred by the statute, or whether, on my giving proof that I issued the summons before the six years had expired, it will be sufficient to prevent the statute from running or the defendant from pleading it, as it was certainly not my fault that the summons was issued in the wrong court, but that of the County Court authorities for not being better acquainted with the boundaries of their court. I have not yet issued another summons in (what I am informed is) the right court.

While on this subject I would suggest that the County Courts Extension Bill, now under consideration, should extend the hours of attendance at the clerks' office at all the courts till five instead of four, as it would be a very great convenience to such of us as practise in them, and would not be a later hour than that of the attendance at the offices of the Superior Courts during term.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—Where a sole plaintiff becomes bankrupt, the defendant may move that the assignees shall elect either a fixed time to file a supplemental bill, or proceedings stayed. It is not necessary to file a bill of revivor, and proceed with the cause. (Clark v. Tipping, 19 Law T. Rep. 151.)

In Trilley v. Keefe, 19 Law T. Rep. 151, the service of an order limiting the period for application to set aside a decree, taken pro confesso on a defendant out of the jurisdiction, was held to be a sufficient notice under the 87th order.

Where the next friend of a married woman, plaintiff in a suit, went to reside out of the jurisdiction, the Court, in Alcock v. Alcock, 19 Law T. Rep. 152, required security for costs by him, or that a new next friend should be appointed.

COMMON LAW.—We are always glad to be able to adduce instances of the Judges' setting their faces against objections merely technical, when employed to defeat the ends of justice. Such an one occurred last week. In Whittaker v. Wisbey, 19 Law T. Rep. 159, counsel was raising a miserable technical objection to a motion that ought to have been treated only on its merits, upon which POLLOCK, C.B. said, "In these days of legal reform, it may be taken generally, that the Court will set its face against objections calculated to involve the parties in useless and unnecessary expenses." These words should be printed in letters of gold, and posted in all the Courts at Westminster.

In the Law of Evidence there is a case worth noting. Plaintiff and another person had entered into an agreement as to the terms of a bet on a horse-race. A fraud was practised upon the plaintiff, for which he brought an action against the defendant, who was stakeholder, to recover back the money. The question was, whether this agreement could be put in evidence without being stamped. The Court held that it might be received. "If," said POLLOCK, C.B. "the agreement in this case had to be used as an agreement to uphold the terms of it, no doubt it should have been stamped; but if not used as an agreement, but merely to identify it with the scheme which it was the plaintiff's case to shew was practised upon him, then I think it was properly admissible. In the same way, if it had to be used for any criminal purposes, such as to prove forgery, &c. it would not require any stamp." (Holmes v. Sixsmith, 19 Law T. Rep. 159.)

The Law of Liability of an Attorney for negligence in not obtaining for his client a proper security was, as it seems to us, pushed to an extreme of harshness, almost to positive injustice, in the case of Cooper v. Stephens, 19 Law T. Rep. 155, which, strange to say, was a County Court Appeal. The facts were, that an Attorney, instructed by his client to recover a debt after threatenings, and obtaining no payment, advised his client to accept from the debtor a mortgage security, which he did. The Attorney made no inquiries, except from the debtor, whether he had been insolvent, although there was some evidence that he had a suspicion of it. But, in fact, he had petitioned the Insolvent Court, and obtained a protection order, and all the debts in his schedule were unpaid. The Court held this to be some evidence to go to the jury of negligence.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Cordially agreeing with the spirit of your remarks on this subject, I cannot see that your remedy would "effectually prevent politics and parliament being made a stepping-stone to the bench." The stability or instability of a government is generally so well known, as to make its proceedings for the next six months (the time you propose should elapse before legal ex-M.P.'s shall be eligible for appointment to the "high places" of the profession) tolerably clear; and a lively picture might be drawn of the opposition M.P. lawyers, anticipative of a dissolution—forgetting their promises, their constituencies, everything but themselves—and in a body accepting the Chiltern Hundreds, that they might, on the accession of their party, obtain some substantial reward for services rendered, as the appointments happened to fall in.

The subject, however, is a very important one, as much so to the Profession as the public; and I hope you will continue to draw attention to it.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

A Scene in Court.—On Tuesday afternoon, about two o'clock, considerable excitement prevailed in the principal Law Courts at Westminster Hall, in consequence of the following extraordinary conduct of Mr. Feargus O'Connor, one of the representatives of Nottingham. The honourable gentleman having a few minutes before the above-named hour entered Westminster Hall, he walked at a slow pace through the building, as far as the Lord Chancellor's Court, when, as if suddenly recollecting something, he stopped, gave his right leg a slap, and immediately entered the court. His conduct immediately became exceedingly strange, and, making towards his lordship, he was about to address him, when the learned judge told him to be seated. Instead, however, of doing so, the hon. member for Nottingham made his exit, and having entered the Court of Exchequer, he commenced beating a tune on the seats, &c. and, addressing the judge, said, "Ah, Sir Frederick, how are you? I am glad to see you." From the Exchequer he went to the Court of Common Bench and the Court of Appeal, where he looked wildly round. Many persons who had read of his previous extraordinary conduct in America, and believing him still to be in that country, could not be persuaded that the actor was the hon. member for Nottingham. Having left the court, Mr. O'Connor made his way out of Westminster Hall, when he walked gently down Parliament-street, followed by a number of persons. The unfortunate man looked very dejected, and not the least doubt can now be entertained that his intellect has become more impaired than ever.

A Treasury Warrant in Tuesday's Gazette formally arranges the rates of postage for letters and newspapers to the Falkland Islands and Monte Video.

Money Order Offices.—The following notice has been issued by the authorities of the General Post Office:—On the 1st June, the receiving office at Walham-green, Fulham, county Middlesex, served from London, will be opened as a major money-order office; and on the 8th June, the sub-post office at Wolverton, county Buckinghamshire, served from Stoney Stratford, will be opened as a major money-order office. Minor money-order offices will be opened at the under-mentioned places on the respective dates named—Beeston, Nottinghamshire, June 1; Darlaston, Staffordshire, June 6; Sandgate, Kent, June 1; Upper Mill, Lancashire, June 1; Wainfleet, Lincolnshire, June 1.—N.B. Postmasters are informed that Allendale, Hessle, and Reepham, mentioned in the Instructions No. 17, 1852, are respectively served from Carlisle, Hull, and Norwich, and they must supply the omission in their lists. Postmasters are also informed that in the new list of money-order offices recently forwarded to them it was erroneously stated that Oldbury was served from Dudley, instead of from Birmingham, and that Cranbourn was served from Dorchester, instead of from Salisbury. The necessary corrections must be made in the lists.

The Law Reform Bill.—A correspondent of the Times thus writes:—Sir, Having been in the House of Lords in a more favourable situation for hearing than your reporter, I beg to state precisely what took place on the important subject of Law Reform on Thursday evening. The Bill having been read a third time, Lord Truro inserted a clause on the subject of warrants for execution. Lord Denman then moved an amendment on the subject of the action of trover, which was carried. He then placed on the table two other clauses, one for the abolition of forms of action, in accordance with the recommendation of the Commissioners, and the Bill as it was first drawn; another for making the proceedings in ejectment similar to those in other actions, so that both parties may have placed upon the record the facts which they are to dispute or admit on the trial, and have full knowledge of the issue raised by the record. Both these amendments were placed upon the journals with a view to their full consideration in the next session, when Lord Denman promised that he would introduce a measure for their enactment. Of course they were not pressed but negatived, on Thursday last.

Precedence at the Scottish Bar.—In March last a committee was appointed by the Faculty of Advocates, to consider the question of precedence at the bar in the case of those who have held the office of Lord-Advocate or Solicitor-General. The committee, having considered the matter, reported to a meeting of the faculty last week in the following terms:—"The committee have considered the subject remitted to them by the faculty, with a full sense of its great importance, and an anxious desire to carry into effect the leading resolution on which the remit proceeded, by any eligible means that would command the general concurrence of the faculty. But they regret to report that, after the fullest deliberation, they find that the adoption of any step by the faculty for regulating precedence at the bar, so as to accomplish the object in view, is attended with such serious difficulties that they are under the necessity of recommending to the faculty not to take any such steps, but to leave the rules of precedence as they have hitherto stood." The meeting unanimously approved of the report, so that, as formerly, no counsel has precedence at the Scotch bar except the Lord-Advocate, the Solicitor-General, and the Dean of Faculty.

Governors of Colonies.—A list has been printed in a Parliamentary paper, of the names and salaries of the governors of colonies. There are forty-eight names in the list. The highest salary is given to the Earl of Elgin, as Governor-General of Canada, who has 7,000*l.* a year, and the lowest to the Lieutenant-Governor of New Ulster, who has 400*l.* a year. There are three governors at 7,000*l.* a year, and several at 5,000*l.* a year.

ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION.—The new Act (15 Vict. cap. 17), is to continue until the 1st of August 1853, and to the end of the next session of Parliament, the Act for continuing certain temporary provisions concerning ecclesiastical jurisdiction in England.

KENT MUTUAL (LIFE) ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the members of this society was held in the offices, Old Jewry, on the 26th ult. Mr. George Harrison presiding. Since the formation of the Society, up to the 31st day of March last, there have been received 540 proposals for the assurance of 131,839*l.* 0s. 5d. Of these proposals 420 have been accepted and completed, assuring 103,739*l.* 14s. and yielding in premiums 3,663*l.* 17s. 11d. The remainder have either been declined, not taken up, or now await completion. Upon the deaths which have occurred, the claims amount to 1,325*l.*

EXCISE SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS.—A Bill, which is now printed, has been prepared by Mr. Hamilton and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to amend the Excise laws in this particular. By it the Commissioner of Inland Revenue may determine the penalties and forfeitures under the Act within the limits of the chief office.

THE LAW REFORMS.

NOTICE.—The following important New Laws of the Session, including the New Procedure Acts, will be published as soon as possible after they become laws.

Each will be transmitted by the next post after publication (paid) to those Members of the Profession who will immediately forward their orders to the Publisher, so as to enable him to regulate the impression, and make his arrangements accordingly.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JUNE 12, 1852.

THE LAW REFORM BILLS OF THE SESSION.

AT length, after much delay and doubting, it has been determined that all the pending measures for the Reform of the Law shall be passed during the present Session, which, barren in all beside, will thus result in producing greater changes in the practice of the Law than have been effected before in a whole century of legislation. An entire revolution is to be made in the practice both of the Common Law Courts and of the Equity Courts. The Lawyers will have to learn their lesson afresh, and, what is harder still than learning, to unlearn. In this it will be the endeavour of the LAW TIMES to give them effective assistance, for the which purpose we have made arrangements with very competent writers to supply a series of papers, that will clearly and minutely describe the changes that will have been effected, and give the fullest instructions to practitioners in what manner they will be obliged to proceed in future. Our learned contributors will also make it their business to introduce the new rules and orders, and to shew their bearings upon practice, as well as watch the decisions of the Courts upon the new procedure, and point out the manner of their operation. To the Attorneys more particularly, who are required often to proceed at once, without opportunity for obtaining advice and assistance, and especially to the country Attorneys, such a series of instructive papers on the new practice of their Profession will, we trust, prove to be useful and acceptable, as it will be our aim to keep the Profession in the provinces as well informed upon the progress of the new law as if they were themselves watching it in Westminster Hall.

THE ATTORNEYS' TAX.—DUTY OF THE ATTORNEYS.

THE Attorneys have now the power to help themselves. Will they use it? Justice is within their reach. Will they secure it? They may command success. Will they do so?

They have a special grievance inflicted upon them as a class, and which has nothing to do with political or party differences. As a class, they are bound to seize the opportunity that now offers itself to procure complete redress.

A general election is the time for such an effort. Almost every Attorney is engaged in it. In counties and in boroughs the services of the Profession are required. Let the condition of such service everywhere be a pledge to vote for the repeal of the Attorneys' Tax. No matter what party the candidate professes, whether he be a Conservative, a Whig, a Radical, or a Chartist; whether a supporter or an opponent of the Government, it is a duty which an Attorney owes to himself and to his Profession to exact from him an unequivocal promise, at all times, and under any circumstances, to vote for the repeal of the Attorneys' Tax.

Because it is a measure of justice, and justice does not depend upon circumstances. A tax levied upon one class, from which other classes are exempted, and which that class is required to pay in addition to the other taxes to which it is subjected in common with the rest, is an essential injustice, an unqualified wrong, which no argument of expediency can justify. It is not an excuse that the revenue is wanted, because the State has no right to supply its wants out of the purses of one class for the relief of the rest. If the money is necessary, it should be raised by an equal levy.

This is the foundation upon which we base our exhortation to the Attorneys, to avail themselves of the opportunity that now offers, without any consideration of party or politics, but as a matter of personal right, to require of every candidate, as a condition of their support and assistance, a pledge to vote for the repeal of the Attorneys' Tax.

THE COUNTY COURTS AMENDMENT BILL.

THIS Bill has passed through committee, and is to become law during the present session.

One amendment has been introduced, which we cannot see without deep regret.

Mr. SCHOLEFIELD has inserted a provision that Articled Clerks may practise as Advocates in the Courts, on the same footing as Barristers and Attorneys.

This has been, we are aware, very earnestly desired by many of the Articled Clerks, on whose instance Mr. SCHOLEFIELD acted. Many letters have been addressed to us by our young friends upon the subject, supporting this concession to them, and combatting the objections we had made to it. But the more we have considered the subject, the more strongly do we feel the impropriety of the arrangement.

Articled Clerks should not forget that they will soon become Attorneys; that they have but five years of clerkship, and thirty or forty years of attorneyship. However pleasant such an importance given to them may be during three years of their clerkship, they should not forget that it will be very *un*pleasant to them during their thirty years of attorneyship. They are, in fact, sacrificing the future to the present: the respectability of a lifetime to gratify the vanity of three years of boyhood.

It seems to be forgotten, also, that Articled Clerks usually end their clerkship at the age of twenty-one. Thus, the whole of that period of probation is but boyhood. As soon as they become men, they cease to be clerks, and become Attorneys.

Now, we put it to them and to the Profession, whether it is in accordance with principle, if it is respectful to the Courts, if it is not throwing something like ridicule upon the Profession itself, to permit boys, who are only learning their profession—who are as yet but pupils in it—to practise there with and against the Barrister and the Attorney. If the Bill passes as it is now, a boy of fifteen may go into the court and claim as a right to practise there, to talk of a grey-headed Attorney as "my learned friend," and bandy arguments with Barristers of standing. This will doubtless be "good fun" for them, so long as they are but clerks; but when they become Attorneys, they will feel very differently. They will then be painfully conscious of the inconvenience always, and often the ridicule, of going into court, to conduct a cause against one who is a boy in age, a pupil in position, whom etiquette and the custom of the world will not permit them to treat as an equal, and whom politeness to one of the same rank in society would forbid them to snub.

Besides, the reason that limits the practice to Counsel and Attorneys is, that they are skilled; the reason why all persons who pleases to do so are not permitted to go into the County Courts and practise there, is that they are unskilled. Surely that reason applies equally to a Clerk. He is only a learner: he is seeking knowledge, he has not got it; and why should an unskilled Articled Clerk be permitted there more than a skilful writing clerk, or an accountant, or an unskilled agent?

Again, even an Articled Clerk is a servant, and, upon principle, we should object to any servant being permitted to practise as an Advocate in any court. The responsibilities of advocacy are so great, that only a principal should be allowed to undertake them.

Nor is this all. The County Courts particularly require to be sustained, and not to be lowered, in public esteem. Respect is much dependent upon appearances. Clerks are not permitted to practise in any other courts in the kingdom, even the lowest. To permit them to do so in the County Courts, will be to convey to the public mind the impression that the County Courts are a lower grade of tribunal than any other. It will be argued, not unnaturally, nor illogically, that a tribunal before which a boy of fifteen is allowed of right to be heard as an advocate, must be a very insignificant and despicable tribunal, or such child's play would not be permitted there. And, as is always the case, they will soon become what they appear.

The better portion of the Profession will not like to subject themselves to conflicts with boys, or with the servants of their rivals in the same town, and so will withdraw themselves from practice in the County Courts. The Bar will do the same, and they will either be left in the hands of the Clerks, or a few of the least reputable of the Attorneys alone will enter them.

Then it is easy to foresee the frauds that will be practised under cover of this provision. A concocted clerkship will be a cloak for most convenient arrangements between a silent Attorney and a talkative County Court Agent. There is no reason why an articled clerkship should not be indefinite in its terms. It does not necessarily end in five years; it may be extended to twenty, or to a lifetime.

To genuine Clerks it will be of the smallest present advantage, because they could not so practise for more than two or three years, against which they must set off the inconvenience that will be felt by them, as soon as they cease to be Clerks and become Attorneys. It is only to sham Clerks, by arrangements so purposely made, that the privilege will be of any substantial worth, and their gain will be at the cost of the real Clerks themselves, when, in their turn, they are admitted into the Profession.

For these reasons we trust that a provision, inserted without discussion, and probably in ignorance of its real bearing upon the interests of the Profession and the reputation of the Courts, will be rescinded on the third reading of the Bill, or struck out by the House of Lords, when it shall go back to them for their consent to the amendments.

And those members of the Profession who agree with us in opinion as to its impropriety should petition the Lords to this effect without delay.

PROFESSIONAL PROSPECTS.

"It is sport to you; but it is death to us."

It is very well for the newspapers to make merry at a scene in the C. P. in the midst of Term, the Judges entering in state, received by one wigged and two unwigged counsel, a bow made and returned, and their Lordships walking out again, because there was nothing to do. The incident is a serious fact, and deserves to be treated seriously. It is a public proof given of that which we, who are "behind the scenes" of the Profession, have long foreseen, have often foretold, have, we believe, been ridiculed for prophesying. We have watched its gradual coming for many years. We have warned our brethren over and over again of the ruin that was approaching. We were not content with indicating the danger,—we took some pains also to point out the path of safety. Before the County Courts were established, we told them that the country was bent upon having cheaper justice and simpler law; we shewed in detail how this might be given without, at the worst, much injury to the Profession, and, as we believed, with positive advantage to it. We laid before them a carefully digested plan for a complete system of local courts by a very simple, very inexpensive, but very efficient, improvement in the existing machinery of justice, by the remodelling of the Courts of Quarter Sessions, giving to them paid chairmen and a civil jurisdiction. The plan was universally approved, but none would exert themselves to bring it before the Legislature, and to offer it as the voluntary contribution of the Lawyers to Law Reform. Some were averse to change, others would not take the trouble, and so it died in its inception. The consequences we have seen. As the Lawyers would not take the initiative in Law Reform, the country took it out of their hands, and made a law that had no regard for the Lawyers. The County Courts were established; they speedily became formidable rivals of the still unreformed Superior Courts; they stole away the best of the business; they have reduced them to the condition in which we now behold them—one Court without business in the second week of the Term, the others almost exhausted, the Bar already half destroyed, and the prospect darker even than the dark present.

In such a condition of affairs, is it not melancholy to read of some thirty-five calls to the Bar during the past week? What madness impels men to enter in such crowds a Profession already so overstocked that it cannot yield a maintenance but to a small fraction of its members? How strange that, just when the Bar requires to be reduced by four-fifths, in order to equalize supply and demand, thirty-five new men should be found to join it in one week, and thus to increase the evil, which cannot be cured but by a long and painful process of suffering—the heart-sickness of hope deferred,—the depressed energies,—the wanton waste of so much good youth, of hands and heads that might be employed so happily for themselves and so usefully to others—the consciousness of not being wanted —the feeling that there is not a future even to dream of! Such is now the condition of the young Barrister: he is not called to honour and profit, but to idleness, poverty, and hopelessness.

However, there is one consolation. The demand for employment in almost all other occupations is unusually great. Never before were so many and such various fields of enterprise open to industry and energy. The overflowing numbers of the Bar may be reduced to some better proportion to the diminished amount of business, without all that misery which would have attended the process of thinning, a few years since. Our colonies have opened an indefinite demand for assistance, with almost certainty of fortune. To the many who have asked our advice in their present straits, we repeat the exhortation, not to waste the best years of their lives in a pursuit that offers no present livelihood, and little prospect of future advantage, but to seek for fortune where she may be more surely found.

COMMON LAW PROCEDURE BILL.

It is not to be doubted now that this Bill will in a few days receive the assent of the House of Commons, and in due course become law. With all its deficiencies and imperfections, we accept it as an improvement, so far, on the present system. If it knocks off one or two trifling half-guinea fees, hitherto paid to the Bar, and never felt by the suitor, it also does away with the barbarous, though generally harmless, absurdities of profert and express colour; if it preserve a system of pleading, worthy only of a barbarous age, it at all events permits suitors to state these pleadings in the language of the nineteenth, instead of, as hitherto, in that of the sixteenth, century. But if we be asked whether the Common Law procedure of Westminster has been so simplified or cheapened as to induce suitors to come to the Superior Courts, we unhesitatingly answer that it has not. The Superior Courts had a last chance of recovering the legal business of the country, and if their procedure had been at once adapted to the ideas, the feelings, and the necessities of the times, it is extremely likely that suitors would again have sought the enlightened law of the Judges at Westminster, instead of the rough and ready justice of the County Courts; and the junior Bar would have regained a practice in which they would have been educated for the important duties of the Bench. But, in our view, this last chance is irretrievably gone, and nothing remains now but to confer a bankruptcy and an original equity jurisdiction on the County Courts, to which it will be better that, as soon as possible, five-sixths of the junior Bar should finally resort. A local administration of justice, cheap and speedy, if even it be not of first-rate quality, is evidently that on which the people of this country have resolved, and the law reformers of the capital and the House of Lords refuse to give such advantages to the suitor seeking justice in the Superior Court as may counterbalance the necessary extra expense and delay of a centralized system. We must henceforth, therefore, look upon the Legal Revolution, for such the adoption of the local principle may be termed, as a fait accompli. The only remedy for the pauperised junior Bar we have already pointed out; the other sufferers will be the agency houses here; but they will meet with little sympathy indeed. The country Attorneys all over England will be the great gainers, in point of emolument, by the extension of the new local system; but the whole public will be also gainers by the change, if it be in nothing else than "knowing the worst of it," when they lose a cause in the County Court.

We are induced to make these observations in the shape of reply to several communications that have been addressed to us in reference to the probable effects of the Common Law Procedure Bill. That Bill, when it becomes law, and the procedure under it, will form, as we have intimated already, the subject of a series of articles explanatory of its provisions. In the meantime, we may inform our correspondents and readers generally, that the new system will only come into operation on the 1st of next November; and long before then, the Law Times edition of the Act will be in the hands of the public. We have to thank one or two of our readers for suggestions, which we will transmit to the editor of the Act. It would clearly be inopportune to prepare a "Practice," properly so called, for it will be some time before the Courts at Westminster will have opportunities of giving any decisions regulating the new procedure. But this edition of the Act will be as complete a "practice" as circumstances will admit of, and will contain all the forms of proceedings likely to be useful or necessary, or which ought to be found in a hand-book for the Profession.

THE LAST OF THE GIANTS.

The equanimity of the Court of Common Pleas was last week rudely disturbed by the appearance of a monster law-suit, such as those that live in the legends of Westminster Hall, are talked of at the Bar mess, or form topics of the reminiscences of veteran attorneys, discoursing to the juniors at their clubs of the faded glories of the law. There were giants in the earth in those days. The race is not even yet quite extinct. One has lived to this time, and its apparition in Westminster Hall has set many a briefless listener lamenting that he had not the good fortune to have existed half a century ago, and reflecting that in a few months such god-sends to the Profession will be swept away for ever. The story is thus condensed by one of the newspapers:—

In the Court of Queen's Bench at Westminster, on Monday, there was argument about a wonderful bill of costs. Mr. Parker the carrier, sued the Great Western Railway, for surcharges on parcels during four years; and he was successful. The notice of particulars in the action referred to twenty-one thousand distinct carrying transactions; it was written on forty-one folio volumes, of which the twenty-first part was exhibited to the Court, and was charged in the bill of costs at 1,300*l.*; it had taken an attorney and nine clerks three years (6,666 hours) to prepare it. Other items were somewhat in proportion to this, but not quite so amazing. The Master had disallowed the charge of 1,300*l.* and allowed only 200*l.*—100*l.* for the draught, 175*l.* for one copy, and 25*l.* for paper; and the plaintiff now sought to get a better allowance. The Judges of the Court were all extremely excited at the affair: they thought the Master had allowed too much—the proving of these matters need not have cost more than 20*l.*; and they refused to help the plaintiff.

Think of this—thirteen hundred pounds charged for a notice of trial! Imagine the cruelty of the Court that could reduce such fee to a paltry 100*l.* and call that too much. What degenerate days are these; what petty minds men have! How the Judges have contracted their notions; how the Bar has fallen to look upon the reduction of 1,300*l.* to 100*l.* as a matter for a jest; and how shrunken the conceptions of a fat case by the Attorneys, when any one of them could be found to object to 1,300*l.* as too large a fee for giving notice of trial, and tender 100*l.* in full!

But the last of the Giant Law-suits has been slain by the ruthless hands of Sir JOHN JERVIS and his brethren of the Court of C. P. The monster shewed, indeed, only a part of himself, but it was enough to insure his destruction. If so vast was his little toe,—all of him that he could squeeze into the court,—if that measured so much, what must have been his whole body? Is it possible to guess. Can any of our readers calculate? Ex pede Herculem. Give Dr. GRANT the smallest bone in the body of an extinct animal, and he will tell you precisely what were the dimensions of its whole carcase. Can no comparative anatomist, learned in the physiology of the law, inform us what must have been the entire cost of an action in which the notice of trial was 1,300*l.*? But the sum must not be stated in figures, or it will not be comprehended. Let it be put in a measurable and intelligible shape, as we convey a notion of the girth of the globe, or the distance of the sun. How many times round the world would stretch the shillings required to pay it, each placed side by side; how many men would it take to number them in twenty years, each counting so many per minute.

This would preserve to future ages some record of the last of the Legal Giants, in the shape of a law-suit, who has made his appearance, strange to say, immediately before the extinction of the race by the ruthless and reckless artillery of the Common Law Procedure Bill.

GOSSIP OF WESTMINSTER HALL.

BY ONE OF THE BRIEFLESS.

WHETHER from the scarcity of business now brought into the Superior Courts, or from the celerity with which it is despatched when brought there, the junior Bar have positively nothing to do. Some idea of the hopeless want of work that has come upon us may be derived from the fact, that within little more than a week the Court of C. P. has twice adjourned, because it had nothing else to do. The scene on Friday, the 4th ult. was both humourous and melancholy. JERVIS, C.J. CRESSWELL, J. and TALFOURD, J. had taken their seats as usual, when an ominous silence pervaded the Court. The Bar was all but deserted;—three learned gentlemen, wigless, and one learned Serjeant professionally adorned. After waiting due time, the Judges mildly demanded of the Bar if they had anything to move, and the Bar as mildly made reply that they had not, upon which, as there was nothing to be moved but themselves, their Lordships immediately moved off. It is also a well-known fact, that when Term closes on Saturday night, there will not be three important matters undisposed of in all the three Common Law Courts, an occurrence unprecedented in legal history. If this state of things betokened that her Majesty's subjects were become less litigious than of yore, less inclined to "take the law" of their enemies, we might regard it without repining, even with congratulation: but it is not so; the County Courts are filled with business to overflowing; that business, thanks to Sir JOHN JERVIS, is altogether in the hands of the Attorneys, and the sooner we of the Bar assume the pick of the Australian miner or the crook of the Australian shepherd, the sooner will we avert the catastrophe impending imminently over our heads.

The room in which the Nisi Prius Court is held is very inconvenient, and up four flights of stairs. Mr. Justice WILLIAMS made, on Thursday, some very severe remarks upon this, and characterised it as utterly unworthy of the administration of justice for any country. It is to be desired that this evil should speedily be remedied, and fitting accommodation provided for the Judge sitting at Nisi Prius.

The most interesting case that has occupied the attention of the Courts during the past week has been an application to the Court of Q. B. by General Sir CHARLES NAPIER, G.C.B. for a mandamus, directed to the Honourable East India Company, requiring them to pay him 2,019*l.* being a sum stopped by them out of his pay as Commander-in-chief of the Indian army. The circumstances of the case may be shortly stated, as follows:—

During Sir CHARLES NAPIER'S command in Scinde the army acquired very considerable booty, which was ceded by the Crown to the East India Company for distribution amongst the capturing army. In making this distribution, it is alleged that the officials of the Company, by an error in distributing the portions, omitted to assign to the Ameers of Scinde the share which ought to have been allotted to them. In consequence of this error, it is alleged that Sir CHARLES and the rest of the army received a larger proportion than they were entitled to. After the discovery of the mistake, the East-India Company forcibly detained from the accruing pay of the officers and soldiers the amount of the alleged overpayment. Taking advantage of Sir CHARLES'S subsequent appointment to supersede Lord GOUGH in 1849, they have deducted, in furtherance of the forcible restitution, the sum which now forms the subject of dispute. On behalf of the army of India, many of whom have greatly suffered by their arbitrary proceedings, Sir CHARLES determined to bring the matter under the notice of an English Court; but having no sufficient contract with the East-India Company to found a legal right to his pay, his application has not been successful. In pronouncing its decision, the Court has laid down the doctrine, that as between the Indian Army and the East-India Company no legal liability can be fastened upon the latter to pay any member of the army. This decision certainly places the Indian army in a somewhat precarious position: it may be very consoling to the feelings of the brave men who peril their lives in the service of the Company to reflect that their profession has been pronounced to be without doubt an honorary profession; but such a reflection will be very far from welcome to the widows and orphans, whose little all is thus abandoned to the caprice of the powers that be in Leadenhall-street.

ERRATUM.—Owing to an accident which prevented the writer from correcting the proof of his former article, a rather absurd error was suffered to creep in. As the article was printed, it asserted that the appeal of the WAGNER party from the decision of Vice-Chancellor PARKER, was at the "expense, instance," &c. of Mr. BETHELL: this is, of course, not so, the sentence was intended to read "at his express instance."

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FLORINS.

WEDNESDAY, June 9.—Mr. THORNELY inquired whether there was a prospect of the long-promised issue of florins, or 2s. pieces.—Mr. G. A. HAMILTON answered that the press of business at the Mint had delayed the issue, but the Master of the Mint fully expected that the first issue of florins would take place in the week after next.

COUNTY COURTS FURTHER EXTENSION BILL.

The House went into committee on this Bill, resuming at clause twenty-five, which empowers the Lord Chancellor to give pensions to retiring judges. —Mr. STANFORD said, before the House took any step to increase pensions, they should have some good reason. He moved to add the following words: —"Provided that such judge, at the time of such resignation, shall have served the office of judge for a period of not less than fifteen years." There are about sixty equity court judges, and they were by this clause to empower the Lord Chancellor to grant pensions, not exceeding two-thirds of the salary, to any of the judges, without any restriction. The Act giving power to grant pensions to the Judges of the Superior Courts provided that no such pensions should be allowed unless such judges had served fifteen years, or are afflicted with some infirmity rendering them incapable of fulfilling their office. He did not see why this principle should be departed from in the case of County Court Judges.—Mr. FITZROY said the object of the retiring pension was to induce the retirement of judges who, from age or other cause, should be incompetent. If the hon. gentleman had moved that the pension should be given only in case of infirmity, or having served fifteen years, he should not have objected to it. — Mr. STANFORD said that they had already provided for bodily infirmity, and what he wanted to do was to prevent pensions being granted to judges who have not served for fifteen years.—Mr. WALPOLE said this amendment would prevent pensions being granted even in cases of permanent infirmity rendering the judge unfit to fulfil his office. After some further discussion the amendment was withdrawn.—Two other clauses were then agreed to, one moved by Mr. HEADLAM, giving effect to warrants issued in one jurisdiction when the defendant has moved into another; and a second, moved by Mr. MULLINS, forbidding County Court judge to practise at the Bar, as special pleader, or equity draftsman, or as conveyancer, notary public, solicitor, attorney, or proctor; and an amendment moved by Mr. SCHOLEFIELD in the 21st clause, adding the words "articled clerk."—The bill then passed through committee.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.—On Saturday, the 22nd ult. the usual return relating to railway accidents for the half-year ending the 31st of December last, printed. The number of passengers was 47,509,9[illegible]. The number of persons killed was 113, and 264 injured. There were 8 passengers killed and 213 injured from causes beyond their own control; 9 passengers were killed and 14 injured owing to their own misconduct or want of caution; 30 servants of companies or of contractors were killed and 17 injured from causes beyond their own control; 32 servants of companies or of contractors were killed and 11 injured owing to their own misconduct or want of caution; 33 trespassers and other persons, neither passengers nor servants of the companies, were killed and 9 injured by crossing or walking on railways. There was one suicide. The length of railways open on the 30th June, 1851, was 6,698 miles, and on the 1st December last 6,890 miles, being an increase during the half-year of 192 miles.

THE HOUSE-TAX.—Lord John Manners has obtained a return to the House of Commons of the number of houses rated to the new house-tax at 50*l.*; at 40*l.* and under 50*l.*; at 30*l.* and under 40*l.*; at 20*l.* and under 30*l.* in certain districts of the metropolis. It appears that the largest number under the several heads were in St. Pancras, in which parish 925 houses were rated at 50*l.*; 2,665 at 40*l.* and under 50*l.*; 3,380 at 30*l.* and under 40*l.*; and 3,862 at 20*l.* and under 30*l.* It would seem that in Marylebone there are 803 houses rated at 50*l.*; 1,641 at 40*l.* and under 50*l.*; 1,698 at 30*l.* and under 40*l.*; and 1,950 at 20*l.* and under 30*l.*

CAB LICENSES.—From a return just printed, it appears that from January to September there were 691 licenses granted to work hackney carriages, being a great increase on the preceding year, on account of the Great Exhibition, making 3,548 hackney carriages licensed on the 1st of September last.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

SOME points on the practice of municipal elections were decided in Reg. v. Avery, 19 Law T. Rep. 164. A voting-paper was held to be sufficiently signed by the initials of the voter's christian names, and it is not necessary that those names should be signed in full. A street in parish B. was known as well by the name of "the street," as by that of "B. street." The property in respect of which the burgess voted was held to be sufficiently described as in "the street."

Reg. v. Street, 19 Law T. Rep. 165, has decided that it is not a valid reason for the auditor's disallowing an overseer's accounts, that certain expenses were incurred by them in litigation with a railway company, as to the assessment of the company to the poor-rate, that they did not, before incurring those expenses, summon a vestry to consider the propriety of doing so.

In Re The Governor of the Bedford General Infirmary, 19 Law T. Rep. 170, an infirmary was held to be a public building within the provisions of a local Improvement Act, which required such buildings to be rated according to their frontage, and that such frontage was to be measured as abutted against a footway, as well as that abutting on a highway. In a subsequent case from the same town, an Act of one year had exempted the workhouse from all rates: by an Act of the following year, the above rate was imposed on all public buildings, without excepting the workhouse. It was held that the latter Act repealed the provisions of the former one.

Reg. v. The Overseers of Salford, 19 Law T. Rep. 165, was a question on the Excise Laws. It was held that certiorari will not lie to remove a licence for the sale of beer, granted by a collector or supervisor of excise, although it was so granted without first requiring the production of the overseer's certificate, according to the 2nd section of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61.

On an indictment for perjury, which was removed by certiorari, and the defendant found guilty and sentenced, the prosecutor was held be entitled to his costs, under 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11, s. 3, as "a party grieved or injured," even although the perjury was not successful. (Reg. v. Major, 19 Law T. Rep. 171.) In Reg. v. James and Others, 19 Law T. Rep. 171, the Court refused to grant a certiorari to remove an indictment not yet found, when found at the ensuing assizes, because thereby it would prevent the trial of it at those assizes, and it declined to hear any suggestion of possible prejudice on the part of the jury.

A case of some importance to Magistrates is that of Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey, 19 Law T. Rep. 171. The facts were these. The surveyors were summoned for nonrepair of a road. On their disputing their liability, the justices made an order for an indictment against the inhabitants. The defendants pleaded the liability of an occupier of a certain farm to repair, ratione tenuræ, and the jury found for the defendants. The prosecutor applied to the Sessions for his costs, and was refused. On application to the Court above for a mandamus, it appeared that one of the justices who made the order for the indictment was landlord of the farm in question. But it did not appear that anything was said before the justices as to the liability of the tenant of the farm, nor did any collusion appear between the justice, who [illegible] the landlord, and the prosecutor. The Court, however, held, that the justices were acting ministerially in making the order, and that the interest of the justice was not such as to avoid the order, and the prosecutor was entitled to his costs.

MANAGEMENT OF AN ELECTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Will you allow me to suggest an addition to the excellent arrangements of the committee-room on the day of election, suggested in Mr. Cox's valuable Practice of Elections, pp. 218 to 222 (6th edition) namely, that it should be the sole business of a trusty clerk, or still better of one of the agents, to keep before him a copy of the ruled register of electors, described at p. 219, and as the poll-clerks' slips come in, to strike his pen through the names of such as have polled; and that he should be continually making out, on slips ready ruled, of which a supply should be provided, lists of the voters still unpolled, which should be handed to those whose duty it is to see that they are brought to the poll. I made this addition, at the last election, to the admirable system described in Mr. Cox's Practice; and as it may be useful at the coming elections to others who adopt the same plans, I submit it to my professional brethren.—Yours faithfully, 2nd June, 1852. AN OLD ELECTIONEERER.

MAGISTRATES' CLERKS.

WILL any of your correspondents give their opinions on the following practice?

At the town of G. there are two gentlemen clerks to the magistrates of the petty sessional division. Those gentlemen are in partnership, and on occasions when one of them acts as clerk to the Bench, the other acts as advocate before the same Bench, in cases wherein the justices have summary jurisdiction. Is this fair or proper? B.

[Certainly not.—ED. LAW T.]

PRACTICE OF ELECTIONS.—POLLING BOOTHS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I observe Mr. Cox has published a sixth edition of his useful Practice of Elections, which contains a "Plan of Polling Booths." This is probably the same as I sent you in 1849, and for which I received a letter of thanks from the learned author.

I am glad to have been the means of drawing attention to the matter, but th[e] very satisfactory lett[er] of Mr. Ayerst Hooker, induces me to think that I can still usefully add some observations upon the plans used by him.

It appears to me that Mr. Hooker fell into the great mistake of not having the front of his desk and seats boarded up. I never contemplated any person but the voter and constables being in the voter's entrance on any pretence.

I supposed that the check clerks, inspectors, &c. would so far accommodate each other, as to let others pass them to and from their seats.

I could have made my plans much more complete as to the convenience of the booths, but then I had in my mind that very word "cost," used by Mr. Hooker. My object was to make an improvement upon the old plan (which appeared to require it), and at the same time keep it compact, and of little, if any, additional expense in construction.

I collect that Mr. Hooker's booths were side by side. This I think objectionable, [a]s it tends to concentrate the mob at one place. It is better, where it can be done, to have the booths some fifty or sixty yards apart. But if they must be adjoining each other, it is better to place them back to back, as this divides the mob; and a back passage in that case will not add much to the expense,—but it must be subject to all the drip.

As you have the plates, do you not think it would be a good plan to print some on separate sheets of paper for the use of undersheriffs and others,—I mean, so that parties giving orders for the erection of booths might be able to put one of these plans into the hands of the carpenter, who would otherwise not know how to set about it. The tracing I now send you is taken (with the addition of the back seat) from a sketch I had made for the town clerk of this borough, who orders the booths here, and whose attention I intended to draw to the matter when the proper time arrived.

I have been sheriff's deputy in this county, in both divisions, and my experience is that a seat and desk for the deputy is quite unnecessary; he can always find room when his presence is required.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Mr. Crockford. H. F. NAPPER.

[The plan contained in Cox's Practice of Elections, 6th edition, is that which Mr. Napper suggested. Some copies of it shall be struck off on separate sheets for the use of carpenters, &c., as proposed, and supplied with the volume, at twopence each.—Publisher of the Law T.]

LOAN SOCIETIES.—By an Act which received the Royal assent a few days back, the Act to amend the laws relating to loan societies was further continued until the 1st of October next year, and to the end of the then next session of Parliament.

PROPERTY AND INCOME TAX.—A return has been printed, giving to the House of Commons a statement of the amount of property assessed under the different schedules of the Property and Income Tax Act in Great Britain. In 1814 and 1815 the total amount of the property assessed under the several schedules was 168,234,808*l.* In 1843, 227,710,444*l.*; in 1844, 221,101,717*l*; in 1845, 220,464,968*l.*; in 1846, 227,853,132*l.*; in 1847, 228,937,702*l.*; in 1848, 229,868,226*l.*; in 1849, 231,957,690; in 1850, 229,226,929*l.*; and in 1851, 230,416,293*l.* In Scotland, in 1814 and 1815, the property assessed was 14,462,958*l.*; and in 1851, 26,980,267*l.*

NEW METROPOLITAN INTERMENT BILL.—This Bill, which was introduced on Thursday by Lord John Manners and Mr. Walpole, has just been printed. By it the present Interment Act is to be repealed. Powers are given to parishes severally to elect burial boards, to consist of not more than seven persons nor less than three. These boards are to be permitted to purchase new burial-grounds, to be paid for out of the poor-rates. Powers are also given to parishes to combine for the purpose of providing interment accommodation, and in that case there is to be a joint board, to be composed of the several burial boards of the different parishes so combining. The Secretary of State, without inspection, has power to close any or all of the grave-yards of the metropolis. He can issue such regulations as may seem to him proper to the protection of the public health, and has a veto on all the proposed sites for new cemeteries. Such is a general outline of the provisions of the Bill, which, it is said, will not be pressed this session.

A treaty for the extradition of criminal offenders has just been concluded and signed by the representatives of the Governments of France and of England. This new treaty provides ample remedy for the defects which rendered the treaty of 1843, concluded by the Earl of Aberdeen, almost a dead letter as far as regarded England. If it prove efficient, this treaty will be immediately accepted as a model by the Governments of Prussia, Sardinia, and Holland, who are anxious to conclude treaties with our Government for the international extradition of criminal offenders as speedily as may be.—Morning Post.

THE PASSPORT SYSTEM.—Sir Henry Davie has just obtained a return on the passport system. It appears that in the year ending the 22nd of February, 1851, when the charge was 2*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* on each passport, the number issued from the Foreign-office was 1,178, of which 893 were paid for, and in the year ending the 22nd of February last, the number was 7,304, under the new system, at 7*s.* 6*d.* for each passport, of which 6,912 were paid for. The largest number issued in one day under the old system in 1850-51 was 14, and under the new system, in 1851-52, was 76. The net revenue from the passport system in 1850-51, was 2,189*l.* 15*s.* and in 1851-52, 2,537*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*

POOR LAW RELIEF CONTINUANCE ACT.—The Act to continue the 14 and 15 Vict. c. 105, for charging the maintenance of certain poor persons in unions in England and Wales upon the common fund was yesterday printed. The law is to continue in force until the 30th of September, 1853, and to the end of the then next session of Parliament.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

WINDING UP.

Two questions as to the liabilities of contributories were reported last week. In Ex parte Greenshields, 19 Law T. Rep. 162, A. a shareholder, became bankrupt on the 30th October, 1848. The company stopped on October 1, 1849. The Master placed A.'s name on the list of contributories liable to contribute to the losses subsequent to his bankruptcy. But Vice-Chancellor PARKER held that this was wrongly done. "It seemed to him that the bankruptcy had dissolved the partnership, even though it were a partnership for a fixed term, and it was not possible to put the case higher than that." In Ex parte Burton, 19 Law T. Rep. 162, the facts were, that in July 1849, A. for the purpose of being an agent, took five shares in a projected company, and signed a power of attorney to B. to execute the deed of settlement for him. In the following month he wrote to request that his connection with the company might be put an end to. The directors released him from the agency, but refused to do so as to the shares, but were willing to allow him to nominate another person to take them. In October, B. executed the deed. He was rightly held to be a contributory.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

Meggeson v. Lady Glamis, 19 Law T. Rep. 168, will be read with some interest. The owner of an estate, who was lessee of the tithes, agreed to demise it, after the Tithe Commutation Act had passed, to a tenant, at a certain rent, tithe free. No deed was executed, and rent being in arrear, a distress was levied for the whole, including the sum that would have been payable in respect of the tithe rent-charge. It was held that, although there was no letting of the tithes to the tenant by deed, yet as sec. 80 of the Act provides that any tenant who holds his lands under an agreement that the same shall be holden by him free of tithes, and who shall pay any such rent-charge, shall be allowed the same in account with the landlord, the distress had been rightly taken.

In Jolly v. Hancock, 19 Law T. Rep. 170, a purchaser objected to a title that the certificate and affidavit of the acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman had not been duly filed with the proper officer, under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74. The Court held that the title was in this respect defective, and that the purchaser could recover back his deposit money. "The several sections," said Pollock, C.B. "of the Act make it essential that this document should be not only acknowleged, but the proper certificate and affidavit should be duly filed of record in the Court of C. P. and on filing the same, the deed of relation is to take effect from the time of its acknowledgment; the officer with whom they are lodged is to make an index of the same, and to deliver out copies of such certificate so filed, which is to be received as evidence of the acknowledgment of the deed to which such certificate shall refer. . . . . We are all now of opinion that to make the title perfect these documents should be filed of record, according to the provisions of the Act of Parliament." Let practitioners look to this, not only in passing such deeds, but in the acceptance of all titles in which there are deeds acknowledged by married women.

STAMP ACT, LEASES, AND COUNTERPARTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—In the report of the Committee of Management of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association for the present year is the following sentence:—

"The Committee have had pressed upon their attention the very serious inconvenience resulting from the clause in the new Stamp Act requiring a denoting stamp to be affixed to all counterpart leases after both lease and counterpart have been executed," &c. &c.

The above is to me perfectly inexplicable. I have never been in the habit of having a denoting stamp affixed to the counterpart of a lease, except in those cases where the lease requires a stamp duty of 5*s.* or upwards.

The provision in the Stamp Act, under the head "Duplicate or Counterpart," says "Provided always, that in such latter case, the duplicate or counterpart shall not be available unless stamped with a particular stamp for denoting," &c.

The words "in such latter case" referring to the previous clause, where the duty on the lease amoun to the sum of 5*s.* or upwards.

Nothing, in my opinion, can be plainer than the words of the Act; but as they are controverted by the high authority alluded to, I shall be glad to hear the opinion of some of your intelligent readers on the subject. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

June 7, 1852. J. R. W.

Query.

COPYHOLDS.

A. being possessed of copyholds, wishes to give them to a small chapelry by way of endowment. I should be obliged if any of your readers could tell me the best way of effecting this. Can it be done under any, and if so, which, of the Church Building Acts. The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 107, does not seem to apply to copyholds. E.

Answers to Queries.

STAMPS.

There is no doubt whatever but that, if the deed of eighty-eight folios had been written on one skin of parchment, and stamped with a 27*l.* stamp, it ould have been perfectly good. The question as to the proper stamp impressed on a purchase or mortgage-deed always is, what is the amount of the stamp impressed? and not, in what particular manner is the deed stamped? The case put by T. C. M. is every-day practice. G. W. G.

7th June, 1852.

Incumbered Estates Sale.—The sale of a part of the extensive unsettled estates of the Earl of Belmore, situated in the county of Tyrone, and held in fee simple, took place recently, at the court in Henrietta-street. The entire estate comprises sixty-nine lots; but the only portions offered on this occasion were Lots 1 to 19, and Lots 21 to 24, both inclusive. No explanation could be given as to the reasons for withholding the other lots, but it was rumoured that private offers had been made to the commissioners, who, however, did not feel themselves justified in closing with the parties tendering. The net profit rent of the twenty-three lots put up was estimated at 2,917*l.* per annum, and the gross sum produced amounted to 52,860*l.* or over eighteen years' purchase. The competition was spirited beyond all former precedent, and, had the whole property been set up, there is but little doubt that every lot of the sixty-nine would have been readily bought up. Previous to the sale of the Belmore property, a small estate in the county of Longford was set up for competition. The net rent was 227*l.* per annum, which realised the sum of 3,860*l.* equal to seventeen years' purchase. The new owner is Dr N. J. M'Cann, of Parliament-street, London.

Spoilt Stamps.—For the convenience of merchants, bankers, and traders in the City, the Board of Inland Revenue have made arrangements whereby spoilt stamps will be allowed in future at the Sea Policy-office, 3, New Bank-buildings, on every Monday, between the hours of eleven and two, under the same regulations which apply to the allowance of spoilt stamps at the head office, Somerset-house.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

But one case relating to the County Courts was reported last week, and that is a decision on Insolvency. A person in insolvent circumstances parted with all his goods, except about 10*l.* worth, by a bill of sale to defendant, one of his creditors, for a debt then due, and the goods were conveyed away by night. More than three months after, he filed his petition in the Insolvent Court, and the plaintiff, as assignee, brought an action for the goods so taken. But he was held not to be entitled to recover, as the bill of sale was made more than three months before the filing of the petition, and it was not shewn that, at the time he gave it, the insolvent had any intention of petitioning the Court for protection. "In order to render it void," said Pollock, C.B. "in reference to that proviso, he must have had at the time a then present intention of petitioning the Court, or distinctly expecting to do so by some distinct pressure, and not with a view to any expectant pressure." (Thoyts v. Hobbs, 19 Law T. Rep. 169.) This appears to us to be a too lenient view of these transactions. The fact of a man assigning his goods to one creditor, giving him a preference, ought to be deemed as at least presumptive evidence of contemplated insolvency—perhaps, even, it should be conclusive, for in truth it is a fraud upon the rest, and could only be so designed.

The Westminster County Court was occupied on Tuesday with proceedings instituted by Captain Ackerly, against Sir Alexander Cockburn as Attorney-General, Mr. Smedley as High Bailiff, and Mr. Bowen as Chief Clerk of the Exchequer, for infractions of the laws. Captain Ackerley conducted his own case. "As a sworn officer of the Crown," he accused Mr. Smedley, "under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 63, s. 31," of unduly placing a stamp on a summons. The Captain had been sworn in under the Weights and Measures Act in 1837, and he now instituted proceedings "to relieve his own conscience," and "to keep faith with that chief"—an American Indian who accompanied the prosecutor, and whom he called Peter. He contended that "the original County Court Act" placed the judge "in the same position as the Court of Ex." The Court, however, after much argumentative chat with the prosecutor, decided that it had no jurisdiction. The second case being similarly disposed of, the third was not pressed; and Captain Ackerley, having "relieved his conscience from compromising a felony," left the court with Peter.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

Equity Practice.—Where a defendant had gone out of the jurisdiction, so that an attachment could not be served on him, he was held to have absconded for the purpose of the suit, and a day was appointed on which the bill should be taken pro confesso against him, unless he then appeared, and notice was held to be sufficiently served on his solicitor. (Soltau v. De Held, 19 Law T. Rep. 162.)

Common Law.—It will be observed that in an Anonymous case, 19 Law T. Rep. 167, the Court of C. P. refused a distringas where the object was not to compel an appearance, but for the indirect purpose of compelling payment of the attempts to serve.

In Tambisco v. Pacifico, 19 Law T. Rep. 170, the Court refused to compel a plaintiff, who was a foreigner, to give security for costs, he being at the time actually in this country, and making an affidavit stating that he intended to remain here until the action was concluded.

SHAM LAWYERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

36, Basinghall-street, 10th June, 1852.

Sir,—I attended a sale yesterday at the Auction Mart, and purchased a small property, when the enclosed card was put into my hands by a person attending there, stating that, if I were not particularly engaged, the party would prepare my conveyance. This Mr. Hodges's name does not appear in the Law List, amongst the certificated conveyancers.

Can nothing be done to put a stop to such impositions on ignorant purchasers? Your exposure of such impostors may tend to put purchasers at auctions on their guard.

I am, Sir, yours very obediently,
S. Walters.

"MR. HODGES,
"Conveyancer.

COUNSEL'S FEES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Can you advise me of any plan or method of making an attorney pay a barrister's fees? An attorney in London owed my late brother a considerable sum for fees, a list of which I delivered after his decease, and offered to strike off any that he thought ought not to be charged. He never objected, however, to any one, and promised at different times to pay. I have written twice to him within the last twelve months, and he now does not condescend to reply. He is in good practice, and perfectly able to pay. Perhaps you would be so kind as to give me a hint on this in your next week's answers to correspondents.

I know I cannot sue, and so does he; but if I could, part are now out of date. Trusting you will pardon the trouble,—I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Durham, May 19, 1852. An Attorney.

[We regret that the Law will not assist our correspondent to justice in such a case. But perhaps shame would do what the Law will not: why does he not publish the name of the defaulter?—Ed. Law T.]

Mr. Commissioner Goulburn gave judgment on Saturday in the case of David E. Columbine, a solicitor and "money-scrivener" of Carlton Chambers. The bankrupt's conduct has been most extraordinary; and almost every sentence of the commissioner's judgment was a severe censure. For four years Columbine has been dragging his creditors and the assignees through the Equity and Common Law Courts, in a vain attempt to make out that he should not have been adjudged a bankrupt: one portion of the litigation is still in Chancery. The fiat was issued in 1847: from that time the bankrupt fought his assignees inch by inch, availing himself of every means of opposition and procrastination which the forms of the courts permit. The case has been before the Vice-Chancellor in Bankruptcy, before the Court of Chancery, before the Courts of C. P. Ex. and Q. B. It has been heard before juries in the Common Law Courts, and before those Courts sitting in Banco; all sorts of issues have been tried, and all kinds of exceptions made, argued, and overruled. It is still before the Court of Chancery, and it is not very likely to be brought to a close there for years to come. Lord Denman, when Chief Justice of the Q. B. Lord Truro, when Chief Justice of the C. P. Mr. Justice Patteson, and many other judges, had pronounced judgment in the case in various forms; and the most eminent counsel have been engaged in it, the present Attorney-General and the present Chief Justice of the C. P. having been Mr. Columbine's advocates. At length it was decided, after years of litigation and thousands of pounds being expended, that Columbine was really a bankrupt, and the petition to annul the fiat was dismissed. There is now nothing in the hands of the official assignee, who is very likely only to have "his labour for his pains." Columbine, before the fiat was issued, assigned away a large amount of money—really not his own property, but the property of his creditors. In January 1846 he settled 2,520*l.* on his mother; in January 1847 he settled 11,030*l.* on a woman with whom he had lived, marrying her directly after. In March he was made a bankrupt—he had gone abroad with 1,600*l.* in cash. The creditors allege that the settlements were fraudulent: the Commissioner agrees with them. Only about 100*l.* has been realised by the assignees for the creditors, whose claims are 29,000*l.* The bankrupt has rendered four successive accounts—all varying, all "wilfully false," said the Commissioner; the bankrupt's object being to endeavour to shew that he was in a position to make the settlements. He shewed such "art and contrivance" that Commissioner Goulburn himself was at first misled—he thought the man had been harshly dealt with. But now, on the ground that he believed the accounts to be wilfully untrue, he adjourned the final examination sine die.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

The Court of Appeal has laid down some valuable principles of Patent Law in the case of Newall v. Wilson, 19 Law T. Rep. 161. It determined that it would grant an injunction in the first instance, where the plaintiff had been already successful both at law and equity against other persons, even although some doubt as to the validity of the patent might exist. Also, that the allegation not being denied that the defendant's circumstances were such as to render it improbable that he would be able to meet the demands to which he would be liable if unsuccessful at law, was an additional reason for granting such injunction.

We need but name here, as an extremely important case on the construction of the Copyright Act, Novello v. Sudlow, 19 Law T. Rep. 166, for a careful abstract of the points decided by it has been already given in a leading article last week.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Scotch Barristers.—The Faculty of Advocates on Tuesday proceeded to the consideration of two motions, tabled at a previous meeting by Mr. Alex. M'Neill, to the effect—1st. "That a committee be appointed to consider and report, whether an humble memorial should not be presented by the Faculty to the Queen, praying that her Majesty may be graciously pleased to nominate, from time to time, such members of the Bar as may seem to her Majesty deserving of the honour, to be her counsel next in rank after her Majesty's Advocate-General and the Solicitor-General, and that the members so nominated may have that rank and precedence at the bar of Scotland which are possessed by her Majesty's counsel in the kingdoms of England and Ireland." 2nd. "That an humble memorial be presented to his Royal Highness, guardian of his Royal Highness Albert Prince of Wales, praying that his Royal Highness, as guardian foresaid, may be pleased to appoint counsel in Scotland to the Prince of Wales, according to the ancient and established usage of Scotland, and the undoubted rights of the Prince of Wales." Mr. M'Neill supported his motion at length, founding chiefly on the great benefits which the exercise of the prerogative had conferred on the English bar and public, and the certainty that the same exercise in Scotland would remove anomalies which were found to operate prejudicially in our practice. Mr. Currie opposed the motion, on the ground that our own system had prevailed for centuries, and had given all the advantages that could be desired. The Faculty then proceeded to a vote on the first motion, when it was negatived by a majority of 25 to 19. The Lord-Advocate and Solicitor-General declined to vote, as did also the late Lord-Advocate and Solicitor-General. On the next motion being put, the Lord-Advocate suggested to the mover whether it would not be better to leave the matter in the hands of Government, and he would undertake to put himself in communication with Government on the subject. Mr. M'Neill cordially agreed to this course. Mr. Sandford moved the appointment of a committee to consider the best means of obtaining a clause inserted in the bill for the renewal of the East-India Company's charter, enabling Scotch barristers not only to practice at the colonial bars, but also judicial situations in all the colonies.—Unanimously agreed to.—Scotsman.

The Law Courts.—The Common Law Courts in Westminster-hall have all been deserted. The benches which used to be occupied by a full Bar are now empty, and even the sight-seekers, who used to flock in shoals to the courts, no longer throng the passages leading to the courts, or crowd the courts when their Lordships are sitting. As an illustration of the present state of business in the courts, we may mention that on Wednesday morning, when Lord Chief Justice Jervis, Mr. Justice Cresswell, and Mr. Justice Talfourd took their seats on the Bench in the Common Pleas, there were only three Barristers present, viz.: Mr. Serjeant Channell, Mr. Scott (who was not in his wig and gown), and Mr. Evans (who was also without a wig and gown). Upon their Lordships taking their seats the Chief Justice, as usual, asked "Brother Channell" if he had anything to move, and "Brother Channell" gave a negative bow. It would have been out of the ordinary practice for the professionally undressed to be addressed by their Lordships. The Court then adjourned.—Globe.

THE LATE LORD PRESIDENT.—We have learned from undoubted authority that the Right Honourable David Boyle, lately Lord Justice-General, and President of the Court of Session, to whom her Majesty offered the title of a baronet on his retiring from office, has respectfully begged liberty to decline the dignity.—Glasgow Constitutional.

LAW-SUIT ABOUT A HAT.—The civil tribunal of Chateau Thierry has lately had a rather singular case brought before it, the object in dispute being neither more nor less than the hat worn by the Emperor Napoleon in the Russian campaign. This relic fell into the possession of the late M. Evrard, his valet-de-chambre, and the litigants are the widow of that gentleman, who claims a right to retain the hat, and the other branches of the family, who demand that it shall be sold with the other property, and the proceeds go into a common fund for division. Counsel on both sides were heard, and the Court, after a short deliberation, decided that the hat should not be sold with the other property left by the deceased, but be put up for sale amongst the members of the family themselves, and remain in possession of the widow until that should be effected.

SUPERANNUATIONS.—The annual account of the allowances or compensations granted as retired allowances or superannuations in all public offices and departments remaining payable on the 1st of January, 1851, and of the amounts which were granted or ceased during that year, have been printed by order of the House of Commons. The annual amount of compensations payable on the 1st January, 1851, was 233,477*l.* The amount granted during the year was 13,387. The amount which ceased was 16,045*l.* The annual amount of superannuation allowances payable on 1st January, 1851 was 496,064*l.* The amount granted during the year was 51,631*l.* whilst the amount which ceased was 38,046*l.* Total of both payable on the 1st of January, 1852, was 740,470*l.* subject to deductions, which make the public charge 687,531*l.*

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

Pauperism and Poor-laws. By ROBERT PASHLEY, Q.C.

THIS is not strictly a law-book; and we should scarcely have deemed it to be within the proper range of works claiming notice in a legal journal that devotes itself to the practical rather than to the theoretical—to an exposition of the law as it is, rather than to disquisition of the law as it should be, but that the learned author has long occupied a conspicuous place in the reports of cases in our volumes that relate to the Poor Law and its administration; he has been the great picker of holes and flaw-finder in Poor Law legislation, the terror of magistrates' clerks, the bête noir of the Q.B. on Crown Paper days, and even has been honoured with the special hostility of the Legislature itself, inasmuch as the statute that succeeded at last in extinguishing technical objections to Poor Law papers and proceedings was termed in Westminster-hall "An Act for the better Suppression of PASHLEY."

Whatever the design, the object was accomplished. Poor Law appeals shrunk to a shadow, the Crown Paper was reduced to a skeleton of its former self, and PASHLEY, the Poor-law persecutor, took refuge in a silk gown, and sought to exercise his subtle intellect in the higher regions of the Common Law. But he was unable to abstract his mind altogether from the subject upon which it had been so long engaged, and so he set himself to write a book upon the theory and practice of Poor Laws—embodying the results of his much reflection and long experience.

That is the [illegible] fore us. It is not a practical exposition of the English Poor Law, but an essay on Poor Laws in general, comprising a vast collection of statistics, laboriously gathered from the experience of our own country from the earliest times, and of other countries, especially of France. He details the numbers and cost of paupers in England and in the metropolis, describes the peculiar characteristics of pauperism in the agricultural and manufacturing districts, narrates the origin and progress of Poor Law legislation down almost to the [illegible]; and then he discourses with great power and earnestness on the necessity for a total repeal of the Law of Settlement and Removal, suggesting, as a substitute for them, a union settlement, a union rating, and money orders. We scarcely need to say that Mr. PASHLEY's great knowledge of the subject he has so elaborately treated in this volume entitles him to be respectfully heard upon a system which every body feels should not be permitted to remain as it is, but which nobody knows how to amend without hazarding greater evils than are now endured.

THE NEW LAWS OF THIS SESSION, 1852.
THE LAW REFORMS.

NOTICE.—The following important New Laws of the Session, including the New Procedure Acts, will be published as soon as possible after they become laws.

Each will be transmitted by the next post after publication (paid) to those Members of the Profession who will immediately forward their orders to the Publisher, so as to enable him to regulate the impression, and make his arrangements accordingly.

To Readers and Correspondents.

"X." should consult some Ecclesiastical Court Lawyer; such a marriage is certainly not void, only voidable.

"E. C. L."—There is no modern work on the subject, and there being so little practice in it, we fear it would not pay to publish one; but we will talk it over with some of our friends conversant with that branch of the law.

"O. M.'s" queries are all of them difficult questions of law, and not of professional practice, and therefore excluded by the very proper rule that limits them to the latter. They are questions properly for the opinion of counsel, and would require great research to answer. It is necessary to draw a line somewhere, and the distinction we make is that the opinion of our readers may be asked through these columns upon matters that relate to the practice of the Profession upon which experience is the only or the best authority.

"A SUBSCRIBER."—The same answer applies to him also. It would take a treatise to answer him.

The Secretary of the Birmingham Committee is informed that the provision having been withdrawn it is not necessary to publish the letter inclosed to us. Lord Campbell had promised to oppose it, had it gone up to the Lords.

THE LAW REFORMS.

GREAT progress has been made during the past week. The Equity Reform Bills went through committee in one night. This evening (Friday), the Common Law Procedure is to pass through the same stage, we hope, with the same facility. The County Courts Extension Bill has passed the Commons, and only waits the sanction of the Lords to the amendments made there. The Wills Act Amendment Bill has become law. The Copyholds Enfranchisement Bill has escaped from the Committee of the Lords, much altered in its favour, perhaps improved; but still accomplishing its end—the abolition of this last remnant of feudalism. It is to become law this Session. The Ecclesiastical Courts Criminal Jurisdiction Bill has been thrown out, but only upon the understanding that it is to be a part of a general measure for the Reform of the Ecclesiastical Courts, which Lord DERBY has pledged himself to introduce into the next Parliament, should he be in office—which, it is said, it is now almost certain that he will be.

This is a goodly catalogue for one week.

And these are not the limits of change. The changes now made will compel still greater ones. We are only at the beginning of the journey.

Friday Night.—As we had anticipated, the Common Law Procedure Bill has to-day passed through committee with only a few amendments, one of which was a provision to meet a mischief we have denounced here, the abuse of the privilege of suits in formâ pauperis.

THE COUNTY COURTS BILL.

THIS Bill has passed the Commons, and is sent back to the Lords for their assent to the amendments made in the lower House.

As, by a very objectionable rule, the "Lords' Papers" are not accessible to the public, like those of the Commons, we have been unable to obtain an inspection of the Bill as it passed the Commons, but we are assured that, at the last moment, Mr. SCHOLEFIELD'S clause, permitting Articled Clerks to practise in the County Courts, was removed, its objectionable character having been discovered, but which was not recognised when his proposition was hastily made in the committee.

It will be some satisfaction also to the Profession to be informed that, even if it had finally passed the Commons, it would have been struck out by the Lords, for we ventured immediately to direct to it the attention of the Law Lords, who instantly disapproved it, and would have saved the County Courts from the humiliation with which they were threatened just at the moment when they were being made, as we shall have occasion to shew hereafter, the most important courts in the country to the public and the most profitable to the Profession.

It is greatly to be regretted that, although there are so many Lawyers in the House of Commons, there are none who will look after the interests of the Profession. There are many earnest law reformers, and many who are hostile to all reform. Both of these parties are zealous in promoting or opposing changes in the law, but none makes it his care, while supporting improvements, to see that they are effected without utter disregard to the well-being of the Profession, and which in the long run will be found to be no less for the real interests of the public. It will be an evil day for the public that shall witness the social degradation of the Lawyers as a class; and without a fair remuneration for work requiring skill, integrity, and much costly education, no class could maintain its status in a wealthy and highly civilized country like ours.

THE NEW ERA.

PROBABLY, before the appearance of our next number, a New Era for the Law and the Lawyers will have been inaugurated. In the course of another week, the Law Reform Bills will have become statutes, and a revolution will have been effected in the practice of the Law, and in the position and prospects of the Lawyers. The extent of those changes, and the manner in which they must affect the Profession, will, for a long time to come, engage our attention in these columns, with purpose to assist the Practitioner in adapting himself to the new order of things, and to facilitate those alterations of the professional code which will be rendered necessary by the revolution effected in the Practice of the Courts.

But our present design is only to prepare the way for the consideration of the subject, by impressing upon our readers the general result of the reforms we shall so soon witness. The Common Law Courts and the Equity Courts will be subjected to material changes in their Procedure, all tending to brevity and cheapness; but also materially diminishing the emoluments of the Profession—almost annihilating the fees hitherto enjoyed by the Bar, and reducing those of the Attorneys. But then the Attorneys will be compensated, possibly advantaged, by the increased quantity of business thereby induced, but from which the Bar will reap none, or a very trifling, benefit.

Simultaneously with these alterations in procedure, the County Courts have been improved to some extent, and thus rendered even more attractive to suitors than before.

And it is remarkable that the very month that will witness the accomplishment of this revolution will record a circumstance which has not occurred for a century, but which is most significant of the actual condition of legal affairs, and of their prospects—the rising of all the Common Law Courts, with their lists cleared, and not a single case remaining unheard.

The kind of revolution which this combination of circumstances indicates is unmistakeable. The admininstration of the law will henceforth cease to be limited to the metropolis: it will become localised in the provinces, not merely for the recovery of debts and the trial of small demands, but for all purposes, both of Equity and of Law.

This, again, will have its influence upon the Profession, in taking them from London and distributing them over the provinces. They will follow the business, and that business being unmistakeably and irrecoverably lost to London and dispersed throughout the country, we shall soon see in every centre of a County Court circuit a regular cluster of practitioners, belonging to both branches of the Profession, just as now they swarm in the metropolis, where hitherto the administration of the law has been centred.

The new Procedure in the Superior Courts, making such fearful havoc with fees, and the enlarged and more profitable business of the County Courts, will probably demand a revision of the rules that hitherto have regulated the Profession as to fees and as to some matters of etiquette, for rules that were good at Westminster may not be so applicable to a provincial town.

Thus will a great number of interesting and important questions grow out of the alterations that next week will probably witness. It is desirable that our readers should comprehend their magnitude and understand their tendency, that they may enter with us upon the serious discussions which must now be pursued, as to what further changes will be necessary to perfect those that have been effected, and how the Profession can be best adapted to the exigencies of the New Era in the law that is so soon to be inaugurated.

CLERKS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

We have received a very earnest remonstrance, from an intelligent Articled Clerk in Manchester, against the objections which we last week felt it to be our duty to urge in opposition to the proposal for permitting Clerks to practise as Advocates in the County Courts. His letter is much too long for insertion, which we regret, for it is a fair and candid statement of his case in answer to that which we have preferred on behalf of the Profession and of the Courts. But having given to his arguments the most careful consideration, we cannot find that any one of our objections has been answered, or that the claim of the Clerks stands upon any other foundation than this, that the County Courts would be a good school for them. That is the only substantial reason advanced by our clever correspondent in support of his proposition.

But that is also one of the principal grounds of our objection. We object to the County Courts being converted into a school for Clerks, just as we should object to surgeons' apprentices being permitted to perform operations on living subjects in hospitals, as means of learning their profession. They practise upon the dead body. Let Clerks by all means practise themselves in debating societies with sham trials, but why should the County Courts be made the subjects for the experiments of their "'prentice hands?"

But, says our correspondent, only the skilful will try it; the incompetent will not expose themselves to the shame of ridiculously making their appearance as Advocates.

This assumes what is not the fact, that persons are conscious of their own incapacities. Even bearded men are proverbially ignorant of themselves. But boys of eighteen! Did there ever exist a boy of eighteen who did not think a great deal more of himself than does any man of fifty?

Again, says our young friend, you speak of boys of fifteen going into the Courts. But it is not designed for them, but only for those who are much older, whose service has almost expired.

To this there are two answers:—1st. The proposed provision made no limit of age, it applied to Articled Clerks generally. 2nd. If it be confined to the last two years of service, is that worth the violation of all recognised rules that hitherto have regulated the relationship of teacher and pupil, master and apprentice—the removal of all the distinctions that hitherto have been observed between the boy and the man, the servant and the master, the student and the professor, the learner and the teacher, by putting them on an equal footing in the practice of their particular science, and setting the one to compete with the other as an equal? It is certainly quite a novel claim, an extreme application of the levelling doctrines so much in vogue, but for which the time is not yet ripe,—and we hope will not be for many a year.

Our young friend says:—

> The argument is not good, that because Clerks are not allowed to appear in the lowest courts in the kingdom they should not appear in the County Courts, inasmuch as, in the first place, Attorneys themselves are not allowed of right to appear in the lowest courts; and, in the second place, the County Courts are of different constitution altogether, and not being formed to suit the Attorneys, it follows that the Attorneys must be formed to suit them; and as the County Courts are now established, and have become a necessity, the Advocates required for those courts, suitable to their construction, are become a necessity also.

But, admitting that the Attorneys must adapt themselves to the Courts, we do not see how it follows that therefore Clerks should practise in them. A Barrister does not learn his business in the Superior Courts by practising in them while a student. Yet, if the claim of the Clerks is good for the County Courts being made a school for them, not less should the student for the Bar go to his school in Westminster Hall or the Assize Courts.

Lastly, to permit this would be, in fact, to make the same persons at once practitioners and pupils; it would be to convert the Clerk into an Attorney. Would this be right or reasonable?

We have received many other letters on the same subject, but all repeating the same arguments.

ASSURANCE OFFICES.

A question was put to the President of the Board of Trade, in the House of Commons, by Mr. Foster, whether the Government contemplated any amendment of the Joint Stock Companies Registration Act; to which Mr. Henley replied that he had the subject under his consideration.

On a subsequent evening Mr. Foster explained, that his question had reference solely to the Life Assurance Offices, many of which were notoriously in a bankrupt condition.

Mr. Foster's assertion is quite true, and we direct the particular attention of our readers to the fact thus announced in the House of Commons, because it is one which we have many times repeated here, by way of warning to the Solicitors, who will be responsible morally, and perhaps legally, for carelessly hazarding the fortunes of their clients by assuring in offices whose responsibility and respectibility they have not previously ascertained. It may not be so well known to our country readers, but in London it is notorious, that many of the new Life Assurance Offices have been started by penniless adventurers, without capital, without responsible shareholders, with directors who have neither position, nor character, nor cash to lose, and nothing but heads or tails to their names, which they thus systematically sell, and which the ignorant, who see a Lord, or a Baronet, or an M.P. upon the board, take to be a guarantee for the respectability of a concern which those who know the men know to be a gigantic bubble. Mr. Foster said truly that many of the new Assurance Offices are bankrupt. Some of them have not a shilling in their coffers, although they have received thousands from assurers and hundreds from shareholders, and such men of straw are the shareholders, that they could not, between them, pay the debts of the concern, much less its liabilities. An Assurance Office is the easiest of all means for fraud, because the receipts are immediate, while the payments are deferred, so that the speculators can go on for a long time receiving large sums of money without shewing their insolvency. Hence the great number of new offices that have lately started.

In these circumstances, and with a crash coming which will involve thousands in ruin, we venture once again to warn the Profession to extremest caution in effecting their Insurances. We recommend them not to be attracted by names, for it is well known here how these are obtained, but to look to the balance sheet. That is the only test of the solvency and security of an Assurance Office. They need but inquire into two items in the account, viz. what sum the office has received in premiums, and what sum it has invested in securities. If the moneys invested cover the premiums, and so long as they do so, the office is a safe one. If they do not this, if the investments are small or nothing, the office is unsafe. The reason is obvious. The basis of Assurance is a calculation that if a certain sum per annum be invested at compound interest, it will, at the end of any given time, yield a certain larger sum. If all the moneys received from assurers for premiums be not invested immediately, and kept so invested, yielding interest, the office loses by the bargain; still greater is the loss, leading to certain bankruptcy, if the moneys received from assurers are not invested at all, but are applied to the general expenses of the office.

Bearing this in mind, our readers will have no difficulty in forming a judgment as to the responsibility of any office, and the safety with which they may assure in it. But let them, as they regard the interests of their clients, avoid any new office which cannot satisfy them that its investments are equal to the premiums it has received.

It is certainly most desirable that the Legislature should interfere to protect the public in this matter. The remedy is not difficult. Let there be an Official Auditor, whose duty it should be yearly to investigate the affairs of every Assurance Office, and report them to Parliament and the public. The fees now paid by the offices to their own auditors would be an ample salary for such a public officer. Publicity given to the true state of affairs in each office would of itself be a sufficient safeguard; but to this must be added the American and Continental plan of requiring a certain amount of paid-up capital to be invested in Government or other approved securities, before a licence is granted to an Assurance Office.

So urgent do we feel to be the importance of this, that if it should be then neglected by others, and the opportunity should offer to us in the next Parliament, we shall venture to obtrude it upon the notice of the Legislature in the form of "A Bill for the better Regulation of Assurance Offices."

HOUSE OF LORDS.

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLDS BILL.

THURSDAY, June 17.—The House having gone into committee upon this Bill, Lord LYNDHURST congratulated the House and the country that it had been referred to a select committee, and that it now appeared before them in a greatly improved shape; for it had come up from the Commons full of anomalies, and in such a form as that it was calculated to inflict great injustice, in some cases upon the lords, and in other instances upon the tenants of copyhold manors. His noble and learned friend on the woolsack was entitled to the sincere thanks of all of them, for it was by his exertions that most of the blemishes which had defaced the measure had been removed.—Lord CAMPBELL said, if he had thought that the Bill could have passed in the present session, he should certainly not for a moment have opposed its going to a select committee, for he had always applauded that mode of proceeding in that House, particularly when an alteration of the law was involved. He could only say that he now rejoiced that the Bill had been referred to a select committee, for he admitted that it had been greatly improved by that tribunal, and that the Government, having, he presumed, attended to the counsel of his right hon. friend the Home Secretary, were now prepared to give it their countenance and support, and to aid in passing it into a law with as little delay as possible.—The LORD CHANCELLOR would have been well pleased to have been spared any observations on this subject, for he had hoped that his noble and learned friend would have withdrawn that censure which he had seen fit to pass upon him, and to pass after he had denied the imputation that he was professing and declaring one thing when he meant another. There was nothing which he so much desired to avoid as a controversy with any of their lordships. In the office which he held he considered it to be his positive duty to tell their lordships what his real and sincere opinions were upon the measures which came before them. He was not to ask whether those opinions were popular or unpopular, but to give them his real opinion, and, if any man had ever expressed the real opinion which he had entertained for years, and after laborious study and attention, upon any subject, he had stated his real and sincere opinion to their lordships with respect to this Bill. In accepting this measure he felt that he was taking a choice of evils. That public opinion called for a remedy of the evils which now existed nobody denied; but their lordships could not pass this measure without inflicting very considerable injuries on large classes of the people. To that committee their lordships were indebted for the Bill as it now appeared before them. No sooner had it got into the select committee than his noble and learned friend (Lord Campbell) declared that it was the very worst drawn Bill he had ever seen. He (the Lord Chancellor) had taken a great deal of trouble with it both in and out of the committee. There was not a clause in it that had not been cut about in every direction. Some eight or nine new clauses had been added. In fact, he had never seen a Bill more hacked and mutilated by a select committee, and he had never seen one that more required it.—Lord CAMPBELL said, that no doubt the Bill was greatly improved, but still it was a measure for carrying out the enfranchisement of copyholds, to which enfranchisement the Lord Chancellor had, in the outset, decidedly objected.—The Earl of STRADBROKE said, it would have been quite impossible to accept the Bill as it came from the other House.—Lord BEAUMONT said, the subject was a very difficult one indeed, requiring to the utmost all that careful attention which it had received at the hands of the noble and learned members of the committee. He believed, however, that, as it now stood, the measure would do very little harm and a great deal of good.—Lord CRANWORTH testified to the earnest, unremitting, and impartial endeavours on the part of the committee to do justice to both lords and tenants. It might have been anticipated, perhaps, that a committee of that House would have tended rather to a bias in favour of the lords, but he could conscientiously say that what he had observed on the part of the committee was rather a sensitiveness in favour of the tenants.—The clauses were then agreed to, and the Lords resumed.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.

Lord WODEHOUSE moved the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Courts Criminal Jurisdiction Bill, which proposed to remove from those tribunals the cognizance of cases of defamation and brawling in the church or churchyard.—The Bishops of Salisbury and Oxford opposed the measure, which was supported by Lord CAMPBELL and Lord FITZWILLIAM.—The Earl of DERBY hoped that Lord WODEHOUSE would not press the second reading of the Bill, and promised that the Ecclesiastical Courts should receive the earliest and most anxious attention at the hands of the Government.—Lord WODEHOUSE having declined to withdraw the Bill, the House divided, when the numbers were—

The Bill was therefore lost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

EQUITY REFORM BILL.

FRIDAY, June 18.—The House went into committee upon the Improvement of the Jurisdiction of Equity Bill.—The 12th clause, enacting that before the name of any person shall be used in any suit as next friend of any infant (unless father, mother, brother, sister, or testamentary guardian), such person shall obtain leave from the Court in a summary way, was struck out, at the suggestion of the Master of the Rolls, who objected likewise to the 59th clause, which enacts that in any proceeding at law for recovery of real or personal property, if the defendant insists that the plaintiff cannot recover by reason of his estate being only equitable, the Court may direct a case to be sent for the opinion of the Court of Chancery.—Sir F. KELLY agreed that this clause was hardly within the scope of the Bill, and it was struck out.—The MASTER of the ROLLS moved the insertion of a new clause, to the effect that no suit shall be open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree or order is sought thereby, and that the Court may make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief. This clause was agreed to, and added to the Bill.—The MASTER of the ROLLS moved another clause, to the effect that a Court of Chancery shall not send cases to the Court of Common Law, but shall have power to determine any questions of law.—Mr. WALPOLE thought this a most valuable clause, which was likewise added to the Bill. The Bill thus amended was reported.

The House then went into committee upon the Master in Chancery Abolition Bill. In clause 2, releasing four Masters from their duties, on the motion of the MASTER of the ROLLS the number "two" was substituted for "four." The other clauses were agreed to, with certain amendments, and some new clauses were added to the Bill, which was reported to the House.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.

MONDAY, June 14.—Mr. FORSTER rose to ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the attention of that department had been drawn to the operation of the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, for the regulation of joint-stock companies, to the frequent evasion of the provisions of that Act, and to the state of the affairs of some of the companies registered under it as shewn by the return of the registrar, and ordered by the House to be printed on the 19th day of March last, and whether it was the intention of the Government to propose a revision of the Act, to prevent further danger to the public from the abuse of it?—Mr. HENLEY said his attention had been drawn to the state of the joint-stock companies generally, and he was bound to say that in very many particulars the law was in a very unsatisfactory state, that it wanted amendment in many cases, and that there were also many cases in which its provisions were evaded, and no very direct means by which they could be enforced. And, certainly, if he continued to hold his present situation, he would endeavour to have some of those evils remedied.

JOINT-STOCK INSURANCE COMPANIES.

TUESDAY, June 15.—Mr. FORSTER felt called upon to explain the question he yesterday put to the President of the Board of Trade respecting Joint-stock Insurance Companies. His question was supposed to refer to joint-stock companies generally, and one of the papers had headed his question 'Joint-stock Banks." But joint-stock banks were regulated under a separate Act. The return to which his question referred related to insurance companies exclusively; and from which it appeared that many of them, particularly life insurance companies, had been established without capital, and that some of them were apparently in a state of actual bankruptcy.

ROMAN CATHOLIC PROCESSIONS.

[From Tuesday's Gazette.]

BY THE QUEEN—A PROCLAMATION.

VICTORIA R.

Whereas by the Act of Parliament, passed in the 10th year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, for the relief of his Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects, it is enacted, that no Roman Catholic ecclesiastic, nor any member of any of the religious orders, communities, or societies of the Church of Rome, bound by monastic or religious vows, should exercise any of the rites or ceremonies of the Roman Catholic religion, or wear the habits of his order, save within the usual places of worship of the Roman Catholic religion, or in private houses; and whereas it has been represented to us, that Roman Catholic ecclesiastics, wearing the habits of their orders, have exercised the s and ceremonies of the Roman Catholic religion ... highways and places of public resort, with many persons in ceremonial dresses, bearing banners and objects, or symbols, of their worship, in procession, to the great scandal and annoyance of large numbers of our people, and to the manifest danger of the public peace; And whereas it has been represented to us that such violation of the law has been committed near places of public worship during the time of Divine Service, and in such a manner as to disturb the congregations assembled therein; We have, therefore, thought it our bounden duty, by and with the advice of our Privy Council, to issue this our Royal Proclamation, solemnly warning all those whom it may concern, that, whilst we are resolved to protect our Roman Catholic subjects in the undisturbed enjoyment of their legal rights and religious freedom, we are determined to prevent and repress the commission of all such offences as aforesaid, whereby the offenders may draw upon themselves the punishments attending the violation of the laws, and the peace and security of our dominions may be endangered.

Given at our Court, at Buckingham Palace, this 15th day of June, in the year of our Lord, 1852, and in the 15th year of our reign.

God save the Queen.

THE LABOUR OF THE SESSION.—From a Parliamentary paper, it appears that during the session, and up to Saturday last, there were 126 public Bills brought before Parliament, which have been disposed of in the following manner: 20 had received the Royal assent, 12 were introduced by the present Government now in progress, and 11 by the late Government now in progress. There were 31 Bills brought forward by private members of both houses, and 22 Bills had been rejected or withdrawn, making the total 126.

The annual Indemnity Act.

CAP. V.

An Act further to explain and amend the Acts for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales, and in Ireland. (April 20, 1852.)

We give this statute entire:—

5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76—3 & 4 Vict. c. 108.—Whereas by an Act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," it is (among other things) enacted, that no person shall be qualified to be elected or to be a councillor or an alderman of any borough during such time as he shall have, directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any contract or employment with, by, or on behalf of the council of such borough: And whereas by another Act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the third and fourth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in Ireland," it is (among other things) enacted, that no person shall be qualified to be elected or to be a councillor, or an alderman, or a municipal commissioner of any borough, during such time as he shall have, directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any contract or employment with, by, or on behalf of any such council, commissioners, or charitable trustees of such borough: and whereas doubts have arisen whether the said enactments may not be deemed to extend to the persons hereinafter mentioned, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same,

1. Proprietors of newspapers not to be deemed contractors by reason of advertisements.—That from and after the passing of this Act, no person shall be deemed to have had or to have an interest in a contract or employment with, by, or on behalf of such council, commissioners, or trustees, by reason only of his having had or having a share or interest in any newspaper in which any advertisement relating to the affairs of any such borough, council, commissioners, or trustees may have been or may hereafter be inserted.

2. Suits commenced for certain penalties under recited Acts may be stayed on payment of costs out of pocket.—That immediately from and after the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful for any person or persons against whom any original writ, suit, action, plaint, or information shall have been sued out, commenced, or prosecuted on or before the day of the passing of this Act, for the recovery of any pecuniary penalty or penalties incurred under the said enactments (by reason only of any extension of the words "contract" or "employment," therein contained, to the case of any such insertion of advertisements in any newspaper as aforesaid) to apply to the Court in which such original writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall have been sued out, commenced, or prosecuted, or to any judge of one of the Superior Courts at Westminster or Dublin, as the case may be, for an order that such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall be discontinued, upon payment of the costs thereof out of pocket incurred to the time of such application being made, such costs to be taxed according to the practice of such Court; and every such Court or Judge is hereby authorised and required, upon such application, and proof that sufficient notice has been given to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, or to his or their attorney, of the application to make such order as aforesaid, and upon the making such order, and payment or tender of such costs as aforesaid, such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall be forthwith discontinued.

3. Suits, &c. renewed or continued may be discontinued on payment of costs out of pocket.—Provided always, That in all cases in which any such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information sued out or commenced on or before the fifth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, shall have been renewed or continued before the passing of this Act, or upon which any declaration shall have been filed or delivered, or other proceedings had, after the said fifth day of February, and before the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful for such Court or Judge, upon such application and proof as aforesaid, to make such order as aforesaid for discontinuing the same, upon payment of the costs out of pocket of all proceedings had on or before the said fifth day of February, to be taxed as aforesaid, and such costs out of pocket (if any) of any proceedings had after the said fifth day of February, as the Court or Judge making such order shall think fit to direct, and upon making such order, and upon payment or tender of such costs, such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall be forthwith discontinued.

4. Court may make order for discontinuing suit, without payment of costs.—Provided also, that in all cases in which any such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall have been sued out or commenced at any time subsequent to the said fifth day of February, it shall be competent for such Court or Judge as aforesaid to make such orders as aforesaid for discontinuing the same, without payment of any costs; and upon making such order such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall be forthwith discontinued.

5. Judgments not to be affected.—That nothing herein contained shall extend to any action, bill, plaint, or information, or any legal proceeding of any kind whatsoever, in which any judgment shall have passed on or before the day of the passing of this Act, but such proceedings may be thereupon had and taken, and any such judgment may be dealt with in all respects as if this Act had not passed.

6. Proprietors of newspapers not disqualified from election to municipal offices by reason of advertisements, &c.—That from and after the passing of this Act no municipal commissioner, councillor, alderman, or mayor, in any municipal corporation within the provisions of either of the said Acts, shall be deemed to have been or to be disqualified to be elected or to be such municipal commissioner, councillor, alderman, or mayor, by reason only of his having had or having any share or interest in any newspaper in which any such advertisement as aforesaid may have been or may be inserted, but all elections of municipal commissioners, councillors, aldermen, or mayors as aforesaid shall be deemed and taken to have been and to be valid (unless in cases where judgment may have been obtained before the passing of this Act), notwithstanding any such share or interest as aforesaid.

CAP. VI.

An Act for extending the Term of the provisional Registration of Inventions under "The Protection of Inventions Act, 1851." (April 20, 1852.)

14 Vict. c. 8.—Whereas by "The Protection of Inventions Act 1851," it was provided that the provisional registration of any new invention registered thereunder should continue in force for the term of one year from the time of the same being so registered; and whereas it is expedient that the said term should be extended: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Provisional registration under the recited Act to continue in force till 1st Feb. 1853.—The registration of every invention provisionally registered under the said Act shall continue in force until the first day of February, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, in like manner, and with the like effect and consequences, as if every such registration had been continued in force till that day by the said Act, instead of for the term of one year from the time of the invention being registered as therein mentioned.

CAP. VII.

An Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, and for the better payment of the Army and their Quarters. (April 20, 1852.)

CAP. VIII.

An Act for the Regulation of Her Majesty's Royal Marine Forces while on shore. (April 20, 1852.)

CAP. IX.

An Act to Disfranchise the Borough of St. Alban's. (May 3, 1852.)

CAP. X.

An Act for raising the sum of seventeen millions seven hundred and forty-two thousand eight hundred pounds by Exchequer Bills, for the service of the year 1852. (May 3, 1852.)

CAP. XI.

An Act to continue an Act of the 12th year of her present Majesty, to prevent the spreading of contagious or infectious Disorders among Sheep, Cattle, and other animals. (May 3, 1852.)

This continues the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 107 to 1st September, 1853.

CAP. XII.

An Act to enable her Majesty to carry into effect a Convention with France on the Subject of Copyright; to extend and explain the International Copyright Acts; and to explain the Acts relating to Copyright in Engravings. [May 28, 1852.]

We give the statute entire:—

7 & 8 Vict. c. 12.—Whereas an Act was passed in the seventh year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Law relating to International Copyright," hereinafter called "The International Copyright Act:" and whereas a convention has lately been concluded between her Majesty and the French Republic, for extending in each country the enjoyment of copyright in works of literature and the fine arts first published in the other, and for certain reductions of duties now levied on books, prints, and musical works published in France: And whereas certain of the stipulations on the part of her Majesty contained in the said treaty require the authority of Parliament: And whereas it is expedient that such authority should be given, and that her Majesty should be enabled to make similar stipulations in any treaty on the subject of copyright which may hereafter be concluded with any foreign power: Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Partial repeal of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, s. 18.—The eighteenth section of the said Act of the seventh year of her present Majesty, chapter twelve, shall be repealed, so far as the same is inconsistent with the provisions hereinafter contained.

2. Her Majesty may by order in Council direct that the authors of books published in foreign countries may for a limited time prevent unauthorised translations.—Her Majesty may, by order in Council, direct that the authors of books which are, after a future time, to be specified in such order, published in any foreign country, to be named in such order, their executors, administrators, and assigns, shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained or referred to, be empowered to prevent the publication in the British dominions of any translations of such books not authorised by them, for such time as may be specified in such order, not extending beyond the expiration of five years from the time at which the authorised translations of such books hereinafter mentioned are respectively first published, and in the case of books published in parts, not extending as to each part beyond the expiration of five years from the time at which the authorised translation of such part is first published.

3. Thereupon the law of copyright shall extend to prevent such translations.—Subject to any provisions or qualifications contained in such order, and to the provisions herein contained or referred to, the laws and enactments for the time being in force for the purpose of preventing the infringement of copyright in books published in the British dominions, shall be applied for the purpose of preventing the publication of translations of the books to which such order extends which are not sanctioned by the authors of such books, except only such parts of the said enactments as relate to the delivery of copies of books for the use of the British Museum, and for the use of the other libraries therein referred to.

4. Her Majesty may by Order in Council direct that the authors of dramatic works represented in foreign countries may for a limited time prevent unauthorised translations.—Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that authors of dramatic pieces which are, after a future time, to be specified in such order, first publicly represented in any foreign country, to be named in such order their executors, administrators, and assigns, shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter mentioned or referred to, be empowered to prevent the representation in the British dominions of any translation of such dramatic pieces not authorised by them, for such time as may be specified in such order, not extending beyond the expiration of five years from the time at which the authorised translations of such dramatic pieces hereinafter mentioned are first published or publicly represented.

5. Thereupon the law for protecting the representation of such pieces shall extend to prevent unauthorised translations.—Subject to any provisions or qualifications contained in such last-mentioned order, and to the provisions hereinafter contained or referred to, the laws and enactments for the time being in force for ensuring to the author of any dramatic piece first publicly represented in the British dominions the sole liberty of representing the same shall be applied for the purpose of preventing the representation of any translations of the dramatic pieces to which such last-mentioned order extends, which are not sanctioned by the authors thereof.

6. Adaptations, &c. of dramatic pieces to the English stage not prevented.—Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent fair imitations or adaptations to the English stage of any dramatic piece or musical composition published in any foreign country.

7. All articles in newspapers, &c. relating to politics may be republished or translated: and also all similar articles on any subject, unless the author has notified his intention to reserve the right.—Notwithstanding anything in the said International Copyright Act or in this Act contained, any article of political discussion which has been published in any newspaper or periodical in a foreign country may, if the source from which the same is taken be acknowledged, be republished or translated in any newspaper or periodical in this country; and any article relating to any other subject which has been so published as aforesaid may, if the source from which the same is taken be acknowledged, be republished or translated in like manner, unless the author has signified his intention of preserving the copyright therein, and the right of translating the same, in some conspicuous part of the newspaper or periodical in which the same was first published, in which case the same shall, without the formalities required by the next following section, receive the same protection as is by virtue of the International Copyright Act or this Act extended to books.

8. No author to be entitled to benefit of this Act without complying with the requisitions herein specified.—No author, or his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall be entitled to the benefit of this Act, or of any Order in Council issued in pursuance thereof, in respect of the translation of any book or dramatic piece, if the following requisitions are not complied with; (that is to say),

1. The original work from which the translation is to be made must be registered and a copy thereof deposited in the United Kingdom in the manner required for original works by the said International Copyright Act, within three calendar months of its first publication in the foreign country:
2. The author must notify on the title page of the original work, or if it is published in parts, on the title page of the first part, or if there is no title page, on some conspicuous part of the work, that it is his intention to reserve the right of translating it:
3. The translation sanctioned by the author, or a part thereof, must be published either in the country mentioned in the Order in Council, by virtue of which it is to be protected, or in the British dominions, not later than one year after the registration and deposit in the United Kingdom of the original work, and the whole of such translation must be published within three years of such registration and deposit:
4. Such translation must be registered, and a copy thereof deposited in the United Kingdom within a time to be mentioned in that behalf in the order by which it is protected, and in the manner provided by the said International Copyright Act for the Registration and Deposit of original Works:
5. In the case of books published in parts, each part of the original work must be registered and deposited in this country in the manner required by the said International Copyright within three months after the first publication thereof in the foreign country:
6. In the case of dramatic pieces the translation sanctioned by the author must be published within three calendar months of the registration of the original work:
7. The above requisitions shall apply to articles originally published in newspapers or periodicals if the same be afterwards published in a separate form, but shall not apply to such articles as originally published.

9. Pirated copies prohibited to be imported, except with consent of proprietor, provisions of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, as to forfeiture, &c. of pirated works, &c. to extend to works prohibited to be imported under this Act.—All copies of any works of literature or art wherein there is any subsisting copyright by virtue of the International Copyright Act and this Act, or of any order in council made in pursuance of such Acts, or either of them, and which are printed, reprinted, or made in any foreign country except that in which such work shall be first published, and all unauthorised translations of any book or dramatic piece the publication or public representation in the British dominions of translations whereof not authorised as in this Act mentioned shall for the time being be prevented under any order in council made in pursuance of this Act, are hereby absolutely prohibited to be imported into any part of the British dominions, except by or with the consent of the registered proprietor of the copyright of such work or of such book or piece, or his agent authorised in writing; and the provision of the Act of the sixth year of her Majesty "to amend the Law of Copyright," for the forfeiture, seizure, and destruction of any printed book first published in the United Kingdom wherein there shall be copyright, and reprinted in any country out of the British dominions, and imported into any part of the British dominions by any person not being the proprietor of the copyright, or a person authorised by such proprietor, shall extend and be applicable to all copies of any works of literature and art, and to all translations the importation whereof into any part of the British dominions is prohibited under this Act.

10. Foregoing provisions and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, to be read as one Act.—The provisions hereinbefore contained shall be incorporated with the International Copyright Act, and shall be read and construed therewith as one Act.

11. French translations to be protected as hereinbefore mentioned, without further Order in Council.—And whereas her Majesty has already, by Order in Council under the said International Copyright Act, given effect to certain stipulations contained in the said convention with the French Republic; and it is expedient that the remainder of the stipulations on the part of her Majesty in the said convention contained should take effect from the passing of this Act without any further Order in Council: during the continuance of the said convention, and so long as the Order in Council already made under the said International Copyright Act remains in force, the provisions hereinbefore contained shall apply to the said convention, and to translations of books and dramatic pieces which are, after the passing Act, published or represented in France, same manner as if her Majesty had issued her O in Council in pursuance of this Act for giving e to such convention, and had therein directed such translations should be protected as her... before mentioned for a period of five years from the date of the first publication or public representation thereof respectively, and as if a period of three months from the publication of such translation were the time mentioned in such order as the time within which the same must be registered and a copy thereof deposited in the United Kingdom.

12. Recital of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 58—Rates of duty not to be raised during continuance of treaty, and if further reduction is made for other countries it may be extended to France.—And whereas an Act was passed in the tenth year of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend an Act of the Seventh and Eighth Years of Her present Majesty, for reducing, under certain Circumstances, the Duties payable upon Books and Engravings:" And whereas by the said convention with the French Republic, it was stipulated that the duties on books, prints, and drawings published in the territories of the French Republic should be reduced to the amounts specified in the schedule to the said Act of the tenth year of her present Majesty, chapter fifty-eight: And whereas her Majesty has, in pursuance of the said convention, and in exercise of the powers given by the said Act, by order in council declared that such duties shall be reduced accordingly: And whereas by the said convention it was further stipulated that the said rates of duty should not be raised during the continuance of the said convention; and that if during the continuance of the said convention any reduction of those rates should be made in favour of books, prints, or drawings published in any other country, such reduction should be at the same time extended to similar articles published in France: And whereas doubts are entertained whether such last-mentioned stipulations can be carried into effect without the authority of Parliament: Be it enacted, that the said rates of duty so reduced as aforesaid shall not be raised during the continuance of the said convention, and that if during the continuance of the said convention any further reduction of such rates is made in favour of books, prints, or drawings published in any other foreign country, her Majesty may, by Order in Council, declare that such reduction shall be extended to similar articles published in France, such order to be made and published in the same manner and to be subject to the same provisions as orders made in pursuance of the said Act of the tenth year of her present Majesty, chapter fifty-eight.

13. For removal of doubts as to construction of schedule to 9 & 10 Vict. c. 58.—And whereas doubts have arisen as to the construction of the schedule of the Act of the tenth year of her present Majesty, chapter fifty-eight: It is hereby declared, that for the purposes of the said Act every work published in the country of export, of which part has been originally produced in the United Kingdom, shall be deemed to be and be subject to the duty payable on "works originally produced in the United Kingdom, and republished in the country of export," although it contains also original matter not produced in the United Kingdom, unless it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the commissioners of her Majesty's customs by the importer, consignee, or other person entering the same that such original matter is at least equal to the part of the work produced in the United Kingdom, in which case the work shall be subject only to the duty on "works not originally produced in the United Kingdom."

14. Recital of 8 Geo. 2, c. 13; 7 Geo. 3, c. 38, 17 Geo. 3, c. 57; 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 59—For removal of doubts as to the provisions of the said Acts including lithographs, prints, &c.—And whereas by the four several Acts of Parliament following; (that is to say) an Act of the eighth year of the reign of King George the Second, chapter thirteen; an Act of the seventh year of the reign of King George the Third, chapter thirty-eight; an Act of the seventeenth year of the reign of King George the Third, chapter fifty-seven; and an Act of the seventh year of King William the Fourth, chapter fifty-nine; provision is made for securing to every person who invents, or designs, engraves, etches, or works in mezzotinto or chiaro-oscuro, or, from his own work, design, or invention, causes or procures, to be designed, engraved, etched, or worked in mezzotinto or chiaro-oscuro, any historical print or prints, or any print or prints of any portrait, conversation, landscape, or architecture, map, chart, or plan, or any other print or prints whatsoever, and to every person who engraves, etches, or works in mezzotinto or chiaro-oscuro, or causes to be engraved, etched, or worked any print taken from any picture, drawing, model, or sculpture, notwithstanding such print has not been graven or drawn from his own original design, certain copyrights therein defined: and whereas doubts are entertained whether the provisions of the said Acts extend to lithographs and certain other impressions, and it is expedient to remove such doubts: it is hereby declared, that the provisions of the said Acts are intended to include prints taken by lithography, or any other mechanical process by which prints or impressions of drawings or designs are capable of being multiplied indefinitely, and the said Acts shall be construed accordingly.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

The last number was unusually rich in reports of cases falling under this branch of the law, and on a great variety of subjects.

The first was a rating case. In Reg. v. The East London Waterworks Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 182, Paving Commissioners were by their Act of Parliament authorised to rate all persons, inhabiting, holding, occupying, &c. any land, &c. or other tenement or hereditament. A water company was held to be rateable in respect of its pipes as occupiers of land under that enactment, although some control over the position of the pipes was given by the Act to the Paving Commissioners.

Under the Friendly Societies Act it has been held, in Reg. v. The Registrar of Friendly Societies, 19 Law T. Rep. 182, that a friendly society cannot hold its meeting in any other county than that in which it was established. Coleridge, J. said, "Nothing is more clear than that these societies were intended to be local. For one particular purpose, viz. with regard to the place of meeting, there is good reason why they should be locally confined. The general meetings should be held in the county where the members reside."

The case of Reg. v. The Mayor, &c. of Preston, 19 Law T. Rep. 181, was a question under the Municipal Corporations Act, the 92nd section of which enacts that, "after the election of the treasurer in any borough, the rents and profits of all hereditaments, and the interest of all moneys belonging to the corporation shall be paid to the treasurer, and by him carried to the account of the "borough-fund," which fund shall be applied towards payment of the salary of the mayor, &c. and of the respective salaries of the town-clerk and treasurer, and of every other officer whom the council shall appoint. A "judge and assessor" having been appointed by the corporation, with a fixed salary, he brought his action to recover it, as being payable out of this specific fund. The Court held, that the action would not lie. Williams, J. said, "The plaintiff in this case has no general right to payment out of the corporation property: he has no right to payment of his salary here, except out of the borough-fund; and if that fund is incapable, for want of assets, of paying the salary, he must, by some means or other, procure that it shall become capable, by means of a rate, before he can get his salary. I think that, in this state of things, there is no foundation for an action of debt against the corporation."

An important point in the Law of Constables was decided in Freyard v. Barns, 19 Law T. Rep. 188, namely, that when a warrant is directed to a parish constable only it should be executed by him and not by a police constable of the county.

The provisions of the Factory Act were considered in Coe v. Platt, 19 Law T. Rep. 189. Sec. 21 enacts that every fly-wheel directly connected with a steam-engine or water-wheel, or other mechanical power, whether in the engine-house or not, and every part of the steam-engine and water-wheel, &c. and all parts of the mill-gearing in a factory shall be securely fenced, and the said protection of each part shall not be removed while the parts required to be fenced are in motion by the action of the steam-engine, water-wheel, or other mechanical power for any manufacturing process. It was held that the mill-gearing in each separate room is distinct from the mill-gearing in any other room, and requires fencing only while some manufacturing process is going on in that room, and it is in motion for that purpose.

In the Criminal Law we have a decision of the Appeal Court. In Reg. v. Greenwood, 19 Law T. Rep. 191, it was held that if two persons are engaged in the common purpose of uttering counterfeit coin, and in pursuance of that purpose one, in the absence of the other, puts off some pieces of counterfeit coin, both are principals, an absent participator in misdemeanour being a principal.

HEALTH OF TOWNS ACT, 11 & 12 VICT. c. 63—HIGHWAY-RATE — SURVEYORS OF HIGHWAYS.

In the edition of the Highway Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50), just published by Mr. Foote, in a note to sec. 27, he has stated, it is a question whether under the 11 & 12 Vict, c. 63, the local board ought not, as surveyors, to lay a distinct rate for the repairs of the highways; the question being one of importance, as by sec. 88 of that Act, under the general district rate, the occupier of land is to be assessed only in proportion of one-fourth of the net annual value. By sec. 117, it is enacted, "that the local board shall, exclusively of any other person, execute the office of and be surveyor of highways, and have all such powers, authorities, duties, and liabilities as any surveyor of highways is or may hereafter be invested with by the laws in force for the time being, except so far as such powers, duties, or authorities are or may be inconsistent with the provisions of this Act? By sec. 87, the board have power to make a general district rate, "for defraying such expenses as are charged upon that rate, by this Act, and such other expenses of executing this Act in any district as are not provided for by any other rate, or defrayed out of the said district fund account." As there seems to be no direction in the Act that the highways shall be repaired either out of the general district rate, or out of the special rate, and inasmuch as all the powers and duties of a surveyor (under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50) are vested in the local board, they (as such substituted surveyors), appear to be invested with the power of making a rate for the repair of the highways, and under the provisions of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, and independent of the general district rate; there being no words specially to charge that rate with such repairs: the local board being, in fact, surveyors, acting under the powers of the Highway Act.

The question is one of very considerable importance in towns wherein the Health of Towns Act is in operation, for the reason stated in the above view of it, which has been taken by Mr. Foote, that land would be assessed under that Act at only one-fourth of its net annual value. We have, since the publication of Mr. Foote's work, been favoured with two opinions which had been taken by the General Board of Health on the point, from which it will be seen that the joint opinion of the late Attorney-General and Solicitor-General disagrees with the joint opinion on the same point which had been given by their predecessors in office, whilst at the same time it confirms the construction which has been given by Mr. Foote.

COPY OF OPINION OF LAW OFFICERS.

Questions submitted:—

1st. Whether a general district rate may be levied under the Public Health Act for defraying the expenses of repairing the highways, or whether the Local Board of Health is bound to levy a highway rate for that purpose under the General Highway Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50.

2nd. Whether the Local Board of Health may exercise a discretion whether they will levy a general district rate or a highway rate under the General Highway Act.

We are of opinion—

1st. That a general district rate may be levied under the Public Health Act for defraying the expenses of repairing the highways, and that the Local Board of Health is not bound to levy a rate for that purpose under the General Highway Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50.

2nd. That the Local Board of Health is not invested with a discretion whether it will levy a general district rate or a highway rate, but that for the repair of the highways it is bound to levy a general district rate under the Public Health Act; and that a rate under the General Highway Act can only be levied in respect of matters of which the expenses cannot be provided for by rates under the Public Health Act.

(Signed) John Jervis.
John Romilly.

It appears to us that the opinion given by the law officers of the date of 15th June, 1850, is erroneous, and cannot be sustained. It appears to have proceeded on the ground that the expenses of the local board, in maintaining the highways, are necessarily to be defrayed by the district rate provided for by section 87, and which by section 88 is to be assessed as therein is prescribed. We think this view incorrect.

The 87th section evidently contemplates the levying of other rates, besides the district rate; for it enables the local board to make and levy when occasion may require, in addition to any other rate, a rate or rates, to be called "general district rate," for defraying such expenses as are charged upon that rate by this Act, and such expenses of executing this Act in any district as are not provided for by any other rate, or defrayed out of the district fund account.

By the 117th section, the office of surveyor of highways, with its incidental duties and powers, is transferred to the local board, except so far as the same may be inconsistent with the provisions of the Act. One of the powers incidental to the office is that of making a highway rate. Is the exercise of that power inconsistent with the provisions of the Act? We do not see how that can be said, seeing that the 87th section clearly refers to other rates, and grants the district rate as supplemental thereto.

But what in our judgment places the matter beyond a doubt is the proviso at the end of sec. 117 that "neither the allowance of justices nor the signature of the Local Board of Health shall be necessary in the case of any rate made by the Local Board of Health under the Act." Now this allowance and signature are rendered necessary to a rate made by a surveyor by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 56, s. 27. It would not be necessary in the case of a rate made under sec. 87 of the Public Health Act. It may, therefore, fairly be inferred that the Legislature contemplated that rates might be made by the Local Board in their character of surveyors of highways, independently of the general district rates provided for by sec. 86.

In making a rate other than one under sec. 86, the board would not be bound by the principle of assessment provided by sec. 88.

If our opinion be not well founded it would certainly seem that the law is unjust and ought to be amended.

BOROUGH JUSTICES.

Your correspondent Y. S. N. asks what has been the practice of Home Secretaries or Lord Chancellors respecting the appointment of attorneys to be magistrates under the Municipal Act. Lord John Russell, soon after the passing of the Municipal Act, appointed Mr. Tottie to be a magistrate for the borough of Leeds, and Mr. Gray to be a magistrate for the city of York, and both most excellent magistrates. So much for practice; and I know no law against it: why should there? The class of attorneys from whom the above gentlemen were selected, have nothing to do with what is called "Justice Business."

The lord mayors, mayors, and aldermen, are very much selected from the leading attorneys of the provincial towns, which shews the high esteem in which, as a class, they are held by their fellow citizens. I hope this short answer will be satisfactory to your correspondent. A Provincial.

Lunatics at Large.—The Earl of Shaftesbury has laid on the table of the House of Lords a Bill (which has just been printed) to amend the law concerning lunatics at large, and dangerous lunatics. It is proposed to enact that any justice, on information upon oath, may order lunatics at large to be apprehended and brought before him, and upon the certificate of a medical man that such person is insane, may order him to be received into a lunatic asylum, &c. Further, it is proposed that dangerous lunatics may be removed from licensed houses, or registered hospitals, by an order of a justice, who may order their removal to a lunatic asylum. There are several provisions and forms to carry out the object of the intended law.

The Poor Laws.—On Saturday last was printed a return, shewing the amount of money expended for in-maintenance and out-door relief in 607 unions and single parishes in England and Wales during the half-years ending Lady-day, 1851 and 1852. In the half-year ending Lady-day, 1851, the expenditure was 1,678,065*l.*; and in the corresponding half-year of the present year, 1,620,647*l.* The decrease, after deducting the increase in the last half-year given, was 57,418*l.*

The Appointment of Overseers.—A Bill brought forward by the Government (printed on Monday), now in the House of Commons, is to explain two former Acts concerning the appointment of overseers, and the authority of justices of the peace to act in certain matters relating to the poor in cities and boroughs. It provides that justices having jurisdiction in other matters in any city or place may act in cases relating to the relief of the poor.

THE CORPORATION OF LONDON AND BETTING-OFFICES.—On Thursday the Court of Common Council, after a full discussion of the subject, adopted a petition to both Houses of Parliament, praying them to pass an Act in the present session for the suppression of betting-offices in the City of London.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

THE Court of Q.B. has decided that, under the 51st section of the Joint-Stock Companies Act, a holder of shares who has not signed the deed of settlement is not entitled to demand of the company a certificate of proprietorship. (Wilkinson v. The Anglo-Californian Gold Mining Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 181.)

The liability of a railway company to keep a highway in repair, under the provisions of the 58th sec. of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, was considered in Ex parte The Exeter Road Trustees, 19 Law T. Rep. 190. Under their Act, the company had pulled down a county bridge, and thus absolved the county from the duty of repairing the approaches to it. The company rebuilt the bridge, and entered into an agreement with the trustees to repair such road approaches to the bridge. The company neglecting to repair the road, a mandamus was applied for under the said 58th sec. as being an "interference" with the road. But WIGHTMAN, J. refused it, remarking that, "without interfering with the road, they have taken down the bridge. This is not such an interference, as it appears to me, as comes within the section. The company may be liable under some agreement, but certainly not so as to be the subject of a mandamus."

WINDING UP.

ANOTHER case upon the liability of a Provisional Committee-man was decided in Ex parte Markwell, 19 Law T. Rep. 177.

In September 1845, A. on the application of the solicitor and agent of a proposed railway, agreed to become a member of the provisional committee, on condition that he was to be free from liability. The business of the company was transacted by a committee of management, and A. did not attend any meeting. In October he applied for 200 shares, and although the allotment was not proved, two letters from him were produced, asking time for payment of calls. He was held to be rightly placed on the list of contributories. He was a member of the provisional committee, and he accepted shares That was the principle in Upfill's case, and it was decisive of this.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

THE principle upon which a mortgage to a building society might be redeemed was determined by Lord Chancellor TRURO, in Seagrave v. Pope, 19 Law T. Rep. 173, reversing the judgment of Vice-Chancellor BRUCE, which was fully reported 14 Law T. 524. The question at issue appears to have been substantially this, whether the mortgage might be redeemed on payment only of the principal and interest remaining due after deducting the payments already made, or whether it included, in fact, all payments which, as a member of the society, the mortgagor was liable to make in respect of his shares. Vice-Chancellor BRUCE took the former view of it; but Lord Chancellor TRURO said:—"I am satisfied that the security is a security to the society that he would continue to make the payments that he ought to do, and which he would have done if the society had continued on the simple plan on which it was founded,—that nobody should receive anything till all had paid up their 100*l.*" His Lordship said that he would give a fuller judgment to the parties if desired. Should he have done so, we should feel much obliged to either of them for such judgment, which we should like to give in full.

The case of The Attorney-General v. Murdock, 19 Law T. Rep. 173, is both important and interesting, as it affects the interests of Dissenters in charities. One or two principles laid down in the very elaborate and learned judgment are worth particular notice. Thus it was held that where a trust is created for religious worship, and it cannot be discovered from the deed creating the trust what was the nature of the religious worship intended by it, it is to be implied from the usage of the congregation. That congregation may introduce into their system and constitution new regulations not subversive or opposed to the trusts of the deed, but even their unanimous votes could not convert a Trinitarian into a Socinian foundation, or a Protestant into a Popish one, and so forth. If in a chapel a particular doctrine had been uniformly preached and maintained for a long time as an essential part of the object for which the chapel was founded, the Court will not permit a doctrine opposed to it to be preached there.

The rule in the construction of a will is, that "where there is a mistake or an omission in a will, all that the Court has to do is to see whether it is possible to reconcile that part with the rest, and whether it is perfectly clear upon the whole scope of the will that the intention cannot stand with the alleged mistake or omission." "Wherever there is a clear mistake, or a clear omission, recourse is to be had to the general scope of the will, and the general intention to be collected from it; but the first thing to be proved is, that there is a mistake. Wherever there is a doubt, the safest way is to adhere to the words. The application of this rule to a particular state of facts will be seen in Walker v. Tipping, 19 Law T. Rep. 177, where a promissory note for 350*l.* had been given by a testatrix to A. and B. and on the same day she, by will, directed that "the debt of 350*l.* which I owe to A. and B. and for the security of which I have given them my promissory note, and all other my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, shall be paid by my executors hereinafter mentioned," and she gave the residue of her estate "to be applied towards establishing a school in connection with the Baptist chapel at S." and it was intimated by the testatrix to them that she had handed the note to them for the use of the said chapel,—the question was, was the note a legacy or a debt? The VICE-CHANCELLOR held it to be a legacy for such purposes as A. and B. could apply it to. (Longstaff v. Rennison, 19 Law T. Rep. 192.)

In Crane v. Rebello, 19 Law T. Rep. 192, the Prerogative Court granted administration, with the will annexed, to a residuary legatee, and refused it to a creditor. The circumstances under which this was done will be seen in the report, but it was in pursuance of the principle thus stated in the judgment. "It is the general rule that administration should be granted according to the interest, and that in all cases, whether without or within the Statute of Distributions, the Court should intrust the management of the estate to those who have the greatest interest in it."

RESERVATION OF RENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In your paper of the 5th instant, I observe an article headed "Gossip of Westminster Hall, by one of the Briefless," containing, amongst other information for "distant readers," the announcement that in long leases for terms of years conveyancers have in some cases lately inserted a proviso that the rent shall be paid in silver, if demanded, with the view of guarding against the effect of any serious depreciation in the value of gold.

The expediency of inserting such a clause in mortgage-deeds has, to my knowledge, been urged upon some of your distant readers by their clients; but I know of no instance in which it has been resorted to, on account of an opinion that such a proviso would be illegal. The 11th and 12th sections of the 56 Geo. 3, c. 68, provide that gold coin only shall be a legal tender for amounts above 40*s.* and that silver shall not be allowed to be a legal tender for any larger sum.

If, however, conveyancers in London of any eminence hold that a contract may be entered into for discharge of a debt or obligation, "in silver, if demanded," notwithstanding the express enactment I refer you to, it would seem that a new light has been thrown upon the subject; and the gentleman who modestly styles himself "One of the Briefless," would further oblige your distant readers by stating more particularly in your next number what the practice in London really is, and how the difficulty occasioned by the Act is got over. E. H.

Query.

COULD any of your correspondents inform me whether, where a solicitor is concerned for each party, it is the practice for the solicitor to the mortgagee or the mortgagor to prepare the schedule of deeds to be given up on completion, with the receipt and undertaking to return them? W. B.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

AGAIN we have to notice only an Insolvency case. In Re Boyd, 19 Law T. Rep. 192, where a plaintiff in an action for assault, indebted for the costs, applied for relief under the Protection Acts, the Court refused to name a day for the final order.

LATE CASES ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF THE COUNTY COURTS.(a)

II. CASES RESPECTING QUESTIONS OF TITLE.

As immediately connected with the subject of the jurisdiction of the County Courts, we are next led to consider the recently decided cases relating to title to lands, and the recovery of tenements under the powers contained in the County Courts Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, and which will serve to illustrate what cases do not come within the exceptions to which we alluded in our previous article, as contained in the 58th section of the above Act.

And first as regards questions relating to title to lands. The point at issue in the following case was, whether a church-rate was a matter in which the title to corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments was in question, under the 58th section of the Act already quoted. It was here decided that where a statute had authorised the levying of a church-rate, for a specific purpose, and enacted that the occupier or tenant should pay the rate in the first instance, and deduct it from the rent; and that "every such landlord should allow such deduction accordingly, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary," and a lease was produced having such agreement; it was held that this was not a matter "in which the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments" was in question, under the 58th section of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, so as to take an action of recovery by the tenant from his landlord out of the jurisdiction of the County Court. (Gwynne v. Knight, 1 Cox & Mac. 47.) PARKE, B. observed in this case, while delivering the judgment of the Court, that "as to the meaning of the statute imposing the rate, it merely must be, that the landlord is to be liable, notwithstanding any existing agreement to the contrary. It does not go on, like the Property-tax Acts, to say that every such agreement shall be void. But I do not think this is a case in which an incorporeal hereditament is in question. No question of title was raised in fact; and the language of the 58th section is not that the Court shall not have cognisance where a hereditament may be in question, but only where it shall be in question; that is, where it shall be bonâ fide raised in the action." Here it was never raised at all.

In order to oust the jurisdiction of the County Court by a claim of title to hereditaments, under the proviso contained in the 58th section of the County Court Act, such claim must be bonâ fide, and substantial; and in order to determine if it be so, it is competent for the judge to hear the evidence, that he may ascertain if the case be within the terms of the proviso. The mere assertion of title by the defendant is not, of itself, sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the County Court. When, however, the judge has heard and determined that the case is within his jurisdiction, this Court will review his decision upon that point only, and if of opinion that he has wrongly decided, and that the case came under the proviso in the 58th section, a prohibition will be granted. (Lilley v Harvey, Owen v. Pierce, 1 Cox & Mac. 115.) WIGHTMAN, J. in delivering the opinion of the Court upon these two cases, observed, that they both related to the power of a judge of the County Court to proceed after the defendant had stated that the question involved the right to incorporeal hereditaments. The question is, whether the title to hereditaments came into question, so as to take the cases out of the jurisdiction of the County Court. The demand was for use and occupation, and the defendant objected to the jurisdiction, on the ground that he claimed the premises as his own, and consequently that the title was in question. The judge of the County Court examined the defendant, who stated that he believed the premises were his, and he purchased them. The judge went on with the and decided for the plaintiff, being of opinion that the title did not come in question, and I am of opinion that there was no real ground for the objection. The defendant did not pretend that he had any conveyance, or that he had possession, or that he had paid for them; on the other hand, the plaintiff had been in possession for five-and-twenty years; he had a conveyance, and had paid the purchase-money; and the defendant, in 1842, had taken the premises of the plaintiff as tenant, and had paid rent to him till 1846; and it further appeared that in June 1847, the plaintiff had distrained the goods of the defendant for the arrears of rent, and the goods were sold without a replevin. On a subsequent occasion, when there was a question whether the defendant's son was not a joint tenant with him, the defendant had sworn that he had taken the premises alone. It was contended for the defendant, and this is common to both cases, that it was enough for the defendant to state on oath that he believed the premises were his, to bring the cases within the proviso, and that the judge had no authority to interfere further. It appears to me that the judge has authority to inquire whether or not the title is in question. It is difficult to define the limits to which his inquiry may go. It was hardly intended that the mere assertion of the defendant will suffice to take away the jurisdiction; the judge must be satisfied that the title is in question, and he must inquire into so much of the case as to satisfy him upon that point. Where there are special pleadings, and the question is raised upon them, the judge can go no further; but if the question is not raised upon the pleadings, but merely suggested by the defendant, the judge must inquire into the case before he can be satisfied that the title can come in question. If he is wrong, and assumes a jurisdiction when the title is really in question, the defendant may come to a Superior Court, and he will be entitled to a prohibition. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances. The cases that have been decided on the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 7, are authorities for this view of the case. The terms of the provisoes in the two statutes are not the same; but the point in question is common to both. In the case of Rex v. Wrottesley, 1 B. & Ad. 618, it was considered that the justices must be satisfied that there is a bonâ fide intention to dispute a rate before they are bound to consider that the title was really in question. In the present case, I consider the judge of the County Court was right, and the rule must be discharged, in Lilley v. Harvey, with costs. There were doubts with respect to the case of Owen v. Pierce, because there it appears there was an action of trespass for taking the plaintiff's cattle. The defendant, upon appearing in the court, took an objection that he had a prescriptive right for his cattle to stray into the land of the plaintiff, there being a countervailing right on the part of the plaintiff, that his cattle might stray into the lands of the defendant, and without there being a liability of trespass on either side. It is not necessary to decide the law upon the matter: the question before the County Court was, whether the claim of incorporeal hereditament did really come in question; the Court seemed to be of opinion that it did not come in question as between the parties. As is usual in these cases, the defendant made the objection, and stated he claimed a right by prescription; for he adopts the very term suggested in the case in the Q. B.—prescriptive right for any cattle to stray on the plaintiff's land. On the other hand, there were some circumstances tending to show that there was no foundation for the objection taken by the defendant; and in the first place, it seems that was the first time he had ever set up such a claim. It does not appear that he had ever, down to this time, claimed such a right; and it also appeared he had offered to give 5s. a year as compensation for the trespass, which the plaintiff had refused. I think, upon the whole, there is no sufficient ground for assuming that the title came in question. It is not for the judge to determine whether the title was well founded, but whether it came in question.

Where a party to an action in the County Court sets up an assertion of title, and claims exemption therefore from the jurisdiction under the proviso in the 58th section of the County Courts Act, the Court is not, by the mere assertion of such claim, forthwith ousted of its jurisdiction, but the judge may proceed to hear and determine if such claim of title be bonâ fide and substantial; and if of opinion that it is not so, he may go on to judgment. In answer to an action of trespass, the defendant claimed for himself, as an inhabitant of the town of B. a right by immemorial custom to enter the plaintiff's land to take fish. It was held that no such custom of profit à prendre in the soil of another can exist in law, and that the jurisdiction of the Court could not be ousted by pretence of a custom that has no existence. It was held also, that the 58th section would not extend to such a case as this, inasmuch as the claim in question is not to a hereditament corporeal or incorporeal, and therefore it would not be one of the exceptions from the jurisdiction of the County Courts. (Lloyd v. Jones, 1 Cox & Mac. 111.) WILDE, C.J. in the course of his judgment in this case, observed that the jurisdiction of the Court cannot be excluded by a pretence of a custom which has been long and solemnly determined to have no valid existence. But further, supposing any question could arise regarding the custom, still the circumstances would not bring the case within any of the cases referred to, over which the jurisdiction of the County Court is excluded by the 58th section, inasmuch as that section excludes the jurisdiction in cases of poreal hereditaments; and the claim in question is not properly a claim to a hereditament. Hereditament is defined in the text-books and authorities to signify all such things, whether corporeal or incorporeal, which a man may have to him and his heirs, by way of inheritance, which, if they were not otherwise bequeathed, would come to him, that is, as next of blood, and not pass to executors and administrators, as chattels do (See Termes de Ley, Co. Litt. 6 a, and Co. Litt. 6 b.) It is obvious, the right claimed under the custom alleged is not a claim to a hereditament, and therefore not such as to exclude the jurisdiction of the County Court.

On a rule for a prohibition to the judge of a County Court, on the ground that the title to the premises sought to be recovered came in question, it appeared that the defendants occupied the premises under a written agreement with the owner, for the purchase of the premises for 150*l.* The sum of 8s. per week was to be paid until the whole of the purchase money was paid up, the 8s. weekly to go in liquidation of the pur held, that the ordinary relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist, and that the County Court had no jurisdiction. (Banks and Another v. Rebbeck and Wife, 1 Cox & Mac. 180.)

It was decided by the case of Thomson v. Ingham, 1 Cox & Mac. 318, that it is the duty of the County Court judge, in the first instance, to determine whether the title to land is in question, so as to come within the 58th section of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 95; but if he decide improperly, the Superior Court will issue a prohibition. PATTESON, J. observed in this case, in the course of his judgment, that the law on this subject, so far as regards the analogous case of magistrate's convictions, was fully discussed in Reg. v. Bolton, 1 Q B. 66, and it was then held that when the charge is such is within the magistrates' jurisdiction, the finding of the facts afterwards by the magistrate is conclusive; but when the charge is not such as, if true, would be within the magistrate's jurisdiction, no finding of facts can alter it. The present case is between those so put. The judge had clearly jurisdiction primâ facie to try a plaint for use and occupation. The pleadings, if there were any in the County Court, would not shew that the title is in question; the point whether it is or not, must of necessity arise upon the evidence, and as soon as it appears that it is, the jurisdiction of the County Court ceases; the judge must of necessity determine that point for the time, because on it depends whether he hears it on the merits. Is then this determination conclusive? We think that it is not. The objection is analogous to a plea of the jurisdiction in other courts, which is indeed determined in the first instance by the Court in which it is pleaded, but is subject to a writ of error. The County Courts Act gives no writ of error, or appeal of any sort, but then it is presumed that the Court deals only with matters within its jurisdiction. If a doubt arises as to that question, we think it impossible to contend that any of the provisions of the Act make the solution of that doubt by the Court itself final. If so, the question must be open to one of he Superior Courts on motion for a prohibition on affidavit, and if that Court, as in the present case, directs that the party should declare, then the question becomes one of evidence.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—The Court has again set its face against attempts to bring on, as short causes, what, in fact, would be long ones. In Marshall v. Scott, 19 Law T. Rep. 178, it was stated that if counsel on either side personally certified to the Court that the hearing would occupy any considerable time, it would be ordered to be restored to the original paper.

COMMON LAW.—Where in an action on a mortgage deed plaintiff excused himself in the declaration from making profert by alleging that the deed was in the possession of the defendant, the defendant was permitted to plead that it was not so, and this in addition to pleas in bar, non est factum, &c. (Porch v. Creswell, 19 Law T. Rep. 189.)

It is pleasant to see the Judges so steadily leaning against technicalities. In Watson v. Humphreys, 19 Law T. Rep. 190, which was an action of debt, two issues were joined, the plaintiff obtained an order to try before the sheriff, and in the order and writ of trial the direction was to try the "issue," instead of the "issues." At the trial the defendant appeared and objected to the irregularity, but the plaintiff elected to proceed, and thereon the defendant protested and withdrew, and judgment went against him. An application to set it aside was held to be too late, for as the defendant knew of the irregularity as soon as he was served with the order, he should have taken advantage of it before plaintiff proceeded to trial. This is satisfactory so far, but would it not be much better to hold such a trifling clerical error not to be an irregularity, giving the Judge at the trial power to amend it? It could not possibly have misled anybody.

Two interesting cases in the Law of Evidence are reported from the Court of Ex. In Dwyer v. Collins, 19 Law T. Rep. 186, a defendant was required to prove the identity of a bill of exchange; he had given no notice to produce, but asked plaintiff's attorney in court if he had the bill with him. The attorney said he had. He was then required to produce it, but refused. A notice to produce was then served on the spot. The bill not being then produced, secondary evidence of its ntents nd it was held to be admissible. It was held, also, that plaintiff's attorney had been rightly compelled to answer the question, if he had the bill in court. "We think the plaintiff's alleged principle is not the true one, on which the notice to produce is required, but that it is merely to give sufficient opportunity to the opposite party to produce it if he pleases, and thereby to secure the best evidence of its contents; and the request to produce it immediately is quite sufficient for that purpose, if the document be in court." Then, as to the privilege of the attorney, the Court said, "The relation of attorney and client prevents the former from disclosing any communication made to him in the ordinary course of his employment, and on the faith of the confidence which the client reposes in his legal adviser. But that privilege does not extend to matters of fact which the attorney knows by any other means than confidential communication with his client, though if he had not been employed as an attorney he would probably not have known them."

The other was an interesting question on the new v as to inspection of documents. It was held that in order to obtain this, the affidavit must shew, first, that a suit is pending, and what is its nature and the question to be tried in it, and that the applicant has just grounds to maintain or defend it. Second, it must state, with distinctness, the reason for the application and the nature of the documents required to be inspected, in order that it may appear to the Court or Judge that they are applied for in order to enable him to support his own case, and not to find a flaw in the case of his opponent. To this the opponent may answer by swearing that he has no such documents, or that they relate exclusively to his own case, or that he is for any sufficient reason privileged from producing them, or he may submit to shew parts, covering the remainder, on affidavit that the part concealed does not in any way relate to the plaintiff's case." (Hunt v. Hewitt, 19 Law T. Rep. 187.)

In the Law of Attorneys there is a case reported from the Lord Chancellor's Court. In Chard v. Chard, 19 Law T. Rep. 173, his Lordship expressed himself very strongly against the irregularity of a solicitor acting, either by himself or agent, as solicitor for more than one party in the same suit. "Now I must say," remarked his Lordship, "the Court does not, and will not, countenance one solicitor acting for all parties, and I fear there is a very general practice, but one not at all to be approved of, for a solicitor who is concerned for several parties, to represent some of them by one of his clerks, who may have been admitted an attorney. This course I consider reprehensible, and one that ought to meet the censure of this Court." This should be carefully noted in Pulling's Law of Attorneys.

Query.

Will any of your readers be pleased to give information on the following?

Mr. S. as solicitor for M. approved a title, and prepared a mortgage security. Some years after, M. instructed another solicitor to sell the property under the power of sale contained in the mortgage, which was effected. Lately, on a re-sale, an inquiry has arisen as to title, and S. has supplied information prejudicial to the purchaser under M. to the advantage of another person lately become his client. I presume this mode of proceeding is contrary both to practice and law, and consequently a solicitor is answerable for so doing. If so, is there any means of bringing S. to account for his unprofessional practice? G.

Summary.

A case of considerable importance to bankers is Timmins v. Gibbons, P. O. 19 Law T. Rep. 181. A. deposited with a banker notes of a country bank, and received a memorandum acknowledging the receipt of so much money, "for which we are accountable," the bank agreeing to pay interest thereon. Before the banker could present the notes for payment the bank failed, of which the banker gave immediate notice to A. In an action brought by A. upon the deposit note for the money so acknowledged to be received, it was held, that he could not recover it, the consideration for the banker's promise having wholly failed.

Wallington v. Dale, 19 Law T. Rep. 187, was a patent law case, in which it was decided that, after having assigned his patent, a patentee may disclaim as to part of it.

An extremely interesting and important case on the Statute of Limitations is reported to us from Ireland. In Dawson v. Nash, 19 Law T. Rep. 192, it was replied to a plea of the statute, that within six years from the accruing of the cause of action a writ of summons had been sued out, and that the plaintiff died within four months from its date; that within a year after plaintiff's death his executor sued out another writ of summons, to which the defendant appeared, and the present plaintiff declared thereon. It was held to be sufficient, that the facts stated brought the case within the equity of the exceptions from the statute. But it was also intimated that the mere fact of a person dying within the six years, is not sufficient to enable his personal representative, after the six years, to sue, although it be done within a reasonable time from the testator's death, unless the deceased had, within the six years, and before his death, instituted proceedings.

A question in Bankruptcy as to Reputed Ownerships has been decided by Mr. Commissioner Ayrton, whose careful and learned judgment we commend to the perusal of our readers. In Re Ashton, 19 Law T. Rep. 191, he held that goods sent on sale or return, but not actually delivered at the shop of the bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy, are not in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt.

English Debtors in France.—The English debtors now in the prison of Clichy have addressed a petition to the President with a view to obtain a construction and an application of the laws of France, relative to the "contrainte par corps," more in accordance with the Code Napoleon. The liability of Englishmen to a sudden arrest without process or judgment, and to a subsequent period of incarceration at least double that awarded to their French fellow prisoners, they submit are not only in direct opposition to the Code Napoleon, but are, in fact, totally inconsistent with the latest enactments and decisions of the law courts touching the "contrainte par corps." The Code Napoleon declares explicitly that in matters of debt, foreigners shall be treated as Frenchmen are treated in the countries to which the foreigners respectively belong.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Samuel Hadfield, of Manchester, gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

Mr. John George Phillimore, Q.C. has been elected by the Council of Legal Education, representing all the Inns of Court, to the chair of Constitutional Law and Legal History founded by the four Inns of Court.

William Henry Willes, esq. has been appointed by the Inns of Court lecturer on the branches of the common law which are not included in constitutional law, the law of real property, and conveyancing, devises and requests.

In the Court of Aldermen, Guildhall, on Tuesday, the 8th instant, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, with the unanimous consent of the aldermen present, nominated for election by the livery, on the 24th instant, Thomas Grissell, esq. late of the firm of Grissell and Peto; and George Moore, esq. of Bow Churchyard, to be sheriffs for London and sheriff of Middlesex, for the ensuing year.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.—County of Huntingdon,—The Right Hon. William Drogo Montagu, commonly called Viscount Mandeville in the room of George Thornhill, esq. deceased.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

LAW PROPERTY ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

THE Second Annual General Meeting of the Society was held at the offices, 30, Essex-street, Strand, on Friday, the 11th instant, Edward W. Cox, esq. in the chair.

The meeting having been opened with the usual formalities, the Secretary read the following REPORT.

The directors have great satisfaction in again meeting the shareholders of the Law Property Assurance and Trust Society, and reporting its continued and increasing prosperity

During this second year, 284 policies have been issued, upon which 2,711*l*. 1s 4d have been actually r[eceive]d in premiums, and yielding an annual i[ncome] of 3,621*l* 19s

In addition to this, annuities to the amount of 150*l* has been granted, for which 1,760*l*. purchase-money has bee received.

Only one policy, and that for the small sum of 50*l*. has become a claim since the establishment of the Society.

The total number of proposals received to this time is 612, of which 476 have been completed, 1 has become a claim, 7 have lapsed, and 25 remain to be completed, and the total annual income of the Society, on the 17th May, 1852, amounted to 5,366*l* 14s 8d , composed of 5,053*l*. 19s. 4d. from policies, and 312*l*. 15s. 4d. interest on money invested.

Your directors invite attention to the fact, which they believe is almost unprecedented with so young an office, that they have already invested the sum of 6,255*l* 7s. 5d. upon good securities, yielding five per cent. interest. Thus more than the entire amount of premiums received has been kept constantly reproductive, the subscribed capital being alone employed in the business of the office. The security thus afforded to assurers will be obvious.

Your directors have continued to observe the strictest economy consistent with the due promotion of the business of the society, by advertisement and otherwise; but at the same time they have deemed that a prudent liberality in the conduct of its affairs would not be unacceptable to the shareholders, and they have not avoided any reasonable expenditure that was likely to advance the welfare of the Society.

A local committee has been formed at Manchester, comprising the leading members of the Legal Profession in that important locality, from whose labours and influence the Society may anticipate large results

Your directors refer to the general balance sheet, which will, they are assured, give as much confidence to the public as gratification to the shareholders.

If your directors were enabled last year to offer their congratulations to the shareholders, much more may they do so now that the business and prospects of the Society have been steadily improving, and it has attained a position that entitles it to the increased confidence and support of the Profession and the public.

In conformity with the deed of settlement, Mr Cox and Mr. Young retire by succession, and being eligible, offer themselves for re-election.

The auditors, Mr. Kelsey and Mr Hutton, also retire, and being eligible, offer themselves for re-election.

WILLIAM NEISON, Actuary and Secretary

The CHAIRMAN, in proposing the adoption of the Report, said that he had now a most pleasing duty to perform, for their meeting to-day could be but an exchange of congratulations on the success that attended the Society, and the position it had already attained. It had been in existence only two years; it had the disadvantage of novelty in some of its plans; it had to combat the prejudice that always prevails against anything new, and yet such was the soundness of its foundation that in this short time it had passed out of youth into maturity, and had established itself in a business that had exceeded that of many offices of much greater age. Already their income exceeded 5,000*l*.; already they had effected nearly 500 policies; and the business was daily increasing, as the reputation of the Society spread and its many and great uses to the public were becoming better understood. If they had done so much in spite of the necessary disadvantages of youth, and the prejudice against novelty, what might they not hope to do when their popularity becomes known to the world; when it is seen that their plans are entirely successful; when thus it is seen by their financial condition that the public may feel the utmost confidence and security in availing themselves of the many advantages offered by the Society. There was one feature in the balance-sheet to which he was particularly desirous of directing the attention of the shareholders and of the public, because it is a rare one with young offices, and because its importance does not appear to be generally understood. He alluded to the item that stated the money which the Society now had invested in good securities, yielding five per cent. interest. It exceeded 6,000*l*.—a larger sum than they had received in premiums. This was not often found in young offices, and yet it is the only safe mode of conducting assurance, the only security for assurers. The very principle of assurance was this, and its calculations were based upon the assumption that all the premiums paid by the persons assuring are immediately invested, and yield interest. If this is not done, a loss must accrue upon the policy. The profit of the Society arises from the difference between the interest which it is calculated that the money so received and invested might produce and that which it actually yields. The calculations proceed on a basis of three per cent. compound interest. But practically the Society obtains more than this, and that excess is the profit of the Society. Now, it is quite obvious that if any portion of the moneys so received from assurers is not made to yield interest, it becomes a loss and not a profit to the Society. In truth, the Society has no right to deal with that money at all; it merely receives it, like a banker, as a deposit, to be afterwards accounted for with interest. All that an assurance company has a right to use for its own purposes is its own subscribed capital, and any office that trespasses beyond this, and uses the money paid by the assured, instead of investing it, is an unsafe office, and will be shunned by prudent men. They might, therefore, almost always ascertain the safety of an office by inquiring what amount of premium it has received from the commencement of its business, and what sum it has invested. If these are equal, the office may be deemed a safe one, but if the total amount of premiums received is greater than the sum invested, then the business has not been properly conducted, and the office may be deemed unsafe. Having recognised this as the true principle upon which an assurance office should be conducted, the Directors of the Law Property Assurance Society had from the beginning resolved to carry it out strictly, and always to keep profitably invested every sixpence received from persons who assure with them, using only the subscribed capital of the shareholders for the establishment of the business; and it was to this that they were, perhaps, mainly indebted for the proud and satisfactory position in which they stood, and the rapidity with which they had been enabled to secure the confidence of the Profession and of the Public. If any had doubted before, here in the balance-sheet was the answer. Here were all the premiums received, to the uttermost sixpence, invested, and returning an interest of five per cent. and the same rule would continue to guide them in future. He hoped that in all future annual reports it would be distinctly stated what was the total of premiums received, and what the sum invested, as the best guarantee for safety to assurers, and it would be well if the same were required from all assurance offices. He now desired to draw their attention to two or three of the peculiar plans of this Society, whose uses do not appear even yet to be properly understood. In the first place there was the assurance of leaseholds. They had issued several of such policies, but not so many as, from the many and great advantages of this form of assurance, ought to have been effected. He would repeat them. Hitherto a leasehold was always a depressed property in the market, because it was difficult to ascertain its precise value, and the feeling that when the term expires he will lose both the property and the money paid for it, always, to some extent, affects a buyer, and it is always an obstacle to a mortgagee. This difficulty is entirely met by the plan of assurance of leaseholds in this Society. If you want to buy a leasehold, say of thirty years, and you want to know how much it is worth, what you can safely give for it, you come to this Society, and are informed for what annual premium the society will grant you a policy for repayment of the purchase-money at the end of the term. To ascertain its value, you first deduct from its annual proceeds the interest on the purchase-money, then the premium to be paid for the return of the money at the expiration of the lease; and if the interest and the premium together are covered by the rental, then you may be sure that you give only the value, because thus you will obtain five per cent. for your purchase-money so long as the lease continues and the money itself is returned to you when the lease expires. Nor is it useful only to purchasers of leaseholds. How great are its advantages for the purpose of mortgage. Who will advance much upon property which is daily becoming of less value, and is certain at a fixed time to be lost altogether? But if the leasehold is assured in this office it is as good as a freehold, for either buyer or mortgagee, because, when the property goes the money comes; nay, it is better, for a freehold may diminish in value—an insured leasehold cannot do so—the policy fixes its value, and a mortgagee may lend upon it safely, almost to its entire value. (Hear.) He was sure that this only wanted to be understood to secure for them a large amount of that business, for its uses were obvious. There was another of their branches of business founded on the same principle, the redemption of mortgages and loans. It is too true that few, when they contract a loan or mortgage, make any provision for its repayment. Even if they intend to do so, and perhaps begin to do so, they very rarely continue it; temptation to spend any little fund they might accumulate is sure to be too strong to be resisted. But if a man desires to redeem his loan, this office enables him to do so by assuring him against his own weakness. He calculates how much he can afford to pay yearly towards the liquidation of his debt, and the society grants a policy by which it agrees to pay the amount of the loan at the end of a fixed time, on his making such annual payment. Having to pay this sum on his policy regularly, he saves it—he sets it down as part of his annual expenditure, like rent and taxes, and regulates his other expenses accordingly, and the thing is done. As a further security to him, for a small additional premium the Society further agrees, if he desires it, to pay the amount of the loan or mortgage should he die before the time appointed, so that he may be sure that his family will be left unincumbered by the debt. (Hear, hear.) There was another branch of their business not yet sufficiently understood—the Assurance of Titles. Very vague and wild notions prevailed as to this. He hoped, however, it would be understood that they did not assure bad titles, but only such as were unmarketable by reason of some defect, but which were perfectly good holding titles. An immense amount of property in this country could neither be sold nor mortgaged in consequence of some difficulties in proof of certain facts, or because the cost of proving them would be too great to be borne. In such cases the Society, after investigation, grants a policy guaranteeing the title against the particular defect, and thus releasing it from its bondage, and making it both marketable and mortgageable. So where a property was sold in such small lots that it would not pay to make out a separate title, and give an abstract or attested copies to each, the Society would investigate the title, and grant a policy to each purchaser guaranteeing that title. (Hear, hear.) These were some of the new applications by this Society of the principle of assurance, and they were found to work very well in practice, and he hoped their uses would soon become better understood by the Profession and by the public generally. In the business of Life Assurance the Society was flourishing beyond expectation, and that they had done a safe business was shewn by the fact that in two years only one life had dropped. For the flourishing position in which they found themselves he believed they were much indebted also to the unanimity and zeal which had prevailed at the Board. They had pulled heartily together, working diligently at their duties, and while they exercised a prudent economy, they did not shrink from judicious expenditure when they believed that the business of the Society would be promoted by it. (Hear, hear.) They were averse to the penny wisdom and pound foolishness that was too much the fashion, and they had avoided the wanton mode of expenditure that had marked the first stages of some of the many young assurance offices. (Hear, hear.) Lately, they had established a Local Board at Manchester, and although as yet it had not begun to help them, the shareholders might anticipate great results from their labours, for it was composed of some of the principal members of the Profession in that town, each of whom could from his own office issue many policies in the course of the year, and doubtless the results will be seen swelling their next year's report. (Hear, hear.) He was bound to say for his colleagues, that the Society was deeply indebted to all of them for the attention they had given to their duties, as the results proved. To Mr. Macauley they were indebted particularly for the time and care he had given to that important portion of their business, the investigation of the titles offered for assurance; as an equity lawyer of great ability, his advice had been of much service, and he had spared no pains in the performance of that arduous duty. There was another person whom he was bound to name to them as entitled to the thanks of the shareholders—their actuary and secretary, Mr. Wm. Neison. Nothing could surpass the zeal, the industry, the energy, and the ability with which he performed his duties, and he was sure that in this all the board would agree with him. (Hear, hear, hear.) It only remained for the shareholders to do their part in promoting the prosperity so well begun, by making known to their friends the flourishing state and prospects of the Society, the security it offers to assurers, the practical uses of its plans of assurance, and, by bringing to it and recommending to it all who have occasion to avail themselves of the benefits of assurance, whether upon their lives or their property. (Hear, hear.) He now proposed the adoption of the report.

It was adopted unanimously.

The auditors' balance-sheet was then adopted.

Mr. HOLMES proposed a vote of thanks to the Directors for their services; the report, the balance-sheet, and the highly satisfactory state of the business of the Society were the best proof that they had done their duty.

Mr. KELSEY seconded the motion. As auditor, he had been behind the scenes. He had an opportunity of witnessing the attention and zeal bestowed by the directors on the affairs of the Society, which, from the investigations imposed upon him in his office, he knew and he could assure them were in a most satisfactory, secure, and flourishing condition. (Hear, hear.)

Carried unanimously.

Mr. CHANDLER returned thanks. They had done their utmost, and they were rewarded by the success that had attended their exertions—the business had more than met their most sanguine expectations. (Hear, hear.) If the shareholders, and he might say the Profession generally throughout the country, better understood their plans, the business would rapidly multiply; for he could speak from his own experience as to the utility of many of them. He had extensively adopted the Assurance of Leaseholds, and thus greatly facilitated the mortgages and sales of his clients. By the Assurance of Titles he had found immense assistance in the conduct of sales—it had been of the utmost professional service to him. One case, out of many he might name, would shew the uses of the Society to the owners of property and to their solicitors. He had advertised a sale of property. A pretended claimant, for the purpose of putting them to expense and trouble, served notices, moved injunctions, and endeavoured by these means to deter purchasers. In such circumstances it was impossible to proceed to a sale, although the matter was urgent. But he applied to this Society,—they investigated the title, they were fully satisfied with it, and they agreed to assure that title to any purchaser at a price named. Accordingly he so announced in his advertisements, all objections were removed, and the property sold without difficulty, in reliance on the guarantee of this Society. (Hear, hear.) Another great advantage he had found from it. Sometimes it happened that property was to be sold in lots, parcels of a large estate, having a costly title, which would be ruinous to purchasers to investigate, or to vendors to furnish abstracts and attested copies. In such case the Society afforded an easy remedy. It investigated the title once for all, and the vendor went into the market with a condition that, instead of a title ruinous to both parties, he would supply a policy of assurance from this Society guaranteeing the title. (Hear, hear.) If the Profession and the public would send the business to them, the Board would transact it carefully and securely to all parties.

Mr. AUSTIN proposed a vote of 250*l.* to the directors for their services during the past year. They would all agree that it had been well deserved. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. DOVE seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. WORRELL proposed a vote of 21*l.* to the auditors. He had been much pleased with the balance-sheet, not only in the gratifying results which it exhibited, but for the clear and intelligible manner in which it was set out, so that the real state of the society could be seen at once by the shareholders and the assured.

Mr. BUTCHER seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. KELSEY returned thanks. They had devoted great attention to their duties, and were pleased that they had given so much satisfaction. Their task had, indeed, been an easy one, so well had all the accounts been kept, and so prudent had been the management of the affairs of the society. He hoped the shareholders would increase their labours indefinitely, by sending a still increasing business to the office.

Mr. WORRELL proposed the re-election of Mr. Edward W. Cox and Mr. Robert Young as directors.

Mr. ST. PATRICK seconded the motion. He would take this opportunity of asking if the Board contemplated an addition to their numbers? The motion was carried unanimously.

Mr. COX, in returning thanks, said, that in reply to Mr. St. Patrick's question, he should state that the Board had such an intention. They were, however, desirous of not doing so hastily, because they wanted to obtain the best men, whose names would be a guarantee to the public at a distance. They might easily have filled their seats with a set of men who are about London, who have handles to their names, and use them to get a sort of living by directorships—men who might be termed Professional Directors; but the Board conceived that such persons did not give either respectability to the Society or confidence to the public, even though they might be lords or M.P.'s. (Hear, hear.) The best men, those who were really desirable, were not so easily to be obtained. They would not join a society until they saw how it was going on. The Board hoped, now that they could shew themselves to be established, and to be going on with certainty of success, that they should be able to induce two or three of such really desirable persons to join them. But for the purposes of business they did not need an addition: much of their success was due to the unanimity and promptitude of a small Board. His experience had shewn him that a large board was an evil and an obstruction to business. (Hear, hear, hear.) They were, therefore, desirous to proceed as cautiously in this as they had done in the other affairs of the Society. (Hear.)

Mr. WORRELL proposed the re-election of the auditors. They were greatly indebted to the services of those gentlemen.

Mr. HICK seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. KELSEY returned thanks. Their endeavours had been to present accounts in figures that should be clear, intelligible, and true (hear, hear).

Mr. F. G. P. NEISON proposed a vote of thanks to the auditors. He was much pleased with their balance-sheet. Seldom had so complete a document been laid by a company before its shareholders. It shewed the precise condition of the company in various forms, so that no person could misunderstand it. (Hear.) The office of auditor will become more and more important every year, and it was well that they had commenced with so clear and perfect a mode of exhibiting the state of their affairs—it would be easily followed, and it would give great confidence to the public, and satisfaction to the shareholders. (Hear.) As to the progress of the Society, it must be most gratifying to them. He hoped that with the same energy, and the increased confidence that must flow from success, the revenue of the next year would be doubled, for although the rivalry of new offices was increasing, many assurance companies could not shew, at the end of ten or twelve years, the same amount of business as this one at the end of its second year. Success can only be secured now-a-days by making it known, and adopting every legitimate means of bringing its uses and advantages before the public. Some of the features of this company were really novel, which could not be said of most of those put forward by other companies. He believed that, in fact, notwithstanding all the promises and puffings of young offices, not a single novelty had been introduced into assurance for the last century—all those boasted new plans being slight modifications of life assurance. Hence it was that none of them had been found to answer. But two, at least, of the plans of this Society were new and original—the Assurance of Property by assuring Leaseholds and Titles. As to the assurance of titles, some had objected that there were no data—but there were no data as to fire assurance, and yet it was profitably conducted. But in the form of title assurance adopted by this Society the risk was little or nothing, for they only insured titles that were good to hold, although not marketable. (Hear, hear.) That the novel features of this Society should be slow in becoming understood would surprise no person acquainted with the history of life assurance. Nearly a century elapsed after its introduction before it came to be much adopted—indeed it is only within twenty-five years that the public has fully recognised its utility and importance. Hence the directors of this company should look after the Life Assurance and Guarantee of Fidelity—branches which are understood, and leave the others to time and experience to shew their value and their usefulness, and counting them only as additions to their two great branches of Life Assurance and Guarantee,—placing their main reliance on these latter. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. BROCKMAN seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. KELSEY, in returning thanks, said that the more or less of difficulty that auditors had in the discharge of their duties depended upon the diligence and skill of the officers of the Society, and especially of the secretary. Having experienced the value of Mr. Wm. Neison, having investigated all his work and witnessed his industry and ability, he felt that the Society could not too highly appreciate the services of such an officer, whose capacities were equal to his zeal. He was sure that they would unanimously join in a vote of thanks to him.

Mr. H. PAULL seconded the motion. As a director he also could bear his testimony to the value of Mr. Neison to the Society. He had almost daily opportunities of observing him, for there were few days on which he did not come to the office to see how the business was progressing, and he had always found their actuary busily engaged in their work, always ready to give information, always seeking how he might best advance the interests of the Society. His knowledge of the science of assurance was greater than that possessed by most secretaries, and he was always willing to impart it to others. And not only did he labour for them by day, but his time there being much occupied by persons calling, he laboured far into the night in the actual business of the office. (Hear. hear.)

Mr. W. NEISON (actuary and secretary), returned thanks. Although he had been brought up in the school of assurance, this was the first office with which he had been connected in a post of prominence, and he hoped they should long continue the connection. His best exertions would be devoted to the interests of the Society, and he had so little objection to labour that the more proposals they could send him the better he should be pleased, and he should consider them his best reward. (Hear.)

Mr. BROCKMAN proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Colley, the solicitor to the Society, who had been of great service to them by his diligence and attention, and he was bound to say that on all occasions when the regular legal charges bore heavily upon the Society, or upon any person transacting business with it, Mr. Colley had shewn the utmost readiness to make any abatement on those charges that the circumstances of the case seemed to call for. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. DOVE seconded the motion.

Mr. COLLEY, in returning thanks, said, that he had steadily endeavoured to promote the interest of the Society, and he should continue to do so, and to accommodate himself to any arrangements that would further its progress and promote its business.

Mr. ST. PATRICK proposed a vote of thanks to the medical officer, which was seconded by Mr. KELSEY, and carried.

Mr. PAULL said that Mr. Macann was absent in Ireland, where he had been purchasing some property under the Incumbered Estates Act, or he would have been present to return thanks in person.

Mr. KELSEY proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman for his conduct in the chair. He had given them a lucid statement of the principles of assurance, and of the uses of the various plans of the office, which he hoped the shareholders would take care to repeat to their friends. Their Chairman had more than a common interest in the Society—for he was its parent (hear, hear), and he felt the interest of a parent in its prosperity. They were much indebted to him for his exertions.

Mr. CHANDLER seconded the motion. As a director he could testify to the diligent attendance of their chairman, who, when not called out of town by other duties, never failed to be in his place at the board. When they remembered what his avocations were, this zeal in their service would be appreciated. All the shareholders of the Society, of whose plan he was the inventor, and the success of which must be very gratifying to him, would, he was sure, heartily wish him success in the new enterprise in which he was now engaged, and would be pleased to welcome him there in another character. (Hear, hear.) He hoped their thanks would be given to him by acclamation.

Mr. COX returned thanks. As the parent of the Society he was proud of its prosperity, and as he had zealously wrought to promote it so far, so would his best services continue to be given to it—for it was a pet of his—he had for many years thought over the plans, and being confident that they were as practicable as they were undoubtedly useful, he took the first opportunity that circumstances permitted to him to put them into operation, and now that they had proved successful in practice, he was gratified to find that he had not erred in his anticipations. Should success attend him in the enterprise to which Mr. Chandler had alluded, it would not prevent him from continuing his exertions for the society, or taking his place among them. Whether in his public or in his private capacity, he should still seek to promote the prosperity that had made so excellent a beginning.

The meeting then separated.

UNITED LAW CLERKS' SOCIETY.—The twentieth anniversary of this institution was celebrated on Wednesday evening at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, under the presidency of Sir John Jervis, supported by Sir J. Patteson, Mr. Bramwell, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Wilcocke, and other members of the Bar; and was well attended by the Profession. The report, which was read by the secretary (Mr. Rogers), stated that in the past year twenty-one members had during illness received a sum of one guinea per week, involving an expenditure of 260*l.* and that of these cases three terminated fatally; that at the commencement of the year there were six members in the receipt of the superannuation allowance, varying from 26*l.* to 36*l.* 8*s.* two of whom had since died, while on their decease the family of each received 50*l.*; that during the year the number of deaths amongst the members had been seven, to whose widows and families 350*l.* had been paid; that the receipts of the year amounted to 2,209*l.* and the expenditure to 1,007*l*; and that the general fund had been increased to 4,640*l.* It was further stated that the members themselves had during the year contributed upwards of 1,200*l.* The relief afforded out of the casual fund amounted to 32*l.* and the balance in hand under that head was 93*l.* The chairman, in proposing "Prosperity to the Society," bore strong testimony to the honourable character of law clerks generally, and expressed his belief that, notwithstanding the temporary depression of the Profession in consequence of law reforms, they would maintain their past reputation. The toast was most enthusiastically received, and immediately after the donations were announced, which included twenty-five guineas from the chairman. The toast of "The Lord Chancellor and the other Patrons of the Society" was chiefly remarkable for the hearty reception given to Mr. Justice Patteson. The evening was altogether an extremely pleasant one.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

GRAY'S-INN, June 11.—The annual examination in law, instituted by this society, took place in the Hall, on Friday and Saturday, the 4th and 5th inst. and the following is the class list of the successful candidates for honours on that occasion, which was published this evening in the presence of Lord Justice Knight Bruce, the benchers and members of this society, and the members of the other Inns of Court:—

1. Mr. Boswell Hensman.
2. Mr. William Pearson.
3. { Mr. Alfred G. Henriques, / Mr. Francis Housman, } Æquales.
4. Mr. Theodore Ryland.
5. Mr. Hubert Lewis.

Mr. Hensman received from the lecturer, W. D. Lewis, esq. his prize, consisting of a complete set of the Reports of Vesey, jun. (20 vols.). After the announcement of the successful candidates, Mr. Lewis delivered his farewell address, whereupon the treasurer, on behalf of the bench and society, expressed their perfect satisfaction at the efficient manner in which he had discharged the arduous duties of his office, and the great success that had attended his exertions.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JUNE 26, 1852.

TO READERS.

A pressure of reports and other matter of immediate moment, compels us to defer several leading articles and some correspondence that were in type.

The series of articles explanatory of the new Procedure Acts will be commenced as soon as the Acts are issued by the Queen's printers.

The Law Times' editions of the New Laws of the Session are all in progress.

Mr. Foote's Highways Acts is now ready.

Mr. Allnutt's edition of The New Law of Wills Act will be ready on Monday.

Mr. Cox and Mr. Lloyd's edition of the County Courts Amendment Act will be ready by Saturday next, if the Bill should receive the royal assent on Monday. A complete Digest of all the County Courts cases decided since the publication of the last (4th) edition of their Law and Practice of the County Courts, will be added to this edition of the new statute, so that it will form a complete and useful appendix to that volume,—with the remaining copies of which it will be bound up, without any increase of the price.

THE COUNTY COURTS AMENDMENT ACT.

So long as this measure was in suspense we refrained from any show of exultation, fearing, should it become known to the public that the interests of the Lawyers were largely involved in its provisions, that the newspapers, which omit no occasion to abuse and injure the Lawyers, would have raised the cry of opposition, and procured the defeat of that which would have been falsely assumed to be injurious to the public, because it was beneficial to the Profession.

But now that the provision to which we allude has become law, we may heartily congratulate our readers on the great advantage they have secured.

We refer, of course, to the clause in the new County Courts Amendment Act, which directs the Judges to frame a Table of Fees to be taken in the County Courts.

The practical effect of this provision is to repeal the absurd, unjust, and insulting restriction of the fee for professional services to a few shillings, without any reference to the amount of labour and skill required for the preparation and conduct of the case, and to substitute formal charges for the business done, regulated in amount by a Table of Fees to be constructed by the Judges, and to be taxable by the Court and payable by the losing party, precisely as it is in the Superior Courts.

The vast advantage of this to the Profession is sufficiently obvious. It will make the practice of the County Courts more profitable than that of the Superior Courts, for even if the items of the fees allowed be somewhat less, the larger amount of business transacted there, and the non-participation of agents in those fees, will produce an immense accession of income to the practitioners.

Nor will it be less beneficial to the public. Hitherto, in consequence of the costs recoverable in the County Courts being limited to the fixed fee for conducting the case in Court, the costs of preparing the case for trial—all those, in fact, which were incurred out of Court—fell, not upon the losing party, but upon the innocent plaintiff or defendant, as the case might be. Thus were the County Courts rendered far more costly to the suitors who were compelled to resort to them, than were the Superior Courts.

It would be difficult to calculate the sum of the benefit thus secured to the Profession in the provinces. It will make the County Courts their most profitable resort, for now they will obtain therein a fair remuneration for their skill and toil.

Very gratifying has been to us the success we have thus achieved. It is a boon to the Lawyers for which we had long striven. It is now nearly four years since we first suggested its propriety and advocated its adoption. But it was of small service to prove its justice upon paper; a personal effort was necessary to secure the object. Accordingly, we personally suggested it in the proper quarter. The suggestion was approved, and we framed a clause to effect the desired objects. That clause was inserted in the Bill of last year; it was accepted unanimously by the House of Lords, but by some secret agency it was expunged in the Commons. We were resolved, however, not to be daunted by defeat and delay. When the Bill was again in preparation, we took some pains to procure the reinsertion of the clause. This time it found a better fate. In the Lords, it was supported by Lord Lyndhurst in an energetic speech, in which he instanced, by proofs, the practical injustice to plaintiffs of the law that restricted the fee to a few shillings, without reference to the amount of work required. The clause was again sent down to the Commons. Fearing that the same fate might attend it there, from the same secret but influential foe, whose identity we suspected though we could not prove it, we took some pains to find protectors who should watch it in its progress through the Committee, and prevent its destruction this second time, at least without a debate and a division. But the enemy was conscious that he was watched, or he deemèd opposition hopeless; he did not appear, the clause passed through the Commons sub silentio, and is now the law.

The history of this provision, so small in appearance, so great in its practical results and real importance, proves how easily the interests of the Profession might be protected and advanced by watching with that purpose the details of Law Bills in their progress through Parliament. If the efforts of an individual out of Parliament could effect thus much for the good of the Profession, what might not be done by all the Lawyers in Parliament, if they would look a little more after the welfare of their Profession, advancing its just claims, and warding off unjust attacks upon it?

THE PROFESSION IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

The Advocates' Clause, as it is termed in the County Courts Amendment Act, repeals the provision of the original County Courts Act, which gave to Counsel a right to appear only when instructed by an Attorney, and merely provides that "a Barrister retained by or on behalf of the party, on either side," may "appear instead of the party to address the Court, without any right of exclusive or preaudience."

There can be no question that the original enactment was an improper one, for that which is merely a matter of professional etiquette ought not to have been converted into a law; it was almost an insult to the Bar, and how such a provision was permitted to creep into the Act, and why both Houses of Parliament passed it without an objection, is now inexplicable.

But although the enactment was so objectionable in itself, there were equal objections to its repeal. Formally to rescind it was to give the appearance of sanction by the Legislature to a repeal of the rule of etiquette within the Profession itself, a course which has been and is unfortunately advocated by a considerable section of the junior Bar. It was, therefore, that we read with much pleasure the remarks with which the LORD CHANCELLOR and Lord CAMPBELL accompanied their assent to the repealing clause, and which will be found among the Parliamentary intelligence in another column. These two heads of the Profession, whose experience, as well as their position, entitles their opinions to the greatest weight, agreed in protesting against any inference being drawn, from the repeal of the restriction in law, that they therefore approved of its being repealed in fact; and they expressed a most earnest desire that the same rules as hitherto should continue to regulate the relationship of the two branches of the Profession, and that neither in the County Courts nor elsewhere would the Bar take briefs without the intervention of an Attorney.

In this we must express our most cordial concurrence. We are convinced that immense mischiefs would arise to the Profession if the Barrister were to receive his instructions directly from the client. The inevitable result, in no long time, would be to convert the Barrister into an Attorney. If instructed by the client, he must take those instructions in writing, and receive the evidence from the party and his witnesses, and make notes of it, and, in short, perform all the functions of an Attorney. This would lead in its turn to further invasions of the province of the latter, until the distinction of duties will be so imperceptible, that even the scrupulous will find it difficult to know where to stop. Scattered about as are the County Courts over the whole face of the land, the Bar would be distributed in small groups, where the curb of professional feeling will be scarcely felt, with the temptations of rivalry and perhaps more urgent needs. It is certain that, after a time, a low class of Barristers will grow up in such localities, who will use illegitimate means to obtain business, just as now is seen in some of the less reputable courts in the metropolis, and the result will be the degradation of the whole Bar as a class.

The more we reflect upon these consequences of any invasion by the Bar of the province of the Attorney, of any opening being given in the County Courts to the abolition of the reasonable regulation which now forbids a Barrister to accept a brief without the intervention of an Attorney, save in very rare and exceptional cases, the more earnestly do we express our hope and confidence that the repeal of the restrictive clause in the County Courts Act will not be construed by any portion of the junior Bar into an assent or approval by the Legislature of the change of practice which many of them so much desire, but which, if they succeed in introducing, they will certainly regret, when it will be too late to undo the mischief they have done.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE COUNTY COURT PRACTICE.

MONDAY, June 21.—Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition from 130 members of the Inner Bar, to whose high position his lordship bore testimony, in favour of the clause introduced into the County Courts Further Extension Bill, to enable barristers to practise in those courts without the intervention of an attorney. The noble lord read a letter from a gentleman who had signed the petition, but requested the withdrawal of his name, as "he could not allow it to remain without incurring almost certain ruin. He was aware that there was a combination of all classes of attorneys to exclude those who signed the petition from practice, but he was not so fully prepared for the personal threats since held out of the withdrawal of support by those who were principally his clients."—Lord CAMPBELL expressed his opinion that the alteration would be attended with the most mischievous results, and that a large number of the County Court Judges were convinced the worst consequences would follow the admission of barristers to practise without the intervention of attorneys.—Lord BROUGHAM complained that his noble and learned friend had entered on the merits of the case before the amendment in the Bill came to be considered, and stated that he had the authority of Lord Denman to say that that noble lord concurred in thinking the alteration desirable.—Lord LYNDHURST said he should reserve his observations until the amendment came to be read from the woolsack.

COUNTY COURTS EXTENSION BILL.

Lord BROUGHAM moved the consideration of the Commons' amendment to this Bill. The most important of these amendments the noble lord stated consisted in the introduction of provisions increasing the salaries of the judges of the County Courts to a minimum of 1,200*l.* per annum, and restraining the judge from practising either as counsel, barrister, special pleader, conveyancer, attorney, or proctor. With the principle of these amendments he fully concurred, but thought that some words should be introduced which would have the effect of postponing the operation of the Bill for a short time, in order to enable those of the judges who had professional business on hand to complete it. A period of six months from the passing of the Act would, he thought, amply suffice for this purpose. There was also an amendment of considerable importance, the effect of which was to place the County Courts upon a totally different footing from any other courts in the country, with respect to barristers and advocates receiving their instructions direct from their clients. The rule of the Profession was against a barrister going into court as an advocate uninstructed by an attorney or solicitor. The rule, however, was not without an exception, and admitted of a barrister seeing a client at chambers, and consulting with him upon any private or delicate matters. The heads of the Profession, however, discountenanced barristers receiving instructions, except through the intervention of an attorney or solicitor. It rested entirely on usage and professional etiquette, and there was no provision of common or statute law against the practice of receiving instructions directly from the client. He thought that it would have been better if the County Courts had been left as other Courts, subject to usage and professional etiquette. He thought it disrespectful to the professional body to interfere by any statutory regulations in the conduct of their professional duties. He was fully prepared to admit that there were cases where it would be necessary for a barrister in self-defence to break through the ordinary rule, and instanced the case of a barrister who, in consequence of some remarks which he had made in the House of Commons, had given umbrage to a numerous body of solicitors. These gentlemen, feeling themselves aggrieved, had issued circulars to the general body of solicitors, inviting them to shew their sense of the conduct of the barrister in question in whatever way they might have it in their power to do so. This meant of course that they should withdraw their briefs from that counsel upon the circuit to which he belonged. self-defence, Mr. So-and-So, finding that there was nothing but the etiquette and usage of the Profession to forbid it, at once gave notice that he would open his doors to clients, and see them without the interposition of attorneys. Numerous other barristers concurred with him in the propriety of his conduct, pledged themselves to stand by him, and, if need were, to join him in that course. The consequence was that there was at once an end of the combination. He knew that it was now said by some attorneys and solicitors that it was as much as a barrister's profession was worth to cross the threshold of the County Court, and that if he did so, they, the attorneys, would not give him any briefs in any other court. The consequence, however, of any attempt to carry out this threat would be, that the attorney conducting the case for his client would be beaten by the superior skill and address of the barrister, and there would, consequently, soon be an end of the threat. The amendment in the Bill had received the assent of the law officers of the present and late Government in the House of Commons; and although he was certainly anxious to have seen the County Courts placed in this respect upon the same footing as other courts, still he did not wish to run any danger of losing the Bill by proposing any alterations which would be likely to interfere with an amendment upon which the House of Commons evidently set great store.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that while he admitted that the importance of this Bill could not be overrated, he could not but regret that the House of Commons had sought by statutable regulations to interfere with the professional etiquette and usage of the Bar. Members of the Bar were amenable to the statutes of their own society, and the very air which they breathed, the society with which they associated, ensured their obedience to their rules. He should much rather have seen the practice of the County Courts, as in all others, left to the high and honourable feelings of the members of the Profession, rather than have been dealt with by the Legislature. If he were asked, however, to be a party to the repeal of any portion of an Act such as that which they were now discussing, he confessed he should feel considerable difficulty in giving his assent to such a course. The provision in the Bill having received the assent of the law officers of the Crown and of the House of Commons, he felt unwilling to join in any course which might appear to be in opposition to the opinion thus clearly expressed of that branch of the Legislature. At the same time, if he found that the consequences of the alteration of the law would be to bring the Bar into disrepute by the conduct of any of its members, he should be as ready as any member of the Profession to strike at such conduct, and to restore the Bar to the high position which it had previously held in the public estimation. He should like to see each party occupying its proper position—he would not allow attorneys to enact the part of barristers, nor the barrister to degrade himself—he did not use the term in the slightest degree offensively—to the position of an attorney. With these observations he would give his assent to the amendment.—Lord LYNDHURST said the ground on which he would support the amendment was, that it would go to defeat that combination by attorneys against barristers in the County Courts, and put barristers in those courts in the same position in which they were in the Superior Courts.—Lord CAMPBELL said, after what he had heard in the course of the discussion, he would withdraw his opposition to the amendment.—Lord CRANWORTH said he would adopt the same course. The Commons' amendments, as further amended, were then agreed to.

SUITORS IN CHANCERY RELIEF BILL.

THURSDAY, June 24.—The House went into committee on this Bill.—Lord LYNDHURST proposed the restoration of a clause which had been struck out of the Bill in the Commons, with the view of providing due compensation to certain clerks and other officers in the offices attached to the Court of Chancery.—The Earl of DERBY and the LORD CHANCELLOR objected to the introduction of the amendment.—The proviso was negatived, and the Bill passed through committee.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.—It appears from a parliamentary document, that in the last fifty years 14,924 Acts of Parliament passed. In the present session that number will be comparatively small—under 100 public Acts.

WRITS OF HABEAS CORPUS.—The House of Lords has ordered a return, which has just been printed, on the application of Lord Campbell, shewing the number of writs of habeas corpus issued by Mr. Cobbett out of the Court of Chancery since the establishment of the Record and Writ Clerks' Office, on the 28th October, 1842, to the 28th May last inclusive. The number was "thirty-two," of which the usual fee was paid on ten, and for twenty-two no fee was paid, or which were issued by the said William Cobbett as suing or depending in formâ pauperis.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

IN Padwick v. Knight, 19 Law T. Rep. 206, it was held that there cannot exist, by custom, a right to take soil from the close of another, for the purpose of repairing highways; but MARTIN, B. said, "I am not so clear but there might be a prescription in the inhabitants of a parish to take soil from the close of another for the repair of roads repairable by them."

The extent to which a corporation can contract without seal has been much contested. In Clark v. The Guardians of the Cuckfield Union, 19 Law T. Rep. 207, an action is brought against the guardians of a union for certain waterclosets supplied to the workhouse upon the order of the guardians. There was no contract under seal; but it was nevertheless held to be good, for the general rule, that a corporation aggregate can only contract by deed under seal, yet that "whenever the purposes for which a corporation was created render it necessary that works should be done or goods supplied to carry such purposes into effect, as in the case of the guardians of a poor-law union, and orders are given at a Board regularly constituted, and having general authority to make contracts for work or goods necessary for the purposes for which the corporation was created, and the work is done or goods supplied and accepted by the corporation, and the whole consideration for payment executed,—the corporation cannot keep the goods or the benefit, and refuse to pay, on the ground that though the members of the corporation who ordered the goods or work were competent to make a contract and bind the rest, the formality of a deed or of affixing the seal is wanting, and therefore no action lies, as we are not competent to make a parol contract, and therefore avail ourselves of our own disability. I come to this conclusion, though not without much doubt, from the authorities being in some respects contradictory."

By a statute of this session, 15 Vict. c. 5, p. 92, proprietors of newspapers are to be exempted from the provision of the Municipal Corporations Act, which makes contractors with the corporation ineligible to offices in it, so far, at least, as regards contracts or orders for advertisements; and it stays proceedings in all actions for penalties which are now pending, for the violation of this law, on payment of costs out of pocket.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

Summary

A CASE reported from the Rolls Court involves the important question of membership of an established company. In Shortridge v. Bosanquet, 19 Law T. Rep. 196, the deed provided that a shareholder, on obtaining the consent of the board, there being a quorum, might transfer his shares in the manner there directed; that a certificate specifying the shares should be given by the board, and a receipt of the holder for the same, and then the transferee should be entitled to have his name entered on the register; that after such entry the former owner should cease to be a shareholder and be discharged from the covenants, &c. of the deed; that every entry, &c. in the same register should, as between the company and the last holder, be conclusive and binding on him; that the register should be conclusive evidence of his being a shareholder, and that the register should be open to the inspection of no one without permission of the board. A. applied to have a transfer, took the necessary steps, the purchaser's name was entered in the register, and the usual return was made to the Stamp Office, in which A. was stated to have ceased to be a shareholder. Subsequently the bank suspended payment, and, for the purpose of making A. responsible, the company made an entry in the register to the effect that the transfer was invalid, because not made with the consent of a board duly constituted, but only by three directors individually, and so it was returned to the Stamp Office. It appeared, however, that it was the practice to admit transfers without such formal consent. A creditor bought a sci. fa. against A. and at law he was held to be liable, because his name appearing on the register was conclusive against him. He now filed his bill for relief in equity, and it was held that he was entitled to it, for in equity he must be deemed to have ceased to be a shareholder; that the shareholder was under no obligation to see that the transfer was sanctioned by the board in the formal manner required by the deed; that the clause giving the directors power to make entries, erasures, &c. did not justify them in putting on the list a name that had been taken off in the ordinary way; and a perpetual injunction was granted to restrain that and every action against A. the bank to be compelled to remove the entry of his name from the register, and A. to have all his costs.

It was held in Lowe v. The London and North Western Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 200, that assumpsit for use and occupation may be maintained against a railway company who has recently occupied the plaintiff's land with his permission; for the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act having given directors power by parol to enter into such a contract for the occupation of land, the Court will presume that there was such a contract unless the contrary is proved.

The Court refused an interpleader where a company having registered what was alleged to be a forged transfer of shares, an action was brought against it by the original shareholder for dividends, and another was threatened by the alleged transferee. "If the transfer is not forged," said MAULE, J. "the company has a defence to this action; if it is, it has been negligently registered, and the company is answerable." (Dalton v. The Midland Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 204.)

A question of equal importance to guarantee societies and the parties guaranteed, was decided in Benham v. The United Guarantee and Life Assurance Society, 19 Law T. Rep. 206. One of the questions put to the employer was as to the period at which the accounts of the servant were examined, and what was his salary. The answer was, that "the accounts would be examined every fortnight." The policy recited that those questions had been answered, and the answers being believed to be true, formed the basis of the contract. In an action on the policy for the amount guaranteed, it was proved that the accounts of the servant were not examined fortnightly, as stated in the answer to the question. But the Court held that, although the question and answers were in terms made the basis of the contract, they did not amount to a warranty. "They only indicate," said POLLOCK, C.B. "the probable course to be adopted by the employers of the party whose honesty was the subject of assurance, and if they were meant to be treated as a direct warranty, the observance of which was to be a condition of the validity of the policy, the company could very easily so state it in the policy." In self-protection it will, therefore, be necessary for guarantee companies to provide in their policies, that it is the express condition of the policy that the statements contained in the answers to the questions are true, and that if they, or any of them, should not be true, or any of the facts there stated should cease to exist, then the policy to be void. It is manifest that, without such a provision, there would be no security against negligence by employers, who, in reliance upon the guarantee of the company, would cease to trouble themselves to keep close accounts with their servants.

WINDING UP.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR has decided another question on the liability of provisional committees. A. was member both of the provisional and of the managing committee. By a resolution, 250 shares were offered to each member of the provisional committee, who was requested to state by a given day, if he would take "that or any less number," and a further 250 shares were offered to the members of the managing committee. By another resolution, letters of allotment were to be sent out for 100 shares only, with an intimation that it was only part of the 250 offered to the managing committee, and that the committee intended to adhere to their original resolution to apportion 250 shares to each member of the provisional committee, if they should be enabled to do so. By another resolution the committee of allotment were to make an allotment according to a scheme by which A. and B. would have 500 shares each. A minute signed by the chairman, but not entered, reported that they had completed the allotment according to the scheme. The names of A. and B. appeared as allottees for 100 shares each. The company requested that the directors should execute the deed in respect of the 100 shares allotted to them, and A. and B. did so. They were now held to be contributories in respect only of the 100 shares. The judgment of the LORD CHANCELLOR is remarkable for taking a different view of Upfill's case from any reading of it that we have seen. Contrary to the general understanding of its purport, Lord ST. LEONARD'S affirms "that case does not establish the fact, that because a man agrees to be a provisional committee-man, and has accepted shares, without any other act done, or liability incurred (except those two circumstances), he is to be a contributory." So it is then to be understood that there must be something more—some other Acts constituting liability? And, if so, what? This seems to throw open again the whole question. (Ex parte Sharp v. James, 19 Law T. Rep. 193.)

In Stock's case, 19 Law T. Rep. 199, where a person had applied for shares, signed a written warrant to act as provisional committee-man, paid a deposit and a sum of money by way of contribution towards the expenses, but had taken no shares, he was held not to be a contributory.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

AN interesting case in the Law of Mortgage is Elry v. Norwood, 19 Law T. Rep. 198. In 1830, A. mortgaged land in fee, and covenanted for payment of principal and interest. He died intestate, and his heir filed a bill to redeem. It was held that although the land was chargeable only with six years' arrears of interest, the heir was liable, under the covenant, to twenty years' arrears, and that, as against the heir, the mortgagee might tack the liability to the covenant. This should be noted in Hughes's Practice of Mortgages.

A decree that A. was entitled to an annuity, to be charged on and issuing out of real estate to the amount of the land-tax redeemed thereon, and that B. should execute proper deeds for securing same, was held to be a legal charge upon the estate. (Ware v. Polhill, 19 Law T. Rep. 198.)

In Re Horner's Estate, 19 Law T. Rep. 199, stock in which the purchase-money for land was invested under 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 69 (relating to the purchase of lands by Poor-law Guardians), was held to be real and not personal estate.

In the practice under the Fines and Recoveries Act, that Court has determined not now to direct the officer to complete the fine unless the state of the property and the consent of the parties be clearly shewn. "There may have been dealings since, and as the fine would operate from the date of it," a clear case should be made out. (Re Scales, 19 Law T. Rep. 203.)

Where the committee of a lunatic let a house to a person who had just before been made bankrupt, but had obtained his certificate, and who, both before and after the bankruptcy, acted as solicitor to the committee, both in the lunacy and in his own private affairs, and being suffered to remain some years in the house before he took any steps to obtain payment of rent, or to eject the tenant, it was held, that there had been wilful neglect on the part of the committee, and that his administrator was bound to make good the loss thereby occasioned. (Re Swindell, 19 Law T. Rep. 195.)

INCUMBERED ESTATES IN IRELAND.—A further return respecting the Incumbered Estates Court has been issued. On the 12th inst. the number of petitions in which absolute orders for sale had been made, any portion of the lands included in which remained unsold, was 931. The total estimated rental of such lands so remaining unsold is stated at 600,000l.

COUNTY COURTS.

LATE CASES ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF THE COUNTY COURTS.(a)

III. CASES RESPECTING THE RECOVERY OF TENEMENTS.

IN our last article on the subject of the recent cases relating to the Law and Practice of the County Courts, we reviewed those respecting questions of title. We now proceed to examine those which have been decided in questions relating to the recovery of tenements.

By sec. 122 of the County Courts Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, it is enacted, "That when and so soon as the term and interest of the tenant of any house, land, or other corporeal hereditament, where the value of the premises, or the rent payable in respect of such tenancy did not exceed the sum of 50l. by the year, and upon which no fine shall have been paid, shall have ended, or shall have been duly determined by a legal notice to quit, and such tenant, or, if such tenant do not actually occupy the premises, or occupy only a part thereof, any person by whom the same or any part thereof shall be then actually occupied, shall neglect or refuse to quit and deliver up possession of the premises, or of such part thereof respectively, it shall be lawful for the landlord or his agent to enter a plaint in the County Court, and thereupon a summons shall issue to the person so neglecting or refusing; and if the tenant or occupier shall not thereupon appear at the time and place appointed, and shew cause to the contrary, and shall still neglect or refuse to deliver up possession of the premises, or of such part thereof of which he is then in possession to the said landlord or his agent, it shall be lawful for such landlord or agent to give to the Court proof of the holding, and of the end or other determination of the tenancy, with the time or manner thereof, and where the title of the landlord has accrued since the letting of the premises, the right by which he claims the possession; and upon proof of service of the summons, and of the neglect or refusal of the tenant or occupier, as the case may be, it shall be lawful for the judge to issue a warrant, under the seal of the Court, to any bailiff of the Court, requiring and authorising him, within a period to be therein named, not less than seven or more than ten clear days from the date of such warrant, to give possession of the premises to such landlord or agent; and such warrant shall be a sufficient warrant to the said bailiff to enter upon the premises, with such assistants as he shall deem necessary, and to give possession accordingly. Provided always, that entry upon any such warrant shall not be made upon a Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas-day, or at any time except between the hours of nine in the morning and four in the afternoon. Provided also, that nothing in that Act contained shall be deemed to protect any person by whom any such warrant shall be sued out of the County Court from any action which may be brought against him by any such tenant or occupier for or in respect of such entry and taking possession, where such person had not, at the time of suing out the same as aforesaid, lawful right to the possession of the same premises. Sec. 123 points out the manner which the summons shall be served; and sec. 124 provides that judges, clerks, bailiffs, or other officers of the Court, shall not be liable to action on account of the proceedings taken. Sec. 125 provides, that where the landlord has a lawful title, he shall not be deemed a trespasser by reason of irregularity.

Section 126 enacts that in every case in which the person by whom any such warrant shall be sued out of the County Court had not at the time of suing out the same the lawful right to the possession of the premises, the suing out of any such warrant as last aforesaid shall be deemed a trespass by him against the tenant or occupier of the premises, although no entry shall be made by virtue of the warrant; and in case any such tenant or occupier will become bound, with two sufficient sureties to be approved by the clerk of the Court, in such sum as to the judge shall seem reasonable, regard being had to the value of the premises and to the probable cost of such action, to sue the persons by whom such warrant was sued out, with effect and without delay, and to pay all the cost of proceeding in such action in case a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall discontinue or not prosecute his action, or become nonsuited therein, execution upon the warrant shall be stayed until judgment shall have been given in such action of trespass; and if upon the trial of such action of trespass a verdict shall pass for the plaintiff, such verdict and judgment thereupon shall supersede the said warrant. Section 127 provides for the proceedings on the bond for staying the execution of such warrant of possession.

Where a tenant appeared to a summons under the 122nd section of the County Courts Act, and stated some "cause to the contrary," which the judge considered to be insufficient; it was held that the term "shew cause," was such cause as, in the opinion of the judge, constitutes a defence, and that is a question within his jurisdiction. A good notice to quit being necessary to determine the tenancy, and it being contended that this was necessary to give jurisdiction, and that, in the present case, the notice was bad; it was held that the sufficiency of the notice to quit, and the consequent determination of the tenancy or otherwise, was a question wholly for the consideration of the judge, and within his jurisdiction. (Fearon v. Norval, 1 Cox & Mac. 127.)

If the rent of premises do not exceed 50l. per annum, the County Court has jurisdiction under sec. 122 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, though the annual value is greater than that amount. Upon the hearing of a plaint under the foregoing section, the County Court pronounced judgment in favour of the landlord, directing possession of the premises to be given up at a certain day several months after. The landlord treating this judgment as a nullity, for its not being conformable to the Act, and the rules made under it, declined to act upon it, but commenced another action, and again recovered judgment. Upon a motion for a prohibition, moved upon the ground that a prior judgment, unreserved, was pending; it was held that, as the first judgment was a nullity, the landlord was justified in treating it as such, and in commencing a fresh action. (Fearon v. Norvall, 1 Cox & Mac. 174.) PATTESON, J. in delivering the judgment of the Court in this, observed that he was clearly of opinion, that if the rent did not exceed 50l. it was immaterial how great might be the value of the premises.

In Jones v. Owen, 1 Cox & Mac. 176; 18 L. J. 8, Q. B. it was held, that the 122nd section of the County Courts Act, contemplates the ordinary relationship of landlord and tenant, and not that of mortgagor and mortgagee; and that therefore a mortgagor cannot recover possession under that section from a person who has entered into the occupation subsequently to the mortgage, and has not become tenant to the mortgagee.

Where the property itself is situate out of the jurisdiction of the County Court, proceedings cannot be taken there for the recovery of possession under sec. 122 of the County Courts Act, although both plaintiff and defendant are residing within the jurisdiction. (Ellis v. Peachey, 1 Cox & Mac. 241.) In this case, upon motion of a prohibition, it appeared that the defendant resided within the jurisdiction of the Hertford County Court, but that the tenement of which possession was sought was situate out of the jurisdiction, and that a judgment had been given for a warrant to the bailiff of the court to recover possession. WIGHTMAN, J. in delivering judgment, expressed it to be his opinion that as the bailiff had no power to execute the warrant out of his own district, the rule for a prohibition must be made absolute. The 122nd section authorises the judge to issue a warrant to any bailiff of the court to give possession. A warrant under this section would have no force beyond the district of the court. With respect to warrants against the goods of a person, there is a power by sec. 104 to transmit them to the high bailiff of other courts; but no such power is given with respect to warrants for possession of tenement. It is not necessary to decide that the issue of a summons ought to be prohibited; but it is clear that it is almost useless to proceed to judgment in a district where effective execution of such judgment cannot be had.

A certiorari does not lie to remove a plaint entered under sec. 122 of the County Courts Act for the recovery of a tenement. A question of title is not necessarily involved in a plaint for the recovery of tenement. (Price v. Price, 1 Cox & Mac. 333.)

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

COMMON LAW.—In Howes v. Barber, 19 Law T. Rep. 201, where the plaintiff, a seafaring man, had been detained in England for the purpose of being examined as a witness on his own behalf, the Master was permitted to allow him subsistence-money as in the case of any other witness.

It was held in Reg. v. Scaife, 19 Law T. Rep. 201, that any Judge in chambers has jurisdiction to grant a writ of procedendo to send back an indictment removed by certiorari into the Q. B. from sessions.

In Doe dem. Howson v. Roe, 19 Law T. Rep. 202, the stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 67, s. 2, was held to be applicable to the writ of possession in ejectment as well as to the other writs of execution, and therefore that it may be made returnable immediately after its execution.

Where a Judge, by consent of Counsel, discharged a jury, unable to agree, earlier than he would without such consent, the party succeeding on the second trial was held not on that account to be entitled to the costs of the first. (Bostock v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 202.)

It seems that the privilege of arrest, eundo et redeundo, enjoyed by an attorney, does not extend to his clerk. In Phillips v. Pound, 19 Law T. Rep. 205, where a clerk was arrested on a ca. sa. whilst going from the Master's office to a Judge's chambers, for the purpose of making an application relative to a pending suit, he was held to have been properly arrested.

Our readers will note the following decision as to affidavits. In Ex parte Cullemore, 19 Law T. Rep. 207, an affidavit sworn before the attorney, who was at the time retained to obtain a rule founded on that affidavit, was held to be void.

The right to begin is with the party on whom is the affirmative of the issue. But it is often difficult to determine where the affirmative lies. Thus, in Edge v. Hillary, 19 Law T. Rep. 208, which was assumpsit for goods sold and on an account stated. Pleas, except as to 171*l.* non-assumpsit; as to that sum, acceptance of a bill then remaining due. The particulars claimed only 171*l.* The right to begin was held by Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. to be with the defendant. "The plaintiff claims only 171*l.* by his particulars of demand, and, therefore, the second plea of the defendant would, if proved, be substantially an answer to the whole action. The burden of the proof of that plea being with the defendant, he must begin."

In Cobbett v. Hudson, 19 Law T. Rep. 208, a plaintiff who conducted his own cause was not allowed to be a witness also.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

PRETENDED sales of goods for the purpose of evading the claims of creditors are so common in practice, that every case relating to them is of great interest to the profession. In Lott v. Booth, 19 Law T. Rep. 203, a young lady under age had furnished a house to keep a school. Owing for rent, she received an advance from a furniture-broker, to whom she executed an instrument purporting to be a sale of her furniture, and another memorandum purporting to be a hire from him of the furniture, and 3s. a week to be paid, not for the use of the furniture, but for interest of the money. She afterwards removed from the house, and the furniture was given to the broker to keep for her. He sold it, and she brought an action against him for the recovery, and the Court held "that the delivery of the goods to the defendant was not in pursuance of the sale, whether a good contract or not (which was not decided), but for another purpose, namely, that the plaintiff might afterwards get them back, and that, therefore, the property did not pass."

An extremely interesting bankruptcy case was Cannon v. The South-Eastern Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 204. Previous to his bankruptcy a party had deposited a quantity of timber on the wharf of the defendants, to be kept by them for him, and redelivered on payment of wharfages. On February 7, 1848, the fiat issued; on the 9th an official assignee was appointed; on the 13th the adjudication was published in the Gazette, on the 23rd the creditor's assignee was appointed. Between September, 1848, and January, 1849, defendants, at the request of the bankrupt, delivered the timber to a purchaser from the bankrupt, without notice of fiat, adjudication, or Act of Bankruptcy from the defendants. They were held to be protected against the claim of the assignees by the 81th sec. of 6 Geo. 4, 16, for that the issuing of a fiat in bankruptcy is not ipso facto notice to all the world of its issuing; "we ought to hold," said the Court, "notice of an act done to be knowledge of it brought home to the mind of the person to be affected by it."

THE ECCLESIASTICAL LAWYER.

IN Shepherd v. The Marquis of Londonderry, 19 Law T. Rep. 179, the Court of Q. B. decided that a suit between two rival claimants to the ownership of tithes, admitted to be payable to somebody, is not "a suit touching the right to any tithes," within the meaning of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, s. 45. Therefore, where the tithes of B. belonged to a lay impropriator, and on proceedings taken for commutation, it was objected by the owner of certain lands, which, under an Act of Parliament, had been allotted to him in respect of burgage tenements, of the tithe of which he was the owner, that a suit in equity was pending "touching the right to the tithes," and therefore that the jurisdiction of the Tithe Commissioners was taken away until the matters in difference were determined; but the suit being in fact between the lay rector who claimed the tithes of the allotment and the owner, who claimed the tithes as well as the land, the Court held that the 45th section above cited did not apply to this case, and that the Commissioners had jurisdiction to make the award.

Ex parte The Rev. T. Rose, 19 Law T. Rep. 183, was a case under the Church Discipline Act. Proceedings were instituted under sec. 3, and the Commissioners reported, under sec. 5, that there was a primâ facie ground for further proceedings, but the defendant consented to the Bishop pronouncing sentence without further proceedings, and the Bishop sentenced to deprivation for three years, with a condition that, at the end of that time, the party should produce to the Bishop a certificate (to be approved by him) from three clergymen, of his having conducted himself well during the suspension. At the end of the three years he produced such a certificate, but the Bishop declined to receive it, on the ground that one of the clergymen who signed it was incompetent to judge of the party's conduct during that time. On a prohibition, moved to restrain the Bishop from carrying out the sentence, the Q. B. held it to be a legal sentence, and that the Bishop had not exceeded his jurisdiction.

In Crane v. Rebello, 19 Law T. Rep. 192, for the reason there assigned, administration with the will annexed of an insolvent estate was refused to a creditor, and granted to the residuary legatee.

Where it appears to have been the practice for a long series of years for the vicars choral of a cathedral to be excluded, during the year of their probation, from a share of some of the emoluments of their office, and no document could be found shewing that any regulation had been made, a regulation will be presumed out of which the practice originated. (Shoulbridge v. Clark, 19 Law T. Rep. 203.)

THE ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS.—By an order of Council, dated Buckingham Palace, June 15th inst. her Majesty has been pleased to ratify the following schemes proposed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in pursuance of the powers granted to them by statute, viz.—A scheme for augmenting the income of the archdeaconry of Stow, in the diocese of Lincoln, by an annual payment of 170*l.* out of the common fund mentioned in the 3rd and 4th Vict.; a scheme for authorizing them (the said commissioners) to sell and convey certain lands, tenements, &c. belonging to the deanery of York; a scheme for causing a correct account to be delivered to them (the said commissioners) shewing the moneys due and payable to the dean and canons of the cathedral of Lichfield, in order that the surplus shall be paid to their (the commissioners') credit at the Bank of England; and if it should appear that the amount due and payable in the case of the dean of the said cathedral be less than 1,000*l.* or in the case of a canonry 500*l.* then in every case to be paid by them (the said commissioners) to the treasurer on account of such dean or canon, such sum of money as shall make up the deficiency.

QUESTIONS AT THE EXAMINATION.

Trinity Term, 1852.

I. PRELIMINARY.

1. Where, and with whom, did your serve your clerkship?

2. State the particular branch or branches of the law to which you have principally applied yourself during your clerkship.

3. Mention some of the principal law books which you have read and studied.

4. Have you attended any, and what, law lectures?

II. COMMON AND STATUTE LAW, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

5. State some of the principal forms of action at Common Law.

6. A father and his child, aged ten, receive injuries by a collision on a railway. State by whom an action must be brought for compensation for these injuries, and whether it must be by one or more actions.

7. A servant is driving a cart (for the master's benefit), and runs over and injures a man. Would the master be liable, and if so, what must be the form of action? If the master was himself present, and sanctioned the particular act which caused the injury, would that make any difference in the form of action?

8. A defendant keeps out of the way, and cannot be served with a writ of summons. Has the plaintiff any remedy by which he can proceed without effecting such service, and, if any, explain the same, and how it can be done?

9. A Judge gives a plaintiff leave to arrest his debtor, who is about to leave the country, upon mesne process. What steps must be taken, and upon what process is such arrest to be effected, and when the defendant is arrested has he any mode of getting out of custody if he intends to dispute the debt?

10. A defendant is served with a writ of summons, and the plaintiff proceeds no further. What steps must the defendant take, and when, to enable him to terminate such suit?

11. What is an action of ejectment? Is there any difference in commencing that and an action of trespass?

12. If an action of ejectment is brought against a tenant, can the landlord come in and defend his interest in the premises, and how?

13. In an action of ejectment, a defendant obtains a verdict. Is the plaintiff's claim to the premises sought to be recovered barred by such verdict?

14. A. has an action brought against him by B. a carpenter, for, say, 250*l.* A. considers the charges exorbitant, and proposes through his attorney to pay B. 170*l.* and his costs then incurred. B. declines it. This is at an early stage of the cause,—say after writ served, or after declaration, and before plea. Is there any mode by which A. can pay or offer to pay that amount to B. so as to prevent his being liable to further costs, provided B. does not succeed in recovering more than the 170*l.*?

15. A defendant demurs to part of a declaration, and pleads issuably to the remainder. What course must the plaintiff take, and how is the action to be continued?

16. Has any alteration been made lately by the Legislature with regard to evidence, and as to the competency of interested parties as witnesses.

17. A plaintiff is a foreigner residing out of the jurisdiction of the Court. Has the defendant any mode of preventing the loss of his costs, in case the plaintiff fails in his action?

18. In an action of trespass, defendant pleads the general issue, and a justification to the whole declaration. Verdict for the defendant on the justification, and for the plaintiff on the plea of general issue without damages. What party will be entitled to the costs?

19. State the result as to the costs in the following cases:—Where a juror is withdrawn on the trial of a cause. Where, in an action of libel, the plaintiff recovers only 5s.

III. CONVEYANCING.

20. In the case of a purchase of lands by B. the conveyance being made to A. and his heirs to the ordinary uses, to bar dower in favour of B. (the purchaser), with a power of appointment given to B. with which of them should the covenants for title, &c. be entered into? and why?

21. Against whom is a voluntary conveyance good, and under what circumstances does it cease to be a flaw in a title?

22. For what periods is accumulation of income allowed, and when are trusts for accumulation void in toto, and when only partially void?

23. How are estates tail in copyholds barred, distinguishing between the modes of barring legal and equitable estates tail?

24. In what cases is it now not necessary that the formalities required by the instrument creating a power should be observed, when the power is exercised, and what formalities must be substituted in such cases? Before the recent Wills Act was there any exception to the rule that required a strict adherence to the prescribed formalities?

25. When property is limited (not in contemplation of marriage) to the separate use of an unmarried woman, without power of anticipation, what are her rights in such property while she remains unmarried, and what are her rights and those of her husband in it if she subsequently marries without a settlement?

26. What is the difference between Common Law dower, and dower as regulated by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 105?

27. In what case will a devise or bequest of real or personal estate not lapse by reason of the death of the devisee or legatee in the lifetime of testator.

28. Define contingent remainders; how were they formerly capable of being destroyed, and what means were usually adopted to preserve them? Has there been any recent change in the law in these respects?

29. A married woman, by deed enrolled and acknowledged and executed by her and her husband, conveys and assigns her reversionary interest in real and personal estate to a purchaser for valuable consideration. What is the effect of this deed on the real, and what on the personal, estate?

30. What are emblements?

31. What change has recently been made in the law with respect to claims for emblements, where tenancies determine by the death of the landlord such landlord being tenant for life?

32. A. by his will, gives and bequeaths a legacy of 200*l.* to B. (a stranger), and directs his executors to pay it on B.'s attaining twenty-one. B. dies under twenty-one, after the death of A.—who is entitled to the legacy, and why?

33. In what court or courts should a will of personalty be proved, where testator leaves bona notabilia in different dioceses?

34. Is anything, beyond probate of the will, necessary, in order to perfect the title of a person to whom a leasehold estate (for years) has been given by will?

IV. EQUITY, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

35. If property be given to the separate use of a woman unmarried at the time of the gift, will the separate use be enforced on her subsequent marriage; and what will be the effect on her separate use of the death of her subsequent husband, and what the effect of it in case of her contracting a second marriage?

36. Explain the difference between legal and equitable assets, and the rule according to which they are respectively administered among creditors.

37. What is meant by the term "Tacking" as applied to mortgages? and can a second mortgagee prevent a first mortgagee from tacking, and how?

38. What is meant by "Equitable Waste?" Will a tenant for life without impeachment of waste be restrained from committing it?

39. A. and B. claim property which is in C.'s hands, but in which C. has no interest. How can C. protect himself? If C. had himself any interest in the property, would it make any difference in the nature of his proceedings?

40. What is an injunction? Mention the different kinds of injunctions.

41. How does the remedy afforded by Courts of Equity for breaches of contract differ from that afforded by Courts of Common Law in like cases?

42. Explain the method in which evidence is usually taken in Equity.

43. In what cases must a subpœna be served on the party? and in what cases will service on the solicitor of the party suffice?

44. If a defendant, being served with a subpœna to appear and answer, should not do so within the time allowed, what steps would you advise the plaintiff to take?

45. What is the effect of enrolling a decree, and are decrees generally enrolled?

46. If a solicitor be appointed a trustee or executor, is he entitled under any and what circumstances to make professional charges against his cestui que trust or testator's estate?

47. If a plaintiff neglect to prosecute his suit, state the proper course for the defendant to adopt.

48. When a person out of the jurisdiction of the Court sues in Chancery, will he be placed under any and what terms for the protection of the defendant?

49. What is the process for compelling a corporation to answer a bill in equity?

V. BANKRUPTCY, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

50. What are the requisites to support a petition by a creditor for an adjudication in bankruptcy, and to obtain adjudication thereon?

51. Has the trader any and what time to dispute the adjudication?

52. State the usual course and routine of proceedings at the several public meetings under an adjudication in bankruptcy.

53. What is the effect of the bankruptcy of one of several traders in partnership?

54. Describe the course of proceding against a trader debtor, by demand of debt and summons in bankruptcy.

55. What course is open to the trader debtor to take upon being so summoned, in order to avoid committing an act of bankruptcy?

56. How are corporate bodies or public companies to prove their debts in bankruptcy?

57. How, and by whom, are assignees chosen, and what jurisdiction has the Court of Bankruptcy over the choice of assignees?

58. Is any, and what priority allowed to any creditors?

59. What is the law with respect to property held by a bankrupt as trustee?

60. In what circumstances is a settlement made by a trader invalid?

61. When can goods sold to a trader be stopped in transitu? State instances.

62. What securities held by a creditor must he realise before he can prove his debt, and what securities may he retain, and yet prove?

63. How is he to proceed in order to realise such securities as he must realise, before he can prove?

64. What is the present law with respect to the bankrupt's certificate of conformity?

VI. CRIMINAL LAW, AND PROCEEDINGS BEFORE MAGISTRATES.

65. What is burglary, and within which of the twenty-four hours must it be committed in order to constitute the offence?

66. Can husband and wife be evidence for or against each other in criminal cases?

67. Is an attorney liable to serve as a juror on a coroner's inquest, or on the trial of a criminal matter?

68. By whom and in what manner is a person appointed a justice of the peace for a county; and is it necessary that he should possess any and what property qualification for the office?

69. Is a private as well as a public nuisance indictable?

70. If a person pick up a thing when he knows he can find the owner, and instead of returning it to the owner, converts it to his own use, would he be guilty of larceny or merely subject to a civil action?

71. Are persons stealing dogs, or in the possession of dogs knowing them to have been stolen, liable to any and what penalty or punishment?

72. Is the stealing or destroying title deeds a criminal offence, or only actionable "as savouring" (as Blackstone expresses it) "of the realty?"

73. Can a landlord in any and what case, and in any and what manner, recover the possession of premises which is withheld after the Term has ended or been determined by legal notice without bringing an action of ejectment?

74. Can the owner or occupier of land expel by force any person found trespassing upon it, or is the only remedy by action?

75. Is there any and what act for the apprehension of persons trespassing and doing damage, and can they be taken before a magistrate without a warrant?

76. Is it lawful to set a man-trap, spring-gun, or other engine which is calculated to destroy human life, or to inflict bodily harm, in any and what place or places, and during what time of the twenty-four hours?

77. Under what circumstances may persons playing on musical instruments in the public streets be required to desist? and if they refuse to do so, what is the mode of proceeding to compel them?

78. Have justices jurisdiction over apprentices, where no premium is paid, and within what amount where one is paid?

79. What are the different modes by which a parochial settlement can be gained? How and before whom is the disputed settlement of a pauper to be tried and decided, and if the appellant or respondent is dissatisfied with the decision, does appeal lie to any other, and what tribunal?

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

MR. WILLIAM COBBETT.—Three returns have just been printed by order of the House of Lords, in addition to the one already noticed, shewing the writs and applications for writs of habeas corpus and the number of actions brought by Mr. William Cobbett in the Common Law Courts. In the Crown side of the Court of Queen's Bench five writs of habeas corpus were issued, and out of the plea side nineteen. In formâ pauperis there were fourteen cases, and in person five, making the nineteen. In the same side were seven actions brought. In the Court of Common Pleas four writs of habeas corpus were issued, besides which ten applications for writs were made to the Court sitting in banco, all of which, with the exception of one, were refused. In the same Court two actions were brought, and no further steps taken. In the Court of Exchequer forty-two applications were made by Mr. Cobbett or on his behalf, out of which nineteen were refused. Mr. Cobbett brought seventeen actions in the Court of Exchequer. The return already noticed shewed that thirty-two writs of habeas corpus had been applied for out of the Court of Chancery by Mr. Cobbett.

PROCLAMATION OF OUTLAWRY.—At the Sheriffs' Court the following persons were called upon by Mr. Hemp, the bailiff, to surrender to the custody of the sheriff under penalty of outlawry:—Margaret Coleman, John D. Hinxman, George Chitty, Gilbert Ainslie Young, Augustus Nugent, the Rev. John Prendergast Walsh, Ernest Henry Lane (at two suits), Sir John Malcolm, bart. Algernon Massingberd (at three suits), William Thomas Thornton (at three suits), O. H. Sampayo (at two suits), Augustus Mayhew, William Wilson, the younger, William David Sheriff, William Frederick Smith (at two suits), William Burt, Sydney William Alston, Frederick John Manning (at two suits), John Armine Morris, esq. John Cruickshank, and Walter Lockhart Scott.

THE LATE SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH.—A meeting was held on Saturday last, at Lansdowne House, for the purpose of raising a fund in order to erect a monument to the late Right Hon. Sir James Mackintosh; and on the motion of the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, seconded by Viscount Mahon, it was resolved that immediate measures be taken with that view. On the motion of Mr. Henry Hallam, seconded by Lord Broughton, a committee was appointed to carry this intention into full effect, Lord Lansdowne consenting to act as chairman, and Sir R. H. Inglis as secretary. A list of subscriptions will be advertised shortly.—Globe.

FIRE INSURANCE.—Colonel Sibthorp has obtained his annual return respecting the sums paid into the Stamp-office on insurance from fire. The duty amounted last year to a very considerable sum. The largest sum in one quarter by one office (the Sun) was 44,381*l.* In England, farming stock, which is exempt from duty, was insured in the last quarter of 1851 to 54,935,053*l.*

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

Public Sales.

By Messrs CHINNOCK and GALSWORTHY, on Thursday, at the Mart.—Eighty lots of freehold building ground, ranging from one quarter to four acres, forming portions of the Wimbledon Park Estate. The sale called together a large attendance, and great competition was evinced throughout. Nearly all the lots were sold at prices ranging between 350*l.* and 600*l.* per acre; being far beyond the prices hitherto realized for similar plots of land upon this estat The total result of the sale amounts to upwards of 10,900*l*

Eight freehold houses in Clapham-park-terrace, let to yearly tenants, at 35*l* per annum each, sold in lots, and realised 3,810*l* exclusive of fixtures

A piece of freehold allotment land at Putney, about half an acre—315*l*.

The Putney College estates, including the cedars, and about 18 acres of freehold land fronting the Thames, were bought in at 13,500*l*.; the last offer being within 700*l*.

THE NEW LAWS OF THIS SESSION, 1852.

THE LAW REFORMS.

NOTICE.—The following important New Laws of the Session, including the New Procedure Acts, will be published as soon as possible after they become laws.

Each will be transmitted by the next post after publication (paid) to those Members of the Profession who will immediately forward their orders to the Publisher, so as to enable him to regulate the impression, and make his arrangements accordingly.

We cannot undertake to return rejected communications. Whatever is intended for insertion must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer; not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of his good faith. No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1852.

THE ATTORNEYS' TAX.

WE make one more last and urgent appeal to our readers to seize the opportunity that now offers itself for securing the redress of their greatest grievance.

Four or five years may elapse before such an occasion will recur as that which now invites them to "help themselves"—always so much safer a reliance than the help of others. The game is now in their own hands. They may certainly win it, if they will. If they throw it away, they will deserve the disappointment that will be in store for them.

There is no time for pause, for hesitation, for deliberation. What is done must be done quickly. Before next Saturday the greater portion of the town elections will be concluded: the members will be returned for the next Parliament, and it will be too late to command their attention, or solicit their support.

Let not the pungent saying be forgotten, too true often, but of almost universal application in politics, that "gratitude is a keen sense of favours to come." This is the moment when that gratitude of candidates will be most liberally bestowed. The Attorneys have votes, and their influence is far greater than their votes. Those votes and that influence are just now eagerly sought. Let them make it a condition of the grant to any candidate of any party that he shall solemnly promise, in all contingencies and at all times, to give his vote against the Attorneys' Tax.

We have already stated more than once the reasons why such a pledge as this may be fairly exacted. The tax in question is not a matter of general interest, or of public concern; it is purely a special grievance inflicted upon a particular class; an indefensible injustice, which the many have imposed upon the few, and which those who are thus oppressed may rightly use all lawful means to throw off. In such a case appeals to the sense of public justice are useless, for the public will not readily consent to shift a burden from other shoulders to their own. The only hope of redress lies in the exercise of that power which the law has placed in the hands of th[e] oppressed, and which it is not their right only, but their duty, to employ, so as to wring relief from those who cannot be persuaded or reasoned into fair dealing.

Why should not every Attorney in the land, before Tuesday evening, make a point of seeing the candidates for the city, borough, or county in which he lives, and putting the question to each of them, "Will you vote for the repeal of the unjust Attorneys' Tax?" and requiring an explicit, unequivocal reply, "Aye" or "Nay," and let him withhold his support from any one, however on other points he may agree with him, who will not promise by his vote to remove this great wrong done to the Profession.

If every one of our readers will do this before Tuesday night, the repeal of the Attorneys' Tax will be accomplished.

If this be not done, we may have to endure another six years of injustice—of petitioning—of delay—and of defeat.

Once again we repeat the truth we have so often urged, that "Heaven helps those who help themselves."

There has not been a time, since we first agitated this question, at which the Attorneys could so effectually have helped themselves as now, and if they fail to do so they will have none but themselves to blame. We shall have done our duty in this endeavour to rouse them to the performance of theirs.

THE LAWYERS AT SCHOOL.

THE Lawyers must go to school again, with a double task to unlearn, as well as to learn. There is nothing more difficult than this. The Practice of the Law has become ingrained by long use. It was implanted in Clerkship, and continual cultivation has made it almost a part of the Lawyer's being. Its nice technicalities were acquired with labour, and therefore are the more deeply rooted, and will be with difficulty eradicated. For some time to come there will be infinite perplexity in every legal mind between the law as it was and as it is. Herein the beginner will have a positive advantage over the experienced practitioner, for he will have need only to master the new practice. It would be well if all of us could consign to oblivion the knowledge we possess. But we cannot. Once written upon the memory it remains there, and will not be obliterated at pleasure. The question comes, then, and it is a very serious one for those who are to un-learn, how they might most readily accomplish the object? Let us give them a few hints as to this. They should begin with a resolve to forget. They must start by clearing the mind as much as possible of its past impressions. They must not attempt to learn the new law by comparisons of it with the former practice, and vain endeavours to dovetail them together in their memories. That would only result in confusion. Let them take the new law and study that, with the slightest possible reference to the old law. Let them begin at the beginning, as if they were now reading for the first time, and trace the procedure as now provided, precisely as they would study a book that taught the law of a strange country. Unless they do this they will create for themselves infinite perplexities.

It is in accordance with this view of the requirements of the Lawyers that we propose to construct the series of papers that will describe to them the changes made in the practice of the Law. We shall avoid, as much as possible, mixing up of the law as it is with the law as it was; referring to it only when one may be necessary to make the other intelligible. We design a minute and careful description of the future duties of the practitioner; and preparatory to commencing, we ask him to give some thought to the question we have here suggested, and partially answered, as to the easiest methods by which, when he goes to school again, he may unlearn as well as learn.

THE NEW ERA.

THE tendency of the changes in the law is towards decentralization. It is necessary for the Profession thoroughly to understand this, that it may prepare itself for the changes that must follow. It is of no use to waste further time, thought, or toil, in fighting against the tide. The direction of the current is plain enough, and if we are wise we shall swim with it, and perhaps use it to help us to a new and not less advantageous position.

Henceforth the administration of justice will be local. The County Courts, as the established provincial tribunals, will be the machinery by which law will be dispensed, and the Courts of Westminster will become little more than Courts of Appeal from the local tribunals. This is the certain future. How long it may be before it is fully realised will depend upon many accidents, but it is certain every succeeding year will throw increased duties upon the County Courts. Bankruptcy, an Equity Jurisdiction, the trial of petty crimes, must ere long be confided to them. The public will not be content with partial justice; they will ask why they should be sent to London to settle a question of equity, or a matter of account, or the quarrels of a partnership, when they can obtain, almost at their own doors, a cheap and speedy settlement of other disputes. This change in the distribution of business will necessarily work a great change in the Profession. It will now be our best policy to make the local courts as efficient as possible, with most extensive jurisdiction; for the better they are the more they will be resorted to, and the larger will be their productiveness to the Profession. It will not be in future as hitherto it has been, when all that was allowed to the Attorney for any case, however laborious, was a paltry fee of a few shillings. The provision of the new Act, that substitutes a regular scale of fees for County Courts business, practically assimilates them to the Superior Courts so far as respects the remuneration to be obtained there; for even if the Judges should form a scale of fees somewhat lower than those allowed in the Superior Courts, it is to be remembered that these will not be shared with agents, but all will go into the pockets of the country Attorneys. If bankruptcy and equity be added to the jurisdiction, there can be no doubt that the County Courts will, under the new regulations as to costs, yield to the Profession a far greater revenue than all the other courts in the kingdom together.

With such a prospect not distant, the Profession must prepare for great changes. There will be an extensive emigration from London to the provinces. As for the Bar, nine-tenths, at least, of its members will be unable to live by it, and they must, and gradually they will, be thinned down to something like proportion between supply and demand, by the prudence of some and the necessities of others, who will quit a hopeless pursuit for something of more promise, either abroad or at home. The Attorneys have not this fate to fear. The changes in the law will not materially affect their profits; probably they will be increased in total amount. But the Attorneys also must change their localities. The business of agency being now almost extinguished, there must be an emigration from the dusty chambers of Chancery-lane to the purer atmosphere of the country. They must follow the business that is passing away from them. It will be inconvenient and disagreeable to migrate from their old haunts, but it is inevitable. The law has ceased to be centralized. This fact cannot be ignored, and therefore it is best to meet it manfully. They will prosper most who recognise the new condition of affairs, and adapt themselves to it with cheerfulness and resolution. The change will be attended with losses and grief to many, and with more or less of inconvenience to all; but we are inclined to think, that when the Profession shall have accommodated itself to its novel position, it will be found to have gained in social standing, in public esteem, and in positive income, by the revolution whose progress we are recording.

COSTS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

The clause in the County Courts Act, which makes provision for costs being chargeable and recoverable in the County Courts, upon a scale to be settled by the Judges, has been materially altered from the form in which we had originally drawn it, although the substance remains. Some changes were made in it before the Bill was introduced into the Lords. The Commons made many more changes, which are certainly improvements. As it stands, the provision is sufficiently simple and intelligible. It runs thus:—

That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to appoint five of the judges of the courts holden under an Act of the ninth and tenth years of her Majesty, cap. 95, intituled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England," from time to time to frame a scale of costs and charges to be paid to attorneys in the County Courts, to be allowed as between attorney and client, and as between party and party; and such scale of costs and charges as shall be certified to the Lord Chancellor under the hands of the judges so appointed or authorised, or any three of them, shall be submitted by the Lord Chancellor to three or more of the judges of the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster, of whom the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench or Common Pleas, or the Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, shall be one, and such judges of the Superior Courts may approve or disallow, or alter or amend, such scale of costs and charges; a day to be named by such last-mentioned judges shall be in force in every County Court; and all costs between party and party, and attorney and client, shall be taxed by the clerk of the court; but his taxation may be reviewed by the judge upon the application of either party; and in no case, upon the taxation of the costs between attorney and client, shall any charges be allowed, not sanctioned by the aforesaid scale, unless the clerk is satisfied by writing under the hand of the client that he has agreed to pay such further charges, and no attorney shall have a right to recover at law from his client any costs or charges not so allowed on taxation; and the judges of the County Courts so appointed shall possess the same powers of making rules for regulating the practice of the Courts, and of settling doubts on the construction of any Acts relating to County Courts, as were conferred on the judges to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor for that purpose by the twelfth section of the twelfth and thirteenth Victoria, c. 101, unless otherwise specially provided.

Our readers who experience the inconvenience of the existing practice, by which a plaintiff is obliged to come to the County Court, with all his witnesses, to prove his demand, whether it be disputed by the defendant or not, will learn with regret that the Commons have expunged the other clause we had procured to be introduced into the Bill, and which was unanimously approved and passed by the Lords, for permitting judgment by default unless notice that he intends to dispute the demand be given by the defendant. Why this was expunged, and by whom, is not known. But it would be difficult to invent a good reason for putting plaintiffs in the County Courts to so much needless cost and trouble, now that in the Superior Courts a debt is to be recoverable upon the mere service of a writ with particulars of demand. Certainly if the facilities for the recovery of debts are to be so much greater in the Superior Courts than in the County Courts, there ought to be a concurrent jurisdiction for debts above 5*l.* so that suitors may resort to either as their preference might be. As the practice in the County Courts is, and that of the Superior Courts is to be, the former will be more costly and inconvenient than the latter, for the purpose of recovery of debts.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

INNS OF COURT.

Friday, June 25.—Lord Lyndhurst rose to put a question to his noble and learned friend the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Q. B. He wished to know whether his noble and learned friend, as visitor of the inns of court, was satisfied with the scheme of education which had been adopted by the benchers of the different inns of court?—Lord Campbell was sorry that his noble and learned friend had not given notice of his intention to ask this question. He had the honour to be visitor of the inns of court; he rejoiced exceedingly that the benchers were at last taking steps on this subject in the right direction. He had been labouring for the last twenty years in the hope of inducing them to do so. He had always thought that the state of legal education in this country was disgracefully bad. He was therefore very eager to see it amended. He rejoiced that something had at last been done which would lead to its amendment. He thought, however, that much still remained to be done. It was, nevertheless, satisfactory that the benchers had done so much. He thought that the judges would not be justified in interfering, now that they saw the good disposition which the benchers had shewn in the commencement of this good work. He hoped that they would still go on, so that there might be some opportunity of gaining a sound legal education in this country, as well as in the other civilised countries of the world.—Lord Lyndhurst, who was all but inaudible, was understood to ask whether the system of education now adopted was to be voluntary, or whether there was to be a compulsory examination of students before they were called to the bar?—Lord Brougham said that, as a bencher, he was confident that a disposition existed among the brethren of the bench, at least so far as one of the inns of court, namely, Lincoln's-inn, was concerned, to carry still further the important measures which they had commenced for the improvement of legal education; but he agreed with his noble and learned friend that there would be little good effected by the new system unless the degree of barrister sought for by the student were only conferred after a compulsory examination, and that, too, as the result of that examination.

TURNPIKE TRUSTS.

Monday, June 28.—The Earl of Powis moved for a statement of the estimated amount of toll which mail coaches, mail carts, and horse posts would be liable to pay on each turnpike trust if not exempted by the general turnpike Acts; also, a return of the amount of aid contributed by parishes to turnpike trusts in England and Wales in each year from 1848 to 1851, both inclusive; and also, a return of the several routes travelled by mail carriages drawn by more than one horse, stating the termini and length of each of such routes, and the number of horses drawing such carriages.—The Earl of Hardwicke, while not opposing the motion of his noble friend, the object of which was to subject mail coaches to toll, could not hold out any hope that the Crown would abandon those rights which it possessed to the use of the public highways. It was matter of regret that in the early stages of the railway system the Crown did not secure to itself similar powers over railways. The motion was then agreed to.

Thursday, July 1.—The fifth session of the third Parliament of the reign of her present most gracious Majesty was closed by the Queen in person, preparatory to its dissolution.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SUITORS CHANCERY RELIEF BILL.

Wednesday, June 30.—The House of Lords having altered one of the many clauses of this Bill, and the usual consequences of such a step having followed, a new Bill, embodying the proposed alteration, was now introduced. It went through all its stages, and was passed without amendment.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE JURISDICTION OF EQUITY BILL.

Mr. Walpole moved that the House disagree with the Lords' amendment on this Bill. While the Bill was before the Commons a clause was introduced carrying out one of the recommendations of the Chancery Law Commission, the object being to make the Court of Chancery complete in its jurisdiction for deciding all cases brought before it, and to avoid the expense and delay consequent on referring questions once, twice, and, as occasionally happened, thrice to a court of common law. Having the highest respect for the judgment of the noble lords at whose instance that clause was struck out, he should have been disposed, but for the recommendation of the commission, and that the subject had been fully considered by the House, to suggest the adoption of the amendment their lordships had made; but as it was, he felt bound to move that it be not concurred in.—Mr. BETHELL seconded the motion, which was agreed to, and a committee appointed to hold a conference with the Lords.

This continues 10 & 11 Vict. c. 98 to 1st Aug. 1853.

CAP. XVIII.

An Act to continue the Exemption of Inhabitants from Liability to be Rated as such in respect of Stock in Trade, or other Property, to the Relief of the Poor. (May 28, 1852.)

This continues 3 & 4 Vict. c. 89 to 1st Oct. 1853.

CAP. XIX.

An Act to continue an Act for authorising the Application of Highway Rates to Turnpike-Roads. (May 28, 1852.)

This continues 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59 to Oct. 1, 1853.

CAP. XX.

An Act to continue the Duties on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades, and Offices. (May 28, 1852.)

This continues the Income Tax Acts for one year.

CAP. XXI.

An Act to continue the Stamp Duties granted by an Act of the Fifth and Sixth Years of her present Majesty, to assimilate the Stamp Duties in Great Britain and Ireland, and to make regulations for collecting and managing the same. (June 17, 1852.)

CAP. XXII.

An Act to continue certain Acts for regulating Turnpike Roads in Ireland. (June 17, 1852.)

CAP. XXIII.

An Act to shorten the time required for assembling Parliament after a Dissolution thereof. (June 17, 1852.

We give this statute entire.

Parliament may be appointed to meet thirty-five days after the date of the proclamation.—Whereas the time required by law to intervene between the date of the proclamation for assembling Parliament and the day appointed for the meeting thereof may be reasonably shortened: Be it declared and enacted, therefore, by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that so often as her Majesty shall, by her royal proclamation, appoint a time for the first meeting of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland after a dissolution thereof, the time so to be appointed may be any time not less than thirty-five days after the date of such proclamation, the Act of the fifth year of Queen Anne, chapter eight; or the Act of the seventh and eighth years of William the Third, chapter twenty-five, or any other law or usage, to the contrary notwithstanding.

CAP. XXIV.

An Act for the Amendment of an Act passed in the First Year of the Reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act for the Amendment of the Laws with respect to Wills." (June 17, 1852.)

We give this statute entire.

Whereas the laws with respect to the execution of wills require further amendment: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same (as follows):—

1. 1 Vict. c. 26—When signature to a will shall be deemed valid.—Where by an Act passed in the first year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act for the Amendment of the Laws with respect to Wills," it is enacted, that no will shall be valid unless it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator, or by some other person in his presence, and by his direction: every will shall, so far only as regards the position of the signature of the testator, or of the person signing for him as aforesaid, be deemed to be valid within the said enactment, as explained by this Act, if the signature shall be so placed at or after, or following, or under, or beside, or opposite to the end of the will, that it shall be apparent on the face of the will that the testator intended to give effect by such his signature to the writing signed as his will, and that no such will shall be affected by the circumstance that the signature shall not follow or be immediately after the foot or end of the will, or by the circumstance that a blank space shall intervene between the concluding word of the will and the signature, or by the circumstance that the signature shall be placed among the words of the testimonium clause, or of the clause of attestation, or shall follow or be after or under the clause of attestation, either with or without a blank space intervening, or shall follow or be after, or under, or beside the names or one of the names of the subscribing witnesses, or by the circumstance that the signature shall be on a side or page or other portion of the paper or papers containing the will whereon no clause or paragraph or disposing part of the will shall be written above the signature, or by the circumstance that there shall appear to be sufficient space on or at the bottom of the preceding side or page, or other portion of the same paper on which the will is written to contain the signature; and the enumeration of the above circumstances shall not restrict the generality of the above enactment; but no signature under the said Act or this Act shall be operative to give effect to any disposition or direction which is underneath or which follows it, nor shall it give effect to any disposition or direction inserted after the signature shall be made.

2. Act to extend to certain wills already made.—The provisions of this Act shall extend and be applied to every will already made, where administration or probate has not already been granted or ordered by a Court of competent jurisdiction in consequence of the defective execution of such will, or where the property, not being within the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts, has not been possessed or enjoyed by some person or persons claiming to be entitled thereto in consequence of the defective execution of such will, or the right thereto shall not have been decided to be in some other person or persons than the persons claiming under the will, by a Court of competent jurisdiction, in consequence of the defective execution of such will.

3. Interpretation of "will."—The word "will" shall, in the construction of this Act, be interpreted in like manner as the same is directed to be interpreted under the provisions in this behalf contained in the said Act of the first year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

4. Short title of Act.—This Act may be cited as "The Wills Act Amendment Act, 1852."

CAP. XXV.

An Act to amend an Act for registering Births, Deaths, and Marriages in England. (June 17, 1852.)

CAP. XXVI.

An Act to enable her Majesty to carry into effect arrangements made with Foreign Powers for the Apprehension of Seamen who desert from their Ships. (June 17, 1852.)

CAP. XXVII.

An Act to amend the Law of Evidence in Scotland. (June 17, 1852.)

CAP. XXVIII.

An Act to amend an Act of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Years of her present Majesty for the direction of Public Works and Buildings; and to vest the buildings appropriated for the accommodation of the Supreme Courts of Justice in Edinburgh in the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings. (June 17, 1852.)

CAP. XXIX.

An Act to empower the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings to inclose and lay out Kennington Common, in the County of Surrey, as Pleasure Grounds for the recreation of the public. (June 17, 1852.)

CAP. XXX.

An Act to empower the Commissioners of her Majesty's Customs to acquire certain Lands and Houses in the Borough of Belfast for the purpose of erecting a Custom House and other Offices and Buildings required for the public service in the said Borough. (June 17, 1852.)

The fifth session of the 15 & 16 Vict. whose career terminated on the 1st inst. though comparatively a brief one, has endured longer than at one period could have been anticipated. It was opened by the Queen in person on the 3rd of February, and has, therefore, lasted four calendar months and twenty-eight days, being one month and six days shorter than its predecessor of 1851. The House of Commons has sat during that period on 80 days, their sittings occupying in all 580 hours, or an average of 7¼ hours each. The number of hours sat past midnight was 55½. The Lords during the same period have sat on only 69 days, and their sittings occupied 157 hours, being an average of 2¼ hours each. There have been during the session 121 divisions in the Commons and 5 in the Lords. The phenomenon known in parliamentary language as a "no house," has occurred but once—on the 18th of May. The "count outs" have been four in number. They were as follow: April 6, when the House was in committee upon the Suitors in Chancery Relief Bill (to which the Royal assent was on Wednesday given); April 26, of pure exhaustion, at half-past one o'clock in the morning; April 27, on a motion of Mr. Anstey's relative to Col. Outram; and, again, June 15, on a motion by the same hon. gentleman, relative to the expulsion of British subjects from the Austrian dominions.

NEW ACT TO ASSEMBLE PARLIAMENT AFTER A DISSOLUTION.—The new Act to shorten the time required for assembling Parliament after a dissolution has just been printed. It is declared that the time required by law to intervene between the date of the proclamation for assembling Parliament, and the day appointed for the meeting thereof may be reasonably shortened. It is, therefore, enacted "That so often as her Majesty shall by her Royal proclamation appoint a time for the first meeting of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland after a dissolution thereof, the time so to be appointed may be any time not less than thirty-five days after the date of such proclamation, the Act of the 5th year of Queen Anne, chapter 8, or the Acts of the 7th and 8th years of William III. chap. 25, or any other law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding."

THE PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.—The Parliament which was prorogued on Thursday, assembled on the 18th of November, 1847. The last Parliament, which was dissolved on the 23rd of July, 1847, was in existence five years, eleven months, and four days, which was the longest period since the 7 Geo. 4. In a recently issued document by the House of Lords it is stated, "that the average duration of a Parliament may be estimated at four years." According to the new Act, Parliament may be appointed to meet thirty-five days after the proclamation for the assembling of the same.

ELECTIONS WITHOUT HUSTINGS.—Sir William Clay has put on the paper of the House of Commons for next session a notice of motion for a select committee, "to consider whether it be not expedient that provision should be made for taking the votes of parliamentary electors as the votes are now by law taken i the elections of poor-law guardians—namely, at the residence of the electors."

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

ANOTHER Rating case was reported last week. In Reg. v. The Trustees of Birkenhead Docks, 19 Law T. Rep. 215, land was used for docks, with power to take dues, &c. and lower or raise them from time to time, the sums received to be applied to the expenses of keeping the docks in repair, paying officers, and otherwise carrying into execution the Act by which they were incorporated, and also to payment of money borrowed, under such regulations as they should think fit. They were held to be ratcable to the poor-rate. Trustees who occupy even for public purposes are liable, unless specially exempted, and there was no exemption in the statute that incorporated them.

A short time ago we reported a very important decision upon the right of a prisoner charged with felony to assign his property at any time before conviction. We have now to direct attention to a case arising out of the same law of forfeiture. A. bequeathed to B. a promissory note, not to be sued upon or made available until he (B.) became of age. Before he came of age B. was convicted of felony. Did this note pass to the Crown by forfeiture? The Court of Q. B. thus stated the law to be:—"Before the conviction the legal interest in this promissory note was vested in the executors, and not in B. and the conviction does not take the legal interest out of the executors and vest it in the Crown. The executors became thereby trustees for the Crown as to the interest which A. had; but, as he had not the legal interest, the conviction did not vest the legal interest in the Crown, though the executors, when they recover the money, will be trustees of it on behalf of the Crown." (Bishop v. Curtis, 19 Law T. Rep. 217.)

A question as to Larceny is reported from the Court of Criminal Appeal. A. pretending that he was about to pay to B. a sum of money due to him, produced a receipt-stamp and placed it before B. who wrote upon it, at A.'s request, a receipt for the amount. A. then took up the paper and carried it away, but never paid the money. It was held not to be a larceny by A. as he never had a property in, or possession of, the stamped paper (Reg. v. Smith, 19 Law T. Rep. 220.)

A curious point, arising out of a conflict of statutes, was raised in Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Denton, 19 Law T. Rep. 216. The 59 Geo. 3, c. xxii. s. 1, enacts that in any indictment for non-repair of a highway, it should be sufficient to allege generally that such township, &c. ought to repair, &c. without setting forth any custom or presumption, &c. An indictment under this statute was prepared and found by the grand jury. Before the trial, this statute was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. x. which relates to the same highways, but the provision relating to the pleading was not repealed. It was held that the conviction could not be sustained, the counts of the indictment being bad at Common Law, and the statute that authorised them being repealed.

EXPENSES OF PROSECUTION ACT

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—With reference to the observations in your paper of a few weeks since on this Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 55), I addressed a letter to Mr. Secretary Walpole a few days since, inquiring whether the regulations which the Secretary of State is authorised to make under sec. 5 of the Act were likely to be made, and come into operation at the next assizes. The answer given is, "that Mr. Secretary Walpole fears that he will not be able to give the subject all the consideration it requires before the next assizes."

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

June 28, 1852. A CLERK TO MAGISTRATES.

Query.

CAN you, or any of your readers, state if a magistrate (a clerical one) is liable to any or what penalty for acting as J.P. who has been suspended by the ordinary, and deprived, I believe of the benefits of his cure for two or three years, in other words, should he not qualify again J. R.

24th June, 1852.

POLICE.—On Saturday were printed, in a parliamentary paper, some returns relating to the police in England and Ireland. This is a reprint of a return to the House of Lords made a few days ago. The constabulary of Ireland consists of 12,321 persons, including resident magistrates, and the total charge for the same is 519,782*l.* 19s. The charge for the year, ended the 31st of March last, for the Dublin metropolitan police force, was 60,5[illegible] [illegible] 6s. 5d. The total charge for the metropolitan [illegible] England, of 5,625 persons, for one [illegible] 318,587*l.* 3s. 1d.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

WINDING UP.

IN Re The Oxford, &c. Junction Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 214, the Court discharged the order for a call where several contributories had been struck off the list upon appeal after the call was made.

In the same case, the House of Lords has again considered the provisional committee question, this time with the aid of the Judges, and practically they have reversed the famous and much-disputed decision in Upfill. [illegible] at least, they have put upon that case a different construction from that generally understood by the Profession to be its purport. It had been taken for granted, that the principle established by Upfill's case was, that although being a member of a provisional committee did not of itself constitute liability, nor taking shares, of itself, yet, that when the two non-liabilities were combined, they constituted a liability. This illogical conclusion we were compelled at the time to question and combat, and every Court before which a similar question arose acknowledged the apparent absurdity of the reasoning, but declared itself to be bound by the judgment of the Lords. But now the Lords themselves have practically reversed their former judgment, or rather, we should say, they have drawn a nice distinction between the facts of Upfill's case, treating that, not as a decision of the principle it was supposed to decide, but as turning upon its special facts. In the case of Hutton v. Bright, in which there was nothing but the combination of the two facts of being a provisional committeeman and taking shares, paying the deposit upon them, it has been decided that Mr. BRIGHT was not a contributory. He had been a member of the provisional committee, and had taken shares, and paid the deposit upon them; but he had never acted, nor was a party to any orders. He is not a contributory. This decision will again compel a revision of almost all the lists of contributories; for there are few in which persons have not been included upon that which is now stated to be the erroneous understanding of the principle in Upfill's case.

The law, therefore, must now be taken to be, that a provisional committeeman who has never acted as such, or taken any part in the management of the affairs of the company, is not liable as a contributory, although he may have taken shares and even paid the deposits upon them.

As we are desirous of giving a full and careful report of this very important case, we have requested our reporter not to prepare it too hastily, but to obtain the various judgments from the highest sources. In the meanwhile, the above sketch of the principle decided, or, more properly, undecided, in this important case, will suffice to put our readers in possession of the present law of liability of provisional committeemen to be contributories.

The House of Lords has at length determined the much debated question whether companies only registered provisionally are within the province of the Winding-up Acts. This was submitted to the Judges of the Common Law Courts, who, on Saturday gave their unanimous opinion that such incompleted companies are within the statutes. Their opinion, with the judgment of the Lords, will be reported in due course; but as the decision is of more importance and interest than the reasons for it, we sh[illegible] give precedence to [illegible]eports of immediat[illegible] [illegible]gency.

The LORD CHANCELLOR has confirmed the decision of the VICE-CHANCELLOR in Croxton's case, 19 Law T. Rep. 209, where C. sold shares to A. By th[illegible] deed of settlement no member, as between [illegible] [illegible]ll and the company, was to be liable for and [illegible] demands after he should have ceased to be a member, save only, except for and in respect of any sum or sums which he shall or may be liable to pay by reason of any forfeiture, penalty, or misconduct;" and by another clause he was to be discharged from all liabilities, save only such as "shall have been previously incurred." The sale took place two years prior to the order for winding up. He was held not to be a contributory. "The point is, I think," said his Lordship, "open to no dispute."

In this case the Court refused to give costs against the official manager, who had brought the appeal with the sanction of the Master, his Lordship considering that the Act gave him no power [illegible] do so.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

THE devices that are attempted for the purpose of evading the law that forbids accumulations, known by the name of the Thellusson Act, would form a curious record of ingenuity. The case of Jones v. Maggs, 19 Law T. Rep. 213, is interesting as an instance of the manner in which an accumulation to a considerable extent may be made without infringing the statute. Money was bequeathed to trustees, to accumulate at compound interest until a child of A. should attain twenty-one, and then to divide the fund among all the children of A. who should then be living, and if but one, the whole to be paid to that one. The residue was given to A. A. had one child living at the date of the will, and at the death of the testatrix, but who died under twenty-one. On a claim by A. for the money and interest, it was held not to be a portion within the meaning of the Thellusson Act. "Is this," said the Court, "a provision for raising portions within the fair meaning of the Act? I do not conceive that it is. Portions for children are sums of money secured to them out of property, out of the income of which a provision is made for the parents; and although gifts have been held to be protected, as being portions within the meaning of this exception, in some cases, where the parents took no interest in the subject-matter of the gift, still this will only be where there is some settlement on the parent, and where the nature of the gift or of the context shews that the gift ought to be so held to be within the exception."

In Holliday v. Overton, 19 Law T. Rep. 211, a point was decided which is worth noting. An estate was limited, in default of appointment, in trust for the children of A. equally to be divided between them as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. There were no words of limitation, and in default of such, it was held that, there being no appointment, the children took only life estates in the property.

In Martin v. Pycroft, 19 Law T. Rep. 213, where A. had, by writing, agreed to grant a lease to B. and by parol it had been agreed that B. should pay 200*l.* premium, the Court refused specific performance, on the ground that a material part of the agreement had been omitted from the written contract.

STAMPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I think you some time since asked your readers to report to you the result of any adjudication made by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under the last Stamp Act, and therefore I send you the following facts.

A. in consideration of the surrender by B. of a former lease of the hereditaments and of the yearly rents (in all 13*l.* 8s. 1d.) thereinafter reserved and contained) demised to B. for 99 years, determinable with the life of the survivor of three persons.

The lease was stamped with the advertisement duty of 1s. 6d.; but a question having been raised whether it should not have been impressed with a deed-stamp, as containing other considerations than the yearly rents, the opinion of the commissioners was taken, when they adjudged that it was duly stamped.—I am, Sir, yours, &c. G. C. S.

[We shall feel obliged for similar communications from our readers.—ED. L. T.]

THE WILLS ACT AMENDMENT ACT.—This Act, which received the Royal assent last week, is now in force. Its object is to render valid the signatures to wills where the same are not placed above the disposition or direction as to any property. Until the law was altered, the position of a signature was very material, and a good deal of litigation has been caused by it not being placed in a particular manner [illegible] the instrument. The Act, which is the result of a measure brought forward by the Lord Chancellor, is to extend to certain wills already made, where administration has not been granted or ordered on account of the defective execution of such wills.

COUNTY COURTS.

SOME County Court appeals were reported last week. Barnes v. Marshall, 19 Law T. Rep. 217, was a question as to the place where the cause of action arose. A. by written contract, undertook to carry for B. by canal to London, timber lying in a field not far from A.'s wharf. When B.'s horses happened to be near, the timber was hauled to the wharf by them; at other times by A.'s horses. The place of delivery of the timber was not within the County Court district, nor did B. dwell within it. Where did the cause of action arise? It was held to arise only on the delivery of the timber in London, and that there was no distinct cause of action in respect of the hauling of the timber to the wharf.

Templeman v. Haydon, 19 Law T. Rep. 218, was entirely a question of fact for the Judge, which the Court above refused to review. MAULE, J. stated the duties of the Judge in such cases. "Where parties leave law and facts to the decision of the Judge, he alone has to determine upon those mixed matters, and the Court above, having no means or power to separate them, cannot review his judgment."

There is one case to be noted in Insolvency. A final order is no protection against imprisonment for damages obtained in an action on the case, unless the costs are taxed and judgment signed before the final order is granted. (Re Walker, 19 Law T. Rep. 220.)

LATE CASES ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF THE COUNTY COURTS.(a)

IV. CASES RELATING TO POINTS OF GENERAL PRACTICE.

The questions which bear on the particular branch of this subject now introduced to the consideration of the reader are among the most conflicting and the most complicated which have occupied the attention of our courts. We have nevertheless endeavoured to classify and to reduce to a system, as far as possible, these different decisions, and to deduce from them a consistent principle for the regulation of the practitioner. Reference must in this case, of course, be always had to the rules promulgated by the judges relative to the practice of the County Courts, and on which certain of the following cases are decided :—

The first of the cases to which we shall call the reader's attention is one relating to the service of the summons, with which every action in the County Court necessarily commences. To an action of trespass for false imprisonment, the defendant pleaded a justification under process out of a County Court in a suit there by the defendant against the plaintiff. It was proved that the defendant, having a debt due from one W. T. sent a bill by a messenger, who by mistake delivered it to the plaintiff. A plaint was afterwards entered in the County Court against W. T. by name, and a summons issued against W. T. by name; but that summons was also served upon the plaintiff. Upon proof of service, judgment was obtained ex parte against W. T. by name, and afterwards another judgment summons was issued against W. T. by name, and on non-appearance an order was made for committal of W. T. by name. All the proceedings were served upon the plaintiff (who throughout informed those who served him that he was not W. T.), by direction of defendant. It was held, that the plea was not proved, inasmuch as the process had been issued by the defendant against W. T. and the allegation that the defendant issued the summons against the plaintiff was material, and was contrary to the fact. It was held also, that as the process had been executed against the plaintiff by direction of the defendant, he was responsible in trespass. (Walley v. McConnel, 1 Cox & Mac. 257.) Where a party who has been duly summoned to answer a plaint in a County Court holden under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, fails to appear, on which the case is heard in his absence and judgment given against him, and drawn up, to pay the plaintiff's demand with costs forthwith, execution may issue immediately, without previous service of the judgment. (Ely v. Monk, 20 L.J. 29; 16 Law T. 239, Ex.)

The case which follows has reference to the determination of the class of actions which fall within the jurisdiction of the County Court, and the practice of the Superior Courts in dealing with such questions. It was by the case in question determined, that the Court of Exchequer will not, on a motion for a suggestion, decide whether or not a bill of exchange is within the jurisdiction of the County Court. (Butler v. Coney, 1 Cox & Mac. 111.) In Nind v. Rhodes, 1 Cox & Mac. 167, it was also determined, that bills of exchange are not within ... 129 of the County Courts Act, so as to give the plaintiff the option of suing upon them in the Superior Courts, as having no locality attached to them.

The case which follows relates to the time within which an application for a suggestion to deprive a plaintiff of his costs ought to be made. Final judgment on a verdict of less than 20*l*. was signed on the 17th of May. A summons at chambers was taken out to shew cause why the defendant should not enter a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs, and was dismissed for insufficiency of the affidavit. Two other summonses were afterwards taken out, and also dismissed, on the ground that the matter had been previously disposed of by another judge. Then an application was made to the Court within the first four days of Term. It was held, that the application was in time, and was not precluded by the previous application at chambers. (Peterson and Another v. Davis, 1 Cox & Mac. 148.) In this case the affidavit in support of the application for leave to enter a suggestion stated that the defendant, at the time of bringing the action, carried on his business at No. 133, Fenchurch-street, in the city of London, and dwelt and carried on his business in the city of London aforesaid, and that the plaintiff, at the commencement of the suit, did not dwell more than twenty miles from the defendant, but, on the contrary, did dwell within the distance of one mile from the defendant: it was held to be insufficient, inasmuch as it did not shew that the action was not one in which there is a concurrent jurisdiction with the Superior Courts under sec. 112 of the City of London Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. 71), and which is there given in cases where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles distant from the defendant. It appears doubtful whether a suggestion may be entered where the plaintiff does not dwell more than twenty miles from the defendant's place of business, although he dwells more than twenty miles from defendant's dwelling. In the above case of Nind v. Rhodes, 1 Cox & Mac. 167, it was decided that, upon an application to enter a suggestion upon the roll to deprive a plaintiff of costs, on the ground that the action should have been brought in the County Court, it is not necessary to negative that the Judge of the Superior Court certified that the action was fit to be brought in such Superior Court. (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 121.)

In the case which follows, a defect with regard to the summons was cured through the defendant waiving it by appearing upon it.

In December 1847 an order was made by a Judge of a County Court, under sec. 60 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, for suing the defendant, who was then residing out of the jurisdiction. It did not appear whether thereupon any summons issued, but in January 1850 a summons in an action, in which the same parties were plaintiff and defendant, issued, and was served, together with the before-mentioned order, upon the defendant, who was then residing out of the jurisdiction. Upon this the defendant gave notice, as provided for by sec. 76, of his intention to plead the Statute of Limitations; but before the day of trial he moved the Court of Q.B. for a prohibition, on the ground that the County Court had no jurisdiction, there being no valid order to support the summons: it was held that, whether or not the order of 1847 was sufficient to support the summons in 1850, the defendant had waived the objection by appearing and giving notice of his plea. (Jones v. Jones, 1 Cox & Mac. 290.)

At the trial before the undersheriff, plaintiff recovered 9*l*. 2*s*. 1*d*. only, and the judge refused to stay proceedings to enable the defendant to apply for a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs; the plaintiff thereupon signed judgment, and levied execution for damages and costs; afterwards, defendant obtained leave to enter a suggestion, but did not at that time move to set aside the judgment. In a subsequent Term, the defendant moved to set aside the judgment and execution, and for the plaintiff to refund the money paid upon the execution. It was held that the defendant might do so. (Read v. Blayney, 1 Cox & Mac. 337.)

After prohibition issued, the judge proceeded, and committed defendant to prison for nonpayment of instalments, in pursuance of an order upon a judgment. For this an action was brought against him for false imprisonment, and the Judge by whom it was tried charged the jury that if the defendant, in making the order, had acted under a bonâ fide belief that his duty as a Judge of the County Court made it incumbent on him to do so, notwithstanding the prohibition that had issued, the act so done must be considered as done in pursuance of the statute, and that he was entitled to notice of action under the provisions of the 138th section of the County Courts Act. It was held to be a right direction, and that it was for the jury to say if the judge reasonably believed he was so bound to proceed, and that if "reasonably" meant anything but good faith, it was used in contradistinction to "capriciously." (Booth v. Clive, 1 Cox & Mac. 439.)

Notice of action to the clerk and bailiffs of a County Court stated that the action would be brought in the Court of C. P. It was held that it would not support an action in the Q. B. (Estob v. Wright and Others, 1 Cox & Mac. 527.) The notice in this case was for breaking plaintiff's house and taking furniture therein, without expressly claiming the furniture as belonging to the plaintiff. It was held that it would not support an action for breaking the plaintiff's house and for taking her goods. It would seem that the notice in such a case should state the special damage, if any is to be claimed, in the declaration; and that if execution issues from the County Court against the goods of A. and the goods of B. are taken, and his house is broken, by mistake, the clerk and the bailiffs are, under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 138, entitled to notice of action.

In the case of Reg. v. Andrew Amos, esq. 1 Cox & Mac. 467, the Court of Q. B. laid it down that there may be corruption without a bribe, and there may be a misdemeanor committed by a Judge without malice, or without seeking a pecuniary advantage. A wrong act committed with a bad motive is corruption. Upon the facts as stated and answered, the Court acquitted Mr. Amos of the charge of corrupt and oppressive conduct in the discharge of his duties, but declared that more frequent sittings of the County Court should be holden, so as to prevent so great an accumulation of business in one day. The Court also laid it down, that it is wholly contrary to law, and the practice ought not to be allowed by the judges of the County Courts, for an attorney to practise in these Courts as an advocate, taking briefs from other attorneys. This latter point has, however, since been made the subject of a specific enactment.

With respect to the obligation of a judge of a County Court to produce before a Superior Court the notes taken by him at the trial of a plaint before him, it has been decided that there is nothing to exempt a judge from the duty of obeying a subpœna; but that the Superior Courts will discourage the practice of subpœnaing the judges of the County Courts to produce their notes to prove what took place before them on the hearing of any plaint. (Reg. v. Dutton, 1 Cox & Mac. 482.)

It seems doubtful whether a writ of trial, under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 17, can be sent to the judge of a County Court held under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. A judge's order directing such a writ to be issued to the judge of the County Court, and to be returned by the sheriff, is bad. (Bresse v. Owens, 17 Law T. Rep. 97, Ex.)

It has recently been held, that the production of a certificate in bankruptcy, granted to a defendant after the obtaining of a judgment against him in a County Court, is a sufficient answer to a summons, under the 98th sec. of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. (Buchanan v. Blowers, 15 Jur. 758, Q. B.)

By the 39th rule of practice for the County Courts, the claimant of goods taken under the County Court process is to deliver a particular of the goods claimed by him, and the grounds of his claim. Such grounds need not appear on the face of them to be valid; and therefore a claim to certain goods, stating that they had been assigned to the claimant by deed, was held to be sufficient, although it did not appear that the deed was good as against creditors. If a judge of a County Court refuses to adjudicate upon a claim, under sec. 118 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, in consequence of a mistake as to the sufficiency of a notice, or other preliminary matter, a mandamus will be granted to compel him to hear and determine the claim. (R. v. Richards, 15 Jur. 358.)

The law of set-off, which has been so frequently referred to in the determination of plaints in the County Courts, and the recent cases adjudicated upon it, will next claim our attention.

(a) By GEORGE HARRIS, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Provision for the protection of officers of the court.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

Equity Practice.—The Lord Chancellor has promptly corrected a mistake into which the Profession had fallen with respect to a direction he had given, that a decree should not be enrolled without motion after notice to the other party. He explained in Nowlan v. Walsh, 19 Law T. Rep. 210, that this was intended only of decrees of long standing and not for recent ones.

In Hyder v. Coleman, 19 Law T. Rep. 213, the Taxing Master was directed to take notice of un necessary statements in an unopposed petition. In Hartland v. Dancocks, 19 Law T. Rep. 213, where the issue directed at the hearing was abandoned by the defendants, the proper course was stated to be, that plaintiff should give notice of motion that the issue should be taken pro confesso, on which motion coming on, an order would be made to the effect that the trial of the issue would be dispensed with, and the claim would be in the same situation as if the issue had been tried and found for the defendant.

Common Law.—In Bryant v. Short, 19 Law T. Rep. 209, it was held that a plaintiff could not be asked on cross-examination whether he did not tell his attorney that his drunkenness would be set up by the defendant in answer to the action. "It is," said Martin, B. "the very sort of inquiry which the rule of professional confidence is meant to exclude. Y[illegible] cannot put any question to the plaintiff relating to what he communicated to his attorney. Everything that passes between a client and an attorney relating to his cases, ought to be free from inquiry."

It was also held in the same case, that where the declaration alleged that A. and B. were jointly possessed of a house, and the cellar door-trap being improperly left open, the plaintiff fell through, and it appeared that A. was the tenant, and that B. was employed by the landlord to repair it, and that during the repairs plaintiff fell through the cellar door; there was no joint cause of action against A. and B. and the plaintiff was put to his election.

A HINT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—It would save time and trouble in country offices, if, whenever a writ is sent from London, it were accompanied by a printed copy, on paper, for service. The additional expense to the London office would not be more than a halfpenny in each case. Most country offices do not keep printed copies of writs of summons.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

June 23, 1852. A Country Attorney.

The Law of Evidence in Scotland.—Among the last Acts which received the Royal assent was one to amend the law of evidence in Scotland. Persons who have been convicted of crime are not to be excluded from being witnesses, neither are agents, unless they have a substantial interest. The object of the Act is to relax the law of evidence in Scotland, which has been found too rigid to attain the end of all law, the establishment of right, and the prohibition of wrong.

Case of Mr. Alderman Salomons.—It is said that, immediately after the return of the singular verdict in the case of Chubb v. Salomons, in the Court of Ex. a few days since, another writ was issued against Mr. Alderman Salomons to recover penalties for voting in the House of Commons without having taken the oaths. Mr. Alderman Salomons was not to be found, so that personal service of the writ of summons could not be effected, and the plaintiff had to proceed by distringas. The action cannot be tried until November. In the case of Chubb v. Salomons, the plaintiff is about to move for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was perverse, and against the evidence; that the learned judge had improperly rejected oral and documentary evidence; and that he had misdirected the jury.—Standard.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

An extremely interesting and important question upon the effect of the Ship Registry Acts is reported from the Court of Appeal. A statute, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, s. 34, has provided that when a ship or any part of the property in it is sold, it shall be transferred by bill of sale, or other instrument in writing, containing a recital of the certificate of registry of such ship or vessel, or the principal contents thereof, otherwise such transfer shall not be valid either in law or equity, provided that no bill of sale shall be deemed void by reason of any error in such recital, &c. if the identity of the ship or vessel intended be effectually proved thereby. In Hughes v. Morris, 19 Law T. Rep. 210, a part of a vessel which had been registered was contracted to be sold by an agreement in writing, which did not in any way recite the certificate of registry. The question upon this was whether such an agreement could be enforced in equity. The Court held that it could not. "Whether it was a sale or a contract for a sale can make no difference. A contract for a sale is, in the view of a Court of Equity, a sale; whether an actual transfer is made is of no importance, actual transfer was agreed to be made."

In Mardell v. Thellusson, 19 Law T. Rep. 217, it has been held that where an action is brought against an executor for a debt which became due during the testator's lifetime, the executor may set off a debt due to him as executor for money had and received by the plaintiff since the testator's death.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL LAWYER.

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners.—By an Order in Council, dated Buckingham Palace, June 15th inst. her Majesty has been pleased to ratify a scheme prepared by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, relating to the episcopal income of the Bishop of Worcester, in which it is agreed, in pursuance of the Acts of Parliament therein set forth, between the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners and the said Bishop of Worcester, that the said Bishop shall, from the 1st day of January last past, receive an annual income of 5,000*l.* in lieu of the present or future income arising from his see, or of any other ecclesiastical profits or emoluments of any kind or description whatever.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto Joseph Bailey, of Glanusk-park, in the county of Brecon, esq. and to the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten.

Edward Smirke, esq. barrister-at-law, has been appointed Attorney-General of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in the room of the Hon. John Chetwynd Talbot, deceased.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

TESTIMONIAL TO SIR JOHN PATTESON.—A committee from the body of Common Law Clerks have waited upon the Right Hon. Sir John Patteson, at 13, King's Bench Walk, Temple, and presented to him a very handsome silver inkstand, as a mark of their great respect, and of their gratitude for the uniform courtesy with which he had treated them while he officiated as judge in the Court of Q.B. The testimonial was presented by Mr. Breeze, chairman of the committee, who expressed himself on the occasion in very complimentary terms. Mr. Urquhart, the hon. secretary, then read and handed to Sir John the following address:

The Common Law Clerks of the metropolis, to whom, as a body, your Lordship has shewn so much kindly feeling and courtesy, desire, upon your retirement as a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, to testify the sentiments of respect they entertain towards your Lordship.

The urbanity experienced by them in your administration of that part of their professional duties transacted at chambers, combined with your perfect knowledge upon all the subjects submitted to your consideration, materially aided them in affording satisfaction to their principals, and in obtaining unquestionable justice for the client, and converted a somewhat unpleasant employment into an agreeable occupation.

As humble members of the community, they venture to form an estimate of your Lordship's character, and respectfully to tender their tribute to the uprightness, learning, and logical discrimination which so distinguished your Lordship while at the bar and upon the judgment-seat.

They lament that by reason of a single bodily infirmity you should have felt it right to retire from that bench of which you were so long an ornament; but it is a consolation to know that your valuable services will at least be preserved in that sphere of judicial usefulness to which her Majesty has been pleased to appoint you.

That you may long be spared to discharge those new duties, and, under Divine Providence, to enjoy every happiness this life can afford, is the earnest hope of those who have now the honour to address you.

And your Lordship is solicited to accept in expression of these feelings the testimonial which accompanies this address.

Sir John appeared much gratified, and said that hardly any thing since his retirement from the bench had given him greater pleasure than this mark of the consideration in which he was held by a numerous and important body in the Profession.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, Saturday, June 26.—Lord Campbell stated, that during the present sittings the attendance of special jurors had been extremely unsatisfactory, but he had abstained from fining them because a Bill had passed both Houses of Parliament, to which he hoped her Majesty would give her assent, and which would place the special jury system upon a more satisfactory footing. Lord Campbell also said he wished, among other legal improvements, they would have a court in which they could sit without inconvenience, and without suffering in their health. He himself had suffered very much during a late trial, and he feared there were others who had suffered also. It was most lamentable. His lordship, as was noticed in the House of Lords last night, was very hoarse, a mischief occasioned perhaps partly by the fatigue of the Achilli trial; but partly also by the strange and trying alternations of heat and cold to which this "well ventilated" court is subject.

THE LAST GENERAL ELECTION.—In 1847, Parliament was prorogued on Friday July 23, and dissolved by Royal Proclamation, published in a supplement to the Gazette of the same evening. Parliament was ordered to assemble on the 21st of September, 1847, but was then adjourned, and did not meet till the 18th of November. This year the prorogation is earlier by twenty-two days, and the period of assembling again is shortened by the Act of this Session, which substitutes thirty-five days for the fifty that were hitherto required to elapse between the dissolution of the old and the assembling of the new Parliament; so that the writs for election of the new Parliament will be returnable about the 5th of August, but the Parliament will not be called together before October.

THE CHANCES OF LIFE.—Among the interesting facts developed by the recent census, are some in relation to the laws that govern life and death. They are based upon returns from the state of Maryland, and a comparison with previous ones. The calculation it is unnecessary to explain; but the result is a table from which we gather the following illustration:—10,268 infants are born on the same day and enter upon life simultaneously. Of these, 1,243 never reach the anniversary of their birth. 9,025 commence the second year, but the proportion of deaths still continue so great, that at the end of the third year only 8,183, or about four-fifths of the original number, survive. But during the fourth year the system seems to acquire more strength, and the number of deaths rapidly decreases. It goes on decreasing until 21, the commencement of maturity, and the period of highest health. 7,131 enter upon the activities and responsibilities of life—more than two-thirds of the original number. Thirty-five come to the meridian of manhood; 6,302 have reached it. Twenty years more and the ranks are thinned. Only 4,727, or less than half of those who entered life fifty-five years ago, are left. And now death comes more frequently. Every year the ratio of mortality steadily increases, and at seventy there are not a thousand survivors. A scattered few live on to the close of the century, and at the age of 106 years the drama is ended. The last man is dead.—New York Tribune.

BOOKS BY POST.—The Post-office authorities are rapidly extending the privilege of sending books, pamphlets, magazines, and reviews, &c. at 6d. per half-pound weight, to all our colonies and dependencies. The privilege is already extended to the West Indies, Canada, Cape Town, Nova Scotia, Ceylon, Malta, Gibraltar, Ionian Islands, Mauritius, Bermuda, Heligoland, Newfoundland, and Hong-Kong. There is no doubt that the privilege will be extended shortly to Australia.

ACCIDENT TO LORD CAMPBELL.—On Thursday evening, at about a quarter past eight o'clock, as Lord Campbell was riding across Southwark-bridge, attended by his groom, his horse, startled by the noise made by the gate on the Surrey side through which foot passengers pass, became restiff and threw him. His lordship was cut in the head by the fall, but is, we hope, not otherwise seriously injured. He was conveyed at once in a cab to his residence.

THE LATE HON. J. C. TALBOT, Q.C.—The Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Harrowby, the Earl of Carlisle, Mr. Whateley, Q.C. and other influential gentlemen, have been formed into a committee for the purpose of taking steps to perpetuate by some lasting memorial the remembrance of this lamented gentleman's public and private virtues. It is intended at once to found one or more scholarships or exhibitions, bearing Mr. Talbot's name, for boys educated at the Charterhouse, in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and these will constitute the proposed memorial.

The benchers of the Middle Temple having reason to believe that some misapprehension has prevailed as to the existence of a vacancy in the readership of their society, have adjourned the election of a reader on jurisprudence and the civil law until Wednesday, the 14th July, and they have also enlarged the time for receiving the testimonials of candidates until Monday, July 12th. Full particulars of the duties and salary of the reader will be communicated by the under treasurer to all gentlemen desirous of becoming candidates.—Treasurer's Office, Middle Temple, June 28, 1852.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.—The Public Acts passed in the present session, up to Thursday, number thirty, and the Local Acts 117.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS

AMONG the many pamphlets on topics connected with the law which are continually issuing from the press, but, we fear, finding few readers, some deserve more attention than they receive. Such is a "Letter on Lord Brougham's Bill to abolish the District Courts of Bankruptcy," by a District Commissioner. It opposes the scheme for transferring Bankruptcy to the County Courts, the arguments for which are two-fold,—first, saving of expense; second, the having 398 places, instead of seven, at which the business of Bankruptcy will be conducted, to the infinite convenience of all the parties concerned. The writer of this pamphlet contends that there will be no saving of costs. Grant that he is right in this, it is a very secondary consideration. He argues also that the present distribution of Courts is satisfactory. He should ask those who live at a distance from a court town. Probably the writer has the good fortune to reside in a town where a Commissioner is located. If so, he cannot comprehend the inconvenience experienced by distant places. We have seen it and felt it. To the Profession it is a great grievance for an Attorney living at a distance from the court to be compelled either to travel to the court at great cost to his client, or to commit his case, whether of support, or opposition, or proof, to an Attorney in the court town. But if the business were transferred to the County Courts, almost every Attorney would be enabled to conduct his own bankruptcy business. As to the alleged unfitness of the County Court Judges for the business, it is a needless fear. They have proved themselves quite competent to the Insolvency business, why should they not with equal ease master that of Bankruptcy. It is not, and it needs not to be, more difficult. He who knows the one will with the utmost facility learn the other. Then he asserts that they will not have time to give it attention. For this, there would be the easy remedy of an increase in the number of the Judges. That would be no increased expense to the country, for the fees of the County Courts produce a greater revenue than their expenditure, so that they really cost the country nothing at all. If the business of bankruptcy were added, so would be the fees, and that would more than pay the cost of more Judges. In truth, no substantial objection can be urged against the transfer of Bankruptcy to the County Courts. The local business of the country will more and more be required to be done in the place where it arises, and where those interested in it can transact it without the formidable expense of journeys. The County Courts have given a taste for this localisation of tribunals, and the public will not, and ought not, to be satisfied, until they can procure justice there in all matters of administrative law, and in judicial business of small value or importance—whether it be the trial of demands, or the settlement of disputes, and whether at law, in equity, in bankruptcy, or in insolvency.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1852.

TO OUR READERS.

This being Election week, both for the convenience of our readers and of ourselves, we abbreviate the Leading Articles and other general matter, and take advantage of the pause to bring up a portion of the very heavy arrear of reports which the extraordinary industry of all the Courts during the last half-year has accumulated upon our table, and which we shall clear off as fast as possible; but three numbers of the Law Times in the week would not have enabled us to keep pace with the eleven Courts that have been actively at work during the last two months.

ADVOCACY IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

We have just seen a copy of the County Courts Improvement Act, and with great surprise we find a very important alteration in the "Advocates' clause," which must have been made in the House of Lords, after the Bill had been sent back by the Commons. The section now stands thus:—

10. And whereas by the said Act passed in the ninth and tenth years of her present Majesty it was enacted, that no person should be entitled to appear for any other party to any proceeding in any of the said courts, "unless he be an attorney of one of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record, or a barrister-at-law, instructed by such attorney on behalf of the party, or, by leave of the judge, or any person allowed by the judge to appear instead of such party, but that no barrister, attorney, or other person, except by leave of the judge, should be entitled to be heard to argue any question as counsel for any other person in any proceeding in any court holden under that Act:" be it enacted, that the said last-recited enactment be repealed; and that it shall be lawful for the party to the suit or other proceeding, or for an attorney of one of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record being an attorney acting generally in the action for such party, but not an attorney retained as an advocate by such first-mentioned attorney, or for a barrister retained by or on behalf of the party, on either side, but without any right of exclusive or pre-audience, or, by leave of the judge, for any other person allowed by the judge to appear instead of the party, to address the Court, but subject to such regulations as the judge may from time to time prescribe for the orderly transaction of the business of the court.

The words introduced at that latest stage of the measure were those which we have put in italics. It will be remembered that the Court of Q. B. some time ago expressed a very decided opinion that it was illegal for an Attorney to act as advocate retained by another Attorney, and that his only right to appear in any Court was as Attorney for the party. The new provision thus introduced converts the law, as pronounced by the Judges, into statute law; it does not make a new law, it merely confirms the law previously existing.

But it makes a considerable change in practice; for, notwithstanding the law, it was the universal custom of the Attorneys to give briefs to one another in the County Courts as well as in other inferior Courts. An Attorney able to talk conducted the case for the Attorney not so gifted with words.

The new provision in the County Courts Act, expressly forbidding such a practice there, cannot thus be tacitly set aside by the custom of the Profession. The County Court Judges will be compelled to take notice of it; and a contravention of it would probably cause the Attorney who did so to be struck off the rolls. As the law now is, an Attorney must conduct his own case in the County Court; or if he employs another to be an advocate for him, he must employ Counsel. If it be desired that the case shall be conducted by an Attorney, it will be necessary that the client shall retain (and for safety he should do so in writing) the very Attorney who is to appear in Court, and by him must the preliminary proceedings in the case be conducted. But we see no reason why it should not be competent for the Attorney, so retained by the client to be both Advocate and Attorney for him in the particular case, to employ the Attorney whose client the suitor is in other matters, as his agent, to assist him in getting up the case, so that the entire advantage of it may not go to the former.

Our readers must observe that this law is now actually in force, and act accordingly.

Undoubtedly in many instances very great inconvenience will result from the new provision. It is equally to be enforced in Courts where Counsel do and do not practise. Even if there be no Counsel, an Attorney cannot employ another Attorney to plead for him. He must conduct his own case in person. Our readers will understand the difficulty in which many of them will thus be placed. If it was necessary to declare by statute what is the law of advocacy by Attorneys, it should at least have been accompanied with the proviso, that it should be applicable only in such Courts as are attended by four Counsel at least, for a less number will not give to the suitor a fair choice of advocates.

Again we repeat our most anxious hope that, under no circumstances, will the Bar be tempted to take briefs in the County Courts but through the intervention of an Attorney. The new statute does not alter the rules of the Profession, it merely leaves to their sense of propriety that which had been improperly made a rule of law.

SOMETHING NEW.

We have received from Birmingham the following extraordinary document, which has been printed for circulation. We are informed that the place named as being the office of the Society, "34, St. Paul's-square," is the private residence of Mr. Kennedy, whose name appears as one of the counsel. Before we make any comment upon this, we desire to give to Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Grace, and Mr. Jones, an opportunity of publicly repudiating the document, if they can:—

MUTUAL LAW ASSOCIATION.

The object of this Society is to afford to Members the best legal advice and assistance without unreasonable charges.

Wills, Leases, Agreements, all kinds of Conveyancing, besides Court business, will be charged for on a system intelligible to the client, whereby the cost will be greatly diminished.

Opportunity will be afforded for settling disputes by Arbitration, at a small expense.

Honorary Directors.
(With power to add to their number.)
Dr. Eccles, New Hall-street.
John Boucher, Esq. Harborne-road.

Counsel.
Charles Rann Kennedy, Esq.
John Raymond Grace, Esq.

Secretary.
Mr. Morton Jones, Jun.

Solicitors are attached to the Society, who will transact the business of their department upon regulated terms. One important feature of the system is, that members may have personal access to Counsel for advice.

Any householder, in Birmingham or the neighbourhood, may become a Member, entitled to the advantages of the Society, on paying 5s. a year.

Quarterly meetings will be held, whereof due notice will be given.

For all particulars apply to the Secretary.

GOSSIP OF WESTMINSTER HALL.

BY ONE OF THE BRIEFLESS.

An incident which occurred shortly [illegible] end of last Term will serve to exemplify [illegible] of business in the Common Law Co[illegible], before the motions were called on, [illegible] Campbell, C.J. took occasion to remark th[illegible] it to be known to the Bar that every mo[illegible] any point at all discussible, must be b[illegible]

the notice of the full Court, and not moved before a single Judge in the Bail Court, which remark, in plain English, means this: "We are in a very destitute condition indeed; business is at a dreadfully low ebb; and we must make much of what little business we have left."

Before these remarks are published the ceremony of dissolving Parliament will have been completed. In the words of the Times, the legal reforms that have been effected during its session "will procure it lasting and honourable mention in the books of lawyers and the mouths of suitors. It has extended the operation of the County Courts; at the powerful instigation of Mr. JACOB OMNIUM (well-bragged THUNDERER!) it has abolished the Palace Court; it has made that alteration in the law of evidence which enabled Dr. ACHILLI to oppose his single testimony to that of a host of witnesses; it has relieved the Court of Chancery by the appointment of two Lords Justices; it has abolished the office of Masters in Chancery; and has made various other extensive reforms in the administration of Law and Equity, the true value of which time alone can shew." These and other legal reforms have been effected, and whether they are to be considered as improvements time alone can indeed shew; but in Westminster Hall it is anticipated that the amount of "honourable mention" as to some of these measures to be found "in the books of lawyers," will be small indeed. The boasted extension of the County Courts may indeed find eulogists in future works by Lord BROUGHAM and Sir JOHN JERVIS, but the junior Bar will not join very loudly in chorus. It would be well if some self-styled reformers of these days would hold ever present to their minds these excellent words of the great Lord HALE:—"The business and amendment of the laws is a choice and tender business, neither wholly to be omitted when the necessity requires, and yet very cautiously and warily to be undertaken, though the necessity may, or at least may seem, to require it."

The poor "Masters of the Chauncerie;" and they too are doomed! Theirs is an ancient office, and respectable for many associations. Associates and assistants to the Lord Chancellor, at one time they used to sit in the House of Lords, as also did the king's counsel. I imagine that Doctor BARKLEY, that Master of Chancery who, "sitting in the parliament-house, upon occasion of speeche amongst the lords of certaine officers to have certaine priviledges, without askinge leave, got up, and entred into a speeche of desiringe, that the Masters of the Chancery might alsoe bee comprised in the sayed priviledge then on foote;" I imagine that stout upholder of the dignity of his office would have stared to see a Bill introduced for reducing both him and it into nonentities.

THE LEGISLATOR.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LAW REFORM.

THURSDAY, July 1.—On the question that the Consolidated Fund Appropriation Bill be read a third time, Lord BROUGHAM rose and said that, having on the previous day recommended her Majesty's Government to issue a commission for the purpose of inquiring into the practice and jurisdiction of County Courts, he begged now to suggest further, that the frame of that commission should be similar to that which was issued last year on the subject of Chancery reform. He begged also to take that opportunity of expressing his regret that County Court judges were not enabled to act as magistrates in counties without any other qualification than that of their judgeship. He believed that great advantage would be derived from the justices in quarter sessions being enabled to avail themselves of the assistance of the County Court judges, in the same way as the magistrates in Ireland were enabled to avail themselves of the services of the assistant-barristers in that country. There were several things in the practice not merely of the local judicatures, but of the Superior Courts, which he hoped and trusted not many years, he hoped even not many months, would elapse before he saw a remedy applied to them. He particularly alluded to that most grievous omission in the practice of our Courts of Law whereby they were left without a public prosecutor. Nothing could be worse, he maintained, than the present arrangement, by which the judges performed the incompatible duties of both prosecutors and judges. This was a reform which it required no legislative measure to initiate. It merely required the direction of the Secretary of State and the consent of the magistrates. When he (Lord Brougham) held the Great Seal, in 1834, his noble friend, Lord Besborough (then Home Secretary), and himself, had arranged to introduce the matter gradually, and had intended to commence with the Central Criminal Court, but their arrangement, unfortunately, was not carried into effect. In many counties the clerk of the peace acted as public prosecutor, and in Yorkshire and Lancashire the magistrates were in the habit of employing the same counsel to perform the office of public prosecutor.—The MARQUIS of SALISBURY said, he could only repeat what had been said on the previous day by the noble earl at the head of her Majesty's Government, viz. that the subjects to which the noble and learned lord had called their attention should not be lost sight of.

THE NEW MILITIA ACT.—The New Militia Act, containing thirty-eight clauses, has been printed. By the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 32, all proceedings for, and relating to, the balloting or enrolment of militia men, stands suspended until the 1st of October next, subject to the power of her Majesty, by order in council, to direct proceedings before the expiration of that period, "And whereas it is expedient for the better fulfilling the purposes of the institution of the militia with as little disturbance as may be to the ordinary occupations of the people, that the laws for raising and regulating the militia should be amended." The Act proceeds to state that regulations may be made by the Secretary of State as to the officers of the militia. The number of private militia men is not to exceed 80,000, of whom 50,000 may be raised in the present year, and 30,000 in 1853, by voluntary enlistment. The bounty money is not to exceed £6, and the periodical payment or allowance is not to exceed after the rate of 2s. 6d. per month during the term of service for which the volunteer is enrolled. Where men cannot be raised by voluntary enlistment, her Majesty in council may order a ballot. Men not liable to the ballot after thirty-five years of age. The militia may be called out for training more than once a year. In case of inv[illegible] or imminent danger Her Majesty may raise t[illegible] militia to 120,000 men.

THE NEW CHANCERY ACTS.—The three new Chancery acts passed in the late session have been printed. The first, which received the Royal assent on the 30th ult. is "An Act to abolish the Office of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, and to make Provision for the more speedy and efficient Despatch of Business in the said Court." This Act contains 61 clauses, working out the preamble, which declares that "proceedings before the Masters in ordinary of the High Court of Chancery are attended with great delay and expense, and it is expedient that the business now disposed of in the office of such Masters should be transacted by and under the more immediate direction and control of the judges of the said court." On the first day of Michaelmas Term (November 2), Masters Farrer and Brougham are to be released from their duties; and as the state of business shall allow, other Masters are to be released. The salaries are to be paid as compensation allowances. The second Act, which received the Royal Assent on Thursday last, is "An Act to amend the Practice and Course of Proceedings in the High Court of Chancery." There are sixty-seven clauses in this Act, which will take effect from and after the 1st of November next. This Act discontinues the practice of engrossing Bills on parchment, and writs of subpœna and summons are abolished. Printed bills are to be served. The third Act, which received the Royal Assent on the same day, is "An Act for the Relief of the Justices of the High Court of Chancery." The object of this statute, which contains fifty-six clauses, is to abolish certain fees and emoluments now paid to officers of the court for business transacted by them. The officers are to be paid by salaries, and the fees paid, until otherwise ordered, and after order made, the fees are not to be received in money, but by means of stamps. The Act, which will principally take effect from the 28th of October, abolishes certain offices, &c. for the benefit of the suitors.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

LORD CAMPBELL'S Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 11) was designed to meet the difficulty that arose in the famous case of the Birds. A question has now arisen upon that. By this Act, on an indictment for robbery, if the jury are satisfied that there was an assault with intent to rob, they might so find, and the defendant might be punished as if he had been convicted upon an indictment for an assault with intent to rob. But several clauses in the former statute impose different punishments in such a case, one section limiting it to three years' imprisonment and others extending it to transportation for life. In Reg. v. Mitchell, 19 Law T. Rep. 221, the question was whether transportation could be inflicted upon a conviction under the above section of Lord CAMPBELL'S Act. The Court of Criminal Appeal stated the law thus. Lord CAMPBELL said, "Where the robbery charged is of an aggravated description, the assault with intent to rob may be punished with transportation as an aggravated assault. If the indictment was for simple robbery it could not include such an assault as would justify that punishment."

FOREIGN DESERTERS ACT.—The new Act, to enable her Majesty to carry into effect arrangements made with foreign powers for the apprehension of seamen who desert from their ships has just been issued, and is in force. Her Majesty may, "by order in council, declare that deserters from foreign ships may be apprehended, and carried on board their respective ships." After the publication of such orders in the London Gazette, all magistrates are to aid in recovering deserters from the ships of foreign powers, and may apprehend them and send them on board. Further, it is enacted that "if any person protects or harbours any deserter who is liable to be apprehended under this Act, knowing or having reason to believe that he has deserted, such person shall, for every such offence, be liable to a penalty not exceeding 10*l.*; and every such penalty shall be recovered, paid, and applied in the same manner as penalties for harbouring or protecting deserters from British merchant ships." The Act is to be cited the "Foreign Deserters Act, 1852."

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

THE House of Lords, in Macpherson v. Macpherson, 19 Law T. Rep. 221, has laid down the following rule of construction for a will, and which the reader should note carefully, for it overrules and modifies materially a series of cases. It was here determined that where a testator directs his estate to be converted and laid out in a particular investment, without any special direction, to accumulate or add interest to capital, the tenant for life is entitled to the interest actually accruing from the moment of testator's death, though the investment so directed was not made.

In Palk v. Skinner, 19 Law T. Rep. 228, upon a traverse of the right of way in an action for obstruction, plaintiff proved enjoyment for twenty years; but during portions of the twenty years the servient tenement was held under leases for years exceeding three years. The user commenced antecedently to the granting of any of the leases, and no proceedings were taken by the reversioner within three years after the determination of such user to resist the plaintiff's action. It was held that there was evidence for the jury of the right claimed, and that sec. 8 of the Prescription Act applies only to cases where an enjoyment for forty years is relied upon as giving an absolute right, and not to cases where twenty years' user only is set up.

The new Wills Act is given in our last. It is very short, but we fear not very intelligible.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

WINDING UP.

A. by will devised his real estate to B. and appointed C. his executor, who received the dividends on his share in a Joint-Stock Banking Company for many years. At the death of A. the company had no existing debts. Afterwards debts were incurred. D.'s name was placed on the list of contributories, but having shewn that he had administered the personal estate, the MASTER put B.'s name on the list as the devisee of A. He was held by the LORD CHANCELLOR to have rightly done so, because by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 104, debts of every description are charged on the real estate of a testator; consequently, a future debt, arising out of a previous obligation, is a debt within its provisions. (Ex parte Harmer's Devisees, 19 Law T. Rep. 223.)

The case of Ex parte Yelland, 19 Law T. Rep. 224, was that of a shareholder in a company completely registered. Two shares were allotted to A. on which he paid the deposit, and his name was returned to the registry-office as a shareholder, but he never executed the deed of settlement. The deed provided that, immediately on its execution, &c. the party should assume the liabilities and privileges of a shareholder, but not before. Nevertheless he was held to be a contributory. He had made a contract which was binding in equity.

DIRECT BIRMINGHAM AND OXFORD. — On Tuesday a meeting in this matter was held before the Master in Chancery Brougham, to make a call on the members of the managing committee, amounting to 500*l*. each, to discharge the debts, and a further call of 250*l*. on each to defray the expenses of winding up; the total sum to be provided for, as set forth in the report of Mr. Hutton, the official manager, under both these heads, being about 10,000*l*. The call proceeds upon the principle just laid down by the House of Lords, in the appeal of Hutton v. Bright, the effect of it (which will now be the governing law in all these long vexed cases) being to make members of provisional or managing committees liable for such debts as they authorised to be contracted; but all members of provisional committees, whose cases are similar to that of Upfill, and who only took shares, are only to be held liable to the extent of the deposits on those shares, the Lords having left the question undecided as to whether the latter are to be liable to contribute their proportion for the expense of winding matters up. Acting upon this principle yesterday, his Honour Master Brougham, made the proposed call on all the members of the managing committee, with the exception of General Fitzgerald, Mr. Spottiswoode, and Major Amsinck, who are to be at liberty to shew cause against it at the next meeting, the Master observing, that the only way to deal with these difficult questions was upon the general principle of ascertaining whether, in connection with the constitution of these bodies, the members composing them gave sufficient authority, either direct or implied, to render them liable for expenses incurred. The parties on whom the call was to be made, would in every case have credit given them by the official manager for what they had already paid.

DIRECT WEST-END AND CROYDON.—A call of 50*l*. per share was made by Master in Chancery Tinney, to pay off the debts of this company. An application was made by Capt. T. Graves, a member of the provisional committee, accepting 100 shares, to be taken off the list of liability, on the ground that, having been abroad, he could not answer to his case in court. Mr. H. Harris, solicitor to the company, stated that, during the last two years the necessary legal notices had been received at Captain Graves's residence, and also by his agents, whereupon the Master refused the application with costs.

EASTERN COUNTIES AND SOUTHEND.—A call of 2*l*. per share has been declared by the Master in Chancery Sir W. Horne, to pay off a sum of 6,206*l*. declared by the official manager necessary to be provided for, giving credit to each contributory for the amount he has already paid.

PETITIONS, ORDERS, MEETINGS, APPOINTMENTS, CALLS, &c.

[Announced, issued, and made, during the past week]

Universal Gas Light Company.—Call of 3*l*. per share on 15th July.—Rose.

Tontine Life Assurance Company.—Call of 7s. 6d. per share on 28th July.—Horne.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

THE County Courts Improvement Act is now before us, and it is in actual operation at this moment.

Originally it was an Extension Bill, for it contemplated giving a certain jurisdiction in Equity to the County Courts. That position of it was, however, expunged in consequence of the Reforms in Equity Procedure, with which it would have interfered, and therefore it is not now an extension Act, but only that which it is entitled, "An Act to facilitate and arrange Proceedings in the County Courts," and as a short title we have given to it the name of the "County Courts Improvement Act," by which we shall describe it for the future.

The two principal features of this measure we have already particularly introduced to our readers in leading articles, namely, the provision that gives costs to the Attorneys in the County Courts, and that which regulates the practice of advocacy there.

The costs section cannot be carried into operation until the five Judges are appointed to frame the scale of fees, and are approved by the Lord Chancellor. The Advocates' clause is now in force, and it is commented upon in a leading article in another column. The practitioners must therefore take care to make all their arrangements in accordance with the unexpected alterations it has introduced.

The other provisions of the new Act, which consists of nineteen sections only, merely permit appeals to be heard out of Term, and give the Judges power to make rules for regulating them; enable a Judge at chambers to give costs in cases of concurrent jurisdiction, &c.; permit the re-issuing of warrants of distress; give further protection to officers; empower the Queen to order Courts of Local Jurisdiction to be excluded from the jurisdiction of the County Courts; provide a more efficient audit of the clerks' accounts; limit, or rather extend, the amount of the salaries of the Judges to 1,500*l*. and of the clerks to 700*l*. per annum; enable the LORD CHANCELLOR to give retiring pensions to Judges; forbid Judges to practise at the Bar or as special pleaders, and direct that no clerk shall in future be appointed for more than one district; and establish a registry of County Courts judgments for sums above 10*l*.

All these are improvements, so far as they go, but they are only a portion of those that are required to make the County Courts as efficient as they should and might be made, and to which, before the next session of Parliament, we shall ask the attention of our readers, in hope to be as successful in promoting future improvements as we have been in promoting those now described.

ENGLISH INSTRUMENTS SENT ABROAD.

I HAVE been informed that a written instrument prepared in England, and sent to be used (as evidence?) in a foreign court, requires to be written on one sheet of paper (stitching not being allowed); and that any clerical errors it contains must be verified by a magistrate or other officer of the law.

Will you, or any of your readers, favour me by stating the rule applicable in this case, by referring to an authority, by saying whether the sheets of any such instrument may be pasted together or not, and by naming the country or countries to which the rule applies? J. L.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

Lowndes v. The Earl of Stamford, 19 Law T. Rep. 227, was a question as to the apportionment of a salary. A. covenanted with B. to pay him 1,800*l*. a-year, half-yearly payments, so long as he should hold the office of manager of his estates. But if A. should revoke the appointment without just cause, to pay B. from and after such revocation 1,000*l*. yearly by half-yearly deposits. A. did revoke the appointment, in the middle of one of the half years, without just cause. It was held that B. could not recover a proportionate part of the half-year's salary which was claimed under sec. 2 of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 22. It was not an office within the meaning of the statute, not being of a public nature, and no rent or payment issuing. "The time fixed by the statute when the apportionment is made recoverable is, when the entire of which such apportionment shall form part shall become due and payable. This contemplates a case where the party who has to pay will have to pay for the whole period to some one, and not a case where the payment entirely ceases with the determination of the interest of the person receiving the apportionment, and where the entire portion, of which this forms a part, never does become due and payable."

The case of Rothschild v. The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 229, which involved the question as to the liability of carriers for loss of property stolen from them upon a railway, upon their undertaking to deliver, loss by Queen's enemies, robbers, and dangers of the sea, roads, and rivers, of whatever nature or kind soever excepted" has been decided by the Court of Ex. against the company of carriers. The exception was held not to include theft, but only robbery by violence. This is a very important decision, for if carriers intend to protect themselves against loss by pilfering they must introduce a special proviso for that purpose.

In Micheson v. Nicoll, 19 Law T. Rep. 229, the charterer of a vessel was held to be entitled to stow as many goods as the vessel can reasonably convey in her hold and other parts usually appropriated to cargo. If more is shipped, so as to occupy the cabin, the shipowner is entitled to freight for the excess at the current rate of the day at the place of shipment.

In Bankruptcy, it has been decided that the commissioner cannot grant a certificate of conformity under the arrangement clauses, unless the resolution and agreement have been carried into effect, and the creditors of the petitioning trader satisfied. (Allcard v. Wesson, 19 Law T. Rep. 230.)

It seems that many of the almanacs and pocket-books are in error with respect to the proper stamp upon a promissory note payable on demand. It was ruled in Escrit v. Mason, 19 Law T. Rep. 232, that they are subject to a 5s. and not to a 3s. 6d. stamp, as is generally understood.

ASSURANCE CHRONICLE.

THE value of the farming stock in England insured in the various fire offices throughout the kingdom in the year ending the 25th of December, 1851, was 54,935,053*l*. The amount insured in Scotland within the year was 4,069,308*l*.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Timothy Crosby, of Stockton, in the county palatine of Durham, gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY THE LORD LIEUTENANT OF CARDIGANSHIRE.—George Williams Parry, esq. and John Propert, esq. to be deputy-lieutenants.

J. M. Herbert, esq. judge of the County Court of Monmouthshire, has appointed, under the sanction of the Lord Chancellor, Horace Shepherd, esq. of Usk, clerk to the County Court of Tredegar, in the county of Monmouth, in the place of Richard Waters, esq. resigned.

GRAY'S-INN, July 7.—At a pension of the Honourable Society of Gray's-inn, holden this day, Reginald Robert Walpole, esq. was elected to the office of reader of the society upon the law of real property and conveyancing, devises, and bequests.

NEW SERJEANTS-AT-LAW.—On Wednesday last Mr. Ralph Thomas, of the Oxford Circuit, and Mr. R. Matthews, of the Northern, were called to the degree of Serjeants-at-Law, and sworn in before the Lord Chancellor.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Lord Chancellor by the "Master in Chancery Abolition Act" being empowered to nominate conveyancing counsel to be the standing Conveyancing Counsel to the Court according to one of the provisions of this Act, enabling the Court of Chancery or a judge of the Court at chambers to act upon the opinion of conveyancing counsel in cases in which it has been usual for the Master to take such an opinion for his assistance on questions of title or on settlement of draughts, the Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen to fill those positions in the first instance—Mr. Brodie, Mr. Coote, Mr. Christie, Mr. Hayes, Mr. Jarman, and Mr. Lewin.

INCUMBERED ESTATES COURT.—The only sale yesterday was that of the estate of the Rev. Thomas Brady, consisting of a perpetual rent-charge of 64*l*. 12s. 3d. and the advowson and right of presentation to the rectory of Tomgrany, with 6,995 statute acres of land in the county of Clare. The net profit rent was estimated at 1,135*l*. per annum, but according to the Commissioners' valuation, it was rated at a much higher figure, namely, 1,728*l*. The gross sum realised by the sale of the entire property sold, subject to a jointure of 462*l*. a year for the life of Mrs. Anne Brady, aged fifty-six years, was 20,440*l*. equal to eighteen years' purchase on the net rental, but nearly one-third less, assuming the Commissioners' valuation to be the correct one.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY FOR AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

The annual dinner of this society was held on Saturday. Lord Brougham in the chair. The following are passages from the speeches:—

LOCAL COURTS.

Lord BROUGHAM said he might draw their attention, specially, to the subject of local judicatures, on which they now had six or seven years' experience,—not a long experience certainly, but one on which ample reliance might be placed from the wide surface over which during that period it had been spread. The great, invaluable, and necessary light of experience was indispensable to any safe and salutary reform of the legal system, and having now had the benefit of that light let their aim be to correct existing defects, and do all that could be done to correct and extend the local judicatures. In "bringing justice home to every man's door," they ought not to depart so far from a due centralization as to run the risk of injuring the general system of our jurisprudence or ruining the profession of the law, and one of the most important and difficult inquiries which would be intrusted to that commission, which he hoped to see issued on the subject would be to reconcile the due distribution of local judicatures with the general interests of our jurisprudence, and the welfare of that Profession with which, as supplying the judges of the land, Lord Denman in his letter had well observed, the interests of the community at large were bound up. Between the interests of the Bar and those of the suitors God forbid that there should be any hesitation, but he believed that by improving the proceedings of the Superior Courts both suitors and the Profession would be great gainers, and no sacrifice of either to the other would be required. Whatever improvements, however, might be effected in this way, he held it to be impossible to dispense with local courts.

TRANSFER OF LAND.

Mr. J. STEWART, whose name was coupled with the toast of "the Free Transfer of Land," in acknowledging the toast, said that that question had received a very considerable accession of strength from the labours of the present Parliament. The Act for the Enfranchisement of Copyholds was a very important measure, and might now be regarded as settled by the deliberations of the committee of the House of Lords on principles which secured a complete and satisfactory adjustment of the whole question. Those principles were applicable to freeholds as well, for they had all been striving to obtain a shorter form of conveyancing. While a sixty years' title to land was requisite, the number of purchasers must be comparatively small; and if the title were shortened the number of purchasers must be proportionally increased. The Copyhold Enfranchisement Bill had shewn that this could be done. While the purchase of land was surrounded by such enormous expenses as was at present the case, the value of the land must suffer proportionally; and on this point he complimented the Lord Chancellor for having inserted a clause to tax and moderate the charges connected with copyhold enfranchisement. A similar provision ought to be made with reference to the transfer of freehold property. Consols were now at thirty-three years' purchase, while land in the most favoured situations was only at thirty years' purchase. Now, he would venture to ask if the transfer of land was placed on a proper footing it would raise its value to forty years' purchase ten years hence? Why should land across the Channel be at forty years' purchase when in this favoured country it stood at thirty, and, though a better and safer investment, was under the price of Consols? The improvements which he advocated would not only increase the value of his property to the owner, but benefit all classes connected with the soil, down even to the agricultural labourer.

THE LAW TIMES.

LAW REFORMS.

WE hope we have given the best proof that the LAW TIMES is friendly to rational Law Reform, by not only framing and proposing some not unimportant improvements in the law, but by procuring them to be proposed to Parliament in the positive form of Bills, and obtaining for them the sanction of the Legislature. But we are equally desirous that there should be no misunderstanding as to the kind of Law Reform we are desirous of promoting. We are for reform, not for destruction. Recognising the Conservative principle in this, as in other duties of statesmanship, we are averse to many of the wild projects that are put forth by persons of more enthusiasm than judgment, and whose schemes, if carried out, would certainly annihilate the Profession, and be of very questionable advantage to the public.

Now, we do not, and cannot, forget that the LAW TIMES is the Journal and Advocate of the Profession. It is our duty and our vocation to protect and promote the interests of the Profession, and to oppose resolutely whatever is calculated to inflict upon it material injury. The Lawyers are not called upon to commit suicide. They are no more to be expected to immolate themselves upon the altar of that very ungrateful deity, the public, than any other class of men; nor are we, as representing the Lawyers, and watching over their interests, bound to do more than to advance whatever improvements may be made without any serious injury to them. The public interests have abundance of advocates and protectors in the entire newspaper press of the country, and to their zealous, and often not very unscrupulous, advocacy we may safely commit them. Projects of Law Reform are broached now, and supported in high quarters, the inevitable consequences of which, if successful, would be to destroy utterly the present status of both branches of the Profession. All such schemes will find no favour here. We shall steadily promote practical improvements in the law, as we have done already, but with equal steadiness we shall resist those measures of destruction which would sweep away the Law and the Lawyers together—a consummation, doubtless, eagerly desired by a considerable portion of the country, but which ought not to find favour and support from any who have regard for the well-being of the Profession.

As Law Reforms of all kinds will for a long time to come continue to be projected alike by dreamers and schemers and by practical men, we are desirous that it should be well understood by all our readers what is the course we purpose to take, the principle that will guide us in considering propositions and the objects we shall keep in view in all that we support or oppose; that is to say, improvement, not revolution; and the preservation and advancement of the Profession, and not its destruction.

THE PROFESSION IN THE LOCAL COURTS.

THE extraordinary document from Birmingham which we published last week appears opportunely, to give warning of the danger that will arise from any departure by the Bar from those rules that have hitherto governed its relationship with the other branch of the Profession. We have protested, and we shall continue to protest, against the project that has been mooted, and even now, we believe, is in progress, for setting aside the professional law that forbids a Barrister to accept a brief without the intervention of an Attorney; and if evidence be demanded of the sources of our alarm, we could not produce more startling proof than that afforded by the prospectus of the cheap Law Society sent to us from Birmingham.

Two gentlemen have chosen to emancipate themselves from obedience to the established code of the Profession; they have done what others are now preparing to do; they have dispensed with the instructions of an Attorney. It was obvious that they could not stop there. In the absence of an Attorney, they must do a great portion of the Attorney's work; they must take the evidence from the witnesses, and set it down upon paper; they must listen to the story of the client, and take a note of that. Call it by what name they will, this is a brief; not the less so, because inartistically drawn, and not quite so full, accurate, and instructive as if it had been prepared by a skilful Attorney. The ice broken, it is easy to fall through. Having thus set aside the Attorney in one of his functions, why not in others? Facilis est descensus Averni. The boundary once removed that separates by an unmistakeable line the duties of Barrister and Attorney, who shall set up another? Every man must be to himself his own guide, and will place the barrier just where it suits his own convenience. Some may possibly stop at the mere receipt of a brief from the suitor in person; others, less scrupulous, will take the statements of the suitors and witnesses, and prepare their own briefs; others will go a step or two further, and at last there will be found men who will even have the effrontery to get up societies for cheap law to be done by contract at so much per week! Ecce signum!

What has been done at Birmingham will now be done everywhere, if the Bar should become localized, and enter into competition with the Attorneys, instead of acting with them upon the old terms of relationship. Removed from the great centre, where the professional check operates most forcibly, they will first cease to feel, and then come to disregard it. In the fierce struggle for existence, the less scrupulous will begin, and the more delicate minds will be tempted, nay, almost compelled to follow the example. If, for instance, there be six or eight Barristers at Birmingham forming a local Bar in the County Court and Bankruptcy Court, and they should resolve to adhere strictly to the rules of the Profession, and not to advise a client or accept a brief, except through the intervention of an Attorney, and two of their body, setting these rules at defiance, announce that they will see clients and conduct cases on the instructions of the party, without an Attorney, it is certain that the public will go to the cheapest shop for their law, and the regular practitioners will be deserted for the offices of the Society whose prospectus we published last week. In such case what are the men to do by whom the rules are observed? They lose their business certainly. Few purses of Barristers are deep enough, or their tempers firm enough, to endure the trial; they must meet their rivals on equal terms, or yield to them. It will not be difficult to foresee the end of the conflict. All will be degraded together.

We are confident that the localization of the Bar will have the effect of lowering its character, even under the most auspicious circumstances. But if this change in its distribution be accompanied with a change of practice in its relationship to the Attorneys, it will be irretrievably ruined. A low-class Barrister is a lower class of man than the low-class Attorney. The greater the height from which a man falls the deeper his plunge. Reputation and status once forfeited cannot be recovered, and the lost man is careless about the limits of his perdition. In this, as in most other affairs of life, it is the first step that is fatal. Blot out the existing barrier, and before a new one can be erected the flood will have poured in, and the Bar, as an honourable and honoured institution, will be swept away.

And whatever lowers the position of one branch of the Profession will injure the status of the other. The Bar cannot be degraded without the Attorneys being affected, nor could the Attorneys be lessened in esteem without the Bar partaking of the popular odium. Both, therefore, have the deepest interest in preserving from invasion on either side the privileges, duties, and functions of both. Doubtless, the Bar is doomed to a mighty change, and a diminution that will almost be an extinction. If this fate be inevitable, let it be endured with dignity, but let it not strive to maintain a dishonoured existence by invading the province of the Attorneys. If it must die, let it be with decency, folding its robe, and looking manfully into the face of heaven.

A COMMISSION FOR THE COUNTY COURTS.

AT the close of the Session Lord BROUGHAM suggested to the Government the propriety of issuing a commission similar to those which have overhauled the Procedure in the Equity and Common Law Courts, for the purpose of investigating all local tribunals, with a view to the consolidation of the law that regulates them, and the improvement of procedure thereon.

Such an inquiry would be most useful, and could not fail to yield valuable fruit. The County Courts were an experiment; they have succeeded to some extent; but they are still capable of immense improvement. The collected experience of the Judges, the officers, and the practitioners, could now provide the necessary materials for extending the jurisdiction of the County Courts to many matters in which a cheap and speedy process is necessary for the ends of justice, and for improving the procedure there in divers particulars in which it is now very defective. And not only would the County Courts be within the purview of such a commission; it would inquire also into the uses of Quarter Sessions, and if they are worth retaining, now that there is nothing left to them but criminal business, which might so easily and advantageously be transferred, the lesser offences to the County Courts, and the larger ones to the Judges of Assize, taking more frequent circuits.

If it should be deemed desirable, and few would seriously question its propriety, to make the County Courts a perfect system of local tribunals, with power to determine disputes of all kinds, and to administer justice in all matters with no other limit than value; if they are to have a jurisdiction in Bankruptcy, in Equity, in Criminal Law, there must be more Judges; the officers must be better paid and confined to their official duties; the whole system must be improved, and instead of stationary Judges they should, as in the Superior Courts, be sent from London to the County Courts circuits. Once let it be a recognised fact that the County Courts are the local tribunals of the land; that they are established now beyond all possibility of overthrow; that opposition to them is a waste of time and labour; and that the wise course will now be to make the best of them, and it will not be difficult to suggest many ways in which they might be improved and extended so as to do good service to the Profession as well as to the public.

We trust, therefore, that Lord BROUGHAM's hint will be taken, and such a commission issued as he has suggested. It is a wide and interesting field for inquiry, and great benefit must result from its labours.

THE LAW DIGEST.

THE new Part of WISE and EVANS's Law Digest, containing all the cases decided during the last half-year, so arranged that the practitioner can find in a moment what is the latest law on any subject, is now ready. Great exertions have been made to bring it out in time for the Assizes.

CORRUPT PRACTICES AT ELECTIONS.

THE Times has circulated a string of questions which it asserts may be put to Members on an investigation into alleged bribery. But it was not stated that this sort of investigation could only be pursued under certain circumstances, and hence a general impression has been produced that there has been some alteration in the ordinary law of Election Petitions, by which the detection and punishment of corruption will be greatly facilitated. As this is quite an error, we hasten to set our readers right upon it, lest they should lead their clients into a difficulty.

The Corrupt Practices at Elections Act, which has just become law, makes no alteration in the law of Election Petitions, by which alone the returns can be questioned and Members unseated or seated. The effect of that statute is merely to institute a searching inquiry into a borough reported as guilty of general corruption, with a view to its disfranchisement. It is only upon such an inquiry under this statute that the questions published by the Times could be put to a Member or Candidate. Under an Election Petition, the procedure remains as before, with one important exception—that now, by the new Law of Evidence Act, the Sitting Members are "competent and compellable" to be witnesses against themselves.

But their examination will be subject to all the rules of evidence. They might, if they dare to do so, claim the privilege of refusing to answer questions that would make them liable to prosecution, and a wide field for ingenuity will be opened in the devising of questions the replies to which would not endanger the witness, and yet produce the desired revelations. It is quite certain that if the Member were to claim the protection, a very small proportion of the published queries could be put to him. He may be asked what money he spent, but not how he spent it. The greatest advantage will arise from the ready proof of agency, which will be thus supplied. It must be remembered, too, that still the privileged communication between attorney and client will be an obstacle as great as ever it was to the discovery of the very truth.

The Law of Evidence will not be perfected until all evidence given in a Court of Justice is protected and treated as a privileged communication, so far that it should never be used against the person giving it, and then the claim of individual witnesses for protection, by which so much truth is now concealed, might be abolished, and no other exemption from answering allowed than in such matters as the law properly permits to be privileged, — actual communications between husband and wife, attorney and client, doctor and patient, and a few others which are necessary for the conduct of the business of life and the intercourse of man and man. We subjoin the string of questions suggested by the Times, as they may be useful hereafter:—

1. Who were your agents at the election? 2. Will you swear that there were none other employed by you or by your solicitors? 3. Who were your solicitors, and what clerk of theirs attended the election? 4. Will you swear that A. was not your agent? 5. Do you not know that A. was actually engaged in promoting your election? (All particulars as to acquaintance and connection with A. will be inquired into.) 6. Will you swear that you do not believe that A. acted for you? 7. Have you never spoken of him to any one as either employed, or at least acting on your part in the election, or immediately previous to it? 8. Do you believe that B. never received any money, or any promise of money, to act for you, from your committee, or from any one else taking part for you? 9. Who were your committee? 10. Will you swear that you never spoke to or communicated with any of your committee during the election, or during the imme- [...]1. How did you happen to stand for the borough? 12. With whom did you communicate on the subject before agreeing to stand? 13. Who besides were present? 14. Was anything, and what, said about the expenses? 15. How much did you undertake to give, or to become answerable for? 16. Did any person, and who, on your behalf, communicate with persons having interest in the borough? 17. What passed between you and that person before the communication? 18. What report did he make to you after the communication? 19. What agreement or undertaking was finally come to? 20. Will you swear that nothing further was said or written about expenses? 21. How much did you suppose the legal expenses to be? 22. What were the particulars stated of those expenses? What steps were taken by you, or directed to be taken, in order to ascertain whether or not the expenses stated to be required were real expenses? (All the details of the alleged expenses will then be minutely gone into.) 23. Will you swear that you did not believe more was paid by some persons on your behalf than the sum you had agreed to pay? 24. Will you swear you had no suspicion that more was paid by some one, and by whom? 25. How much have you paid in all? 26. Has any more been demanded, and by whom? Do you not believe, or at least suspect, that some such demand has been made on your solicitor, or agent, or on your committee, or on some person connected with you in some way? 27. Will you swear that you do not apprehend or expect to have more to pay? 28. Who were your bankers before the election? 29. Had they any correspondent in the borough? [An examination of the banker's account, and of each item which could by possibility have relation to the election, will then be gone into, and the party will be called on to explain every particular, and state his knowledge, his belief, his suppositions, his suspicions, his conjectures, as to each item, and the proceedings of the persons found to have received money, and as to his knowledge of and connection with those persons.] 30. Do you believe, suppose, conjecture, or suspect that any of your committee or any other person taking an interest in your election ever promised any one that you would use your influence to obtain any place or favour from the Government for him or any of his relations? (This question will be divided into several, of course.) 31. Have you been applied to, either immediately before or since the election, for your influence to obtain any place or favour for persons connected with the borough? 32. Do you believe, suppose, conjecture, or suspect, that any one, and who, gave or promised any money or other valuable thing to any person connected with the borough, with a view to secure your election? (Question divided as in 30.) 33. Have you, or has any one connected with you, or acting in your interest, promised to pay any money on account of the election after the trial of the petition is over? 34. Has there been any undertaking of this kind come to by you or your friends? 35. Do you not believe or apprehend that you will have to pay money on account of the election after the trial is over? 36. Do you not believe, conjecture, or suspect, that some person on your behalf has been called on since the election to pay for your expenses connected with it? 37. Do you not believe or suppose that some person has engaged to pay, or come to an understanding that he will pay, something on your account after the trial is over, and who?

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLDS.

THE Act for effecting this object was much altered in the House of Lords, and all the changes were accepted by the Commons. The following is an outline of the new statute. It will be seen to differ materially from the scheme that was sent up from the Commons, of which a description was then given in these columns.

At any time after the next admittance, after the 1st July, 1853, the tenant so admitted, or the lord, may compel enfranchisement, by giving notice in writing to the other of such his desire, and the consideration to be paid for it is to be determined, if they cannot agree, by two valuers, one to be appointed by the lord, the other by the tenant, with power to appoint an umpire. The award is to be made within forty-two days after the appointment. If either party neglect, within twenty-eight days after notice, to appoint a valuer, the commissioners are to appoint one, and if the valuers cannot agree and do not appoint an umpire within a week, the commissioners are to appoint one.

The valuers are to determine the compensation thus:—

The valuers shall determine the value of the manorial rights and incidents of tenure from which the lands proposed to be dealt with are to be enfranchised, and shall determine the compensation to be received by the lord for such enfranchisement in manner hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, where such enfranchisement shall have been effected at the instance of the tenant, the compensation shall be a gross sum of money to be paid at the time of the completion of the enfranchisement, or in cases where the compensation exceeds twenty pounds, the same, if the said commissioners shall so direct, and if all persons (if any) who shall have any mortgage, charge, or incumbrance affecting the lands enfranchised, and which shall have been in existence at the time of the passing of this Act, shall consent thereto, may remain as a first charge, under the provisions of this Act, on the lands enfranchised, until the expiration of such time from the day of such completion as the said commissioners shall appoint, but not exceeding in any case ten years; and interest at the rate of four pounds per centum per annum shall be payable thereon, or on such part thereof as shall from time to time remain unpaid, from the time of such completion as aforesaid half-yearly until full payment thereof, and where such enfranchisement shall have been effected at the instance of the lord the compensation shall be an annual rent-charge to be issuing out of the lands enfranchised: provided always, that the parties to any enfranchisement under this Act may in any case, with the sanction of the commissioners, agree that the compensation shall be either a gross sum of money to be paid or charged as aforesaid, or a yearly rent-charge, or a conveyance of land to be settled to the same uses as the manor of which the enfranchised lands are holden is settled, as provided in the said recited Acts, with respect to enfranchisements effected by virtue thereof; and in every case the valuers shall frame an award showing the amount, nature, and particulars of the compensation which shall be in full satisfaction of all manorial rights whatsoever, save as hereinafter mentioned.

Agreements and statements may, by consent, be included in the valuation; objections, both in law and fact, may be referred to the commissioners, who may direct an appeal upon any point of law. The award is to be confirmed by the commissioners.

Any charge under this Act is to be a first charge, and to have priority in title over all prior incumbrances, but so as not to affect the moneys thereby charged. Then follows the singular proviso which appears to undo the previous part of the section, that no such charge shall have priority without the consent of the persons entitled to the mortgage, &c. which it may be presumed will seldom be given. The commissioners should have power to determine whether such charge ought to have the priority or not.

The schedule gives the form of an enfranchisement.

The charge is to be by certificate under hand and seal of the commissioners, to be called "A Certificate of Charge," and it is to specify the amount of principal money to be charged on the lands enfranchised, and the place for payment of the principal and interest, and the certificate may, if the parties desire it, provide that such principal money, or any part of it, shall continue upon the security of such certificate for a period not exceeding ten years, and it is to be entered on the rolls of the manor.

These certificates will be transferable by indorsement, so that they will go into the market like other securities, and will become excellent investments.

In making his valuation, the valuer is expressly required to take into account the particular circumstances of each case, as the facilities for improvement, the custom of the manor, &c. and the advantages that might arise therefrom.

The compensation of the steward is to be such a sum as the commissioners may direct, or if they give no direction, then a sum equal "to one set of fees on surrender and admittance for each of such tenements embodied in such enfranchisement, such fees to be calculated according to the reasonable custom or usage prevalent in the manor," for which the steward is to prepare and deliver the deed of enfranchisement without charge.

The title of the lord is to be shewn by declaration of the lord or steward, and the commissioners are empowered to approve such title for the purposes of the Act, so that the enfranchisement shall be good in law against all claimants.

In manors where heriots are by custom due from tenants of freehold lands of such manors, either lord or tenant may compel extinguishment of it, in like manner, at any time after a heriot shall have become due after July 1, 1853.

Interest due on enfranchisement considerations is to be recoverable as rent.

After enfranchisement, the customary modes of descent are to cease, and the lands to descend, &c. as freehold; provided that nothing in the Act shall affect the custom of gavelkind in Kent.

The lord is empowered to sell his rent-charge. Owners may pay the consideration money and receive from the commissioners a certificate that it is paid, and the rent-charge redeemed. Provision is made for payment in case of owners under disability.

A power is given to commute or enfranchise at fixed prices on rentcharges, not varying with the price of grain. Tenants may pay and deduct rent-charges from their rents. Enfranchisement is not to affect previous leases or demises, nor are commonable rights to be affected by the Act, nor rights under any will or settlement.

The Act is not to extend to mines or minerals, nor to copyholds for lives where the tenants have not a right of renewal.

The Act is not to affect enfranchisements now in progress, nor any private agreements for enfranchisement which are or may be made between lords and tenants.

Such are the principal features of this valuable measure. In this sketch of the scheme, we have, of course, omitted the lesser details. Our purpose is only to lay before our readers an outline of the plan upon which the Enfranchisement of Copyholds is to be conducted, and great credit is due to those by whom so very feasible a settlement of a most difficult question has been constructed, and to the House of Lords for the improvements introduced into it at the last moment.

It will be observed that it does not come into operation until the 1st of July, 1853.

BILL AND NOTE STAMPS.

WE have received a great number of letters questioning the report of the case of Escrit v. Mason, 19 Law T. Rep. 232, and have referred the doubt thrown upon it by our correspondents to the reporter, Mr. DASENT, inquiring if the report be strictly correct. In reply, he assures us that it is so.

He adds that the case was moved afterwards by the defendant, and fully argued; but no mention was made of the decision upon the stamp, so satisfied were Counsel that it was right.

We now present one of the letters, that states most explicitly the objections that have been taken to the report by so many of our correspondents.

Sir,—Will you have the kindness to call the learned reporter's attention to the case of Escrit v. Mason, p. 232 of the present vol. of the Law Times. The marginal note states that "All promissory notes and bills drawn payable on demand, are subject to a 5s. stamp, and not to one for 3s. 6d. as erroneously stated in some pocket-books." The action appears to have been brought upon a promissory note payable on demand for 50*l*.; but the learned reporter omits the most material part of the question (that is), whether the note is payable "to the bearer on demand," or "in any other manner than to the bearer on demand." In the former case ("to the bearer on demand"), a 5s. stamp would be necessary for a 50*l*. bill or note, but in the latter case ("in any other manner than to the bearer on demand"), a 2s. 6d. stamp would be sufficient for a 50*l*. bill or note ("not exceeding two months after date, or sixty days after sight"); and the cases of Moyser v. Whittaker, 9 B. & C. 409, and Armitage v. Berry, 5 Burg. 501, decide that a note to A. B. or to A. B. on demand, or to A. B. or order on demand, is a note payable in other manner than to bearer on demand within the class of stamps last above referred to. To these cases may be added those referred to in the learned reporter's note to Escrit v. Mason. I have been quite unable to discover under what provision of the Stamp Act a 5s. stamp is necessary for "All promissory notes and bills drawn payable on demand," and have no doubt that a mistake has arisen, and which a reference to the point omitted in the report will correct. The importance of this question to the mercantile world will, I am sure, excuse me for troubling you.

12 July, 1852. J. D. S.

For our own part, we are inclined to think that our correspondent is right, and that there is some misunderstanding as to the form of the note in question.

As it is a matter of great importance, perhaps the Attorney or agent for either of the parties in the action would oblige the profession and ourselves with a copy of the promissory note that was the subject of the action, which will settle the doubt in a moment.

SCOTTISH AFFIDAVITS.

WE call the attention of some of our readers to an important decision in the Court of Session in Scotland. Affidavits to be used in the Courts in Scotland are generally made before a Justice of the Peace, who may administer the oath wherever he may happen to be at the time, whether in his own county or not; the justice in such circumstances exercising what is called a voluntary jurisdiction. Where affidavits have been required to be made in England, it has been doubted whether they could be made before Scottish magistrates resident here; and doubts also have arisen as to the power of English magistrates to administer oaths in other cases than those in which a jurisdiction was specially conferred upon them to do so. The former doubt as to the Scottish magistrate's power to take affidavits here is now settled, by the case of Kerr v. The Marquis of Ailsa, lately before the Court of Session in Scotland. Henceforth, therefore, in Scottish proceedings, where an affidavit is to be made, it will be the safer and better course to apply to a Scottish magistrate resident here to take the deposition, a course which has this further advantage, that it costs nothing, while in taking affidavits here (before a police magistrate, for instance, as a J. P.) a fee of 5s. is exacted.

SHAM LAWYERS.

THE following has been forwarded to us from Manchester. We will endeavour to procure the insertion of a clause in the next County Courts Bill, to protect the public and the Profession against the "County Courts agents," so fast increasing:—

"16, Princess-street, Manchester, April 30, 1852.

"Sir,—I am directed by Mr. Henry Hockenhall to apply to you for the sum of 10*l*. as damages, for an assault committed (at your instigation and by your orders) upon him last evening at a beerhouse in the occupation of Mr. Thomas Fletcher, and situate in George-street, Hulme, he being then and there, by the authority of Mr. Tennant, of Sheffield, brewer, in possession of the stock in trade, fixtures, and furniture.

"And unless the same be paid to me in the course of to-morrow, proceedings will issue for the recovery thereof.—I am, yours obediently,

"GEO. MCALLESTER."

"Mr. John F. Cowell, John Halton-street, Manchester."

Here is another printed circular of the same class:—

'Church-street, Wellington, 185 .

"I am requested by Mr. to inform you, that unless your account is paid, or some satisfactory arrangement made for payment thereof, on or before the day of next, he will, without further notice, place it in the County Court.—I am, yours respectfully,

"THOMAS WILLIAM JONES, Accountant."

THE LEGISLATOR.

NEW STATUTES.

15 VICTORIA, A.D. 1852.

[In this record of Legislation only the Statutes of practical utility are given at length. Of the others an abstract or the titles only are presented.]

CAP. LIV.

An Act further to facilitate and arrange Proceedings in the County Courts. (June 30, 1852.)

The great importance of this statute induces us to insert it at the earliest opportunity, and before it is due in the numerical order of publication.

Whereas it is expedient further to facilitate and arrange proceedings in the County Courts: Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Lord Chancellor to appoint five judges of Courts held under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, to frame a scale of fees, to be submitted to judges of Superior Courts for approval. Costs to be taxed by clerk of Court, subject to review.—That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to appoint five of the judges of the Courts holden under an Act of the ninth and tenth years of her Majesty, chapter ninety-five, intituled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England," from time to time to frame a scale of costs and charges to be paid to attorneys in the County Courts, to be allowed as between attorney and client and as between party and party; and such scale of costs and charges as shall be certified to the Lord Chancellor under the hands of the judges so appointed or authorised, or any three of them, shall be submitted by the Lord Chancellor to three or more of the judges of the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster, of whom the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench or Common Pleas, or the Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, shall be one, and such judges of the Superior Courts may approve or disallow or alter or amend such scale of costs and charges, and the scale of costs and charges so approved, altered, or amended shall, from and after a day to be named by such last-mentioned judges, be in force in every County Court; and all costs between party and party and attorney and client shall be taxed by the clerk of the court; but his taxation may be reviewed by the judge upon the application of either party; and in no case, upon the taxation of the costs between attorney and client, shall any charges be allowed, not sanctioned by the aforesaid scale, unless the clerk is satisfied by writing under the hand of the client that he has agreed to pay such further charges, and no attorney shall have a right to recover at law from his client any costs or charges not so allowed on taxation; and the judges of the County Courts so appointed shall possess the same powers of making rules for regulating the practice of the courts, and of settling doubts on the construction of any Acts relating to County Courts, as were conferred on the judges to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor for that purpose by the twelfth section of the twelfth and thirteenth Victoria, chapter one hundred and one, unless otherwise specially provided.

2. So much of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 14, as limits the sitting of Court of Appeal to a time out of Term repealed: appeals to be heard in Term as well as out of Term.—So much of the thirteenth and fourteenth Victoria, chapter sixty-one, section fourteen, as limits the Court of Appeal to the puisne judges of the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster, and the sitting of the said Court of Appeal to a time out of Term, is hereby repealed; and all appeals now depending or hereafter to be brought before the said Superior Courts shall be heard and determined in Term by the judges, thereof, as part of the ordinary business of such courts, or out of Term by any two or more of the judges of the said Superior Courts sitting as a Court of Appeal for that purpose.

3. Power to judges of Superior Courts to make orders regulating appeals.—The judges of the said Superior Courts, or any five of them, of whom a chief of one of the said Superior Courts, shall be one, may from time to time make general orders for regulating the proceedings on appeals, which orders shall be as valid as if included in this Act, but shall not be in force until the end of the session of Parliament next after the promulgation thereof.

4. Power to the Court or a judge at chambers to make an order entitling the plaintiff to recover his costs.—The thirteenth section of the thirteenth and fourteenth Victoria, chapter sixty-one, is hereby repealed; and in any action in which the plaintiff shall not be entitled to recover his costs by reason of the provisions of the eleventh section of such Act, whether there be a verdict in such action or not, if the plaintiff shall make it appear to the satisfaction of the Court in which such action was brought, or to the satisfaction of a judge at chambers, upon summons, that such action was brought for a cause in which concurrent jurisdiction is given to the Superior Courts by the one hundred and twenty-eighth section of the ninth and tenth Victoria, chapter ninety-five, or for which no plaint could have been entered in any such County Courts, or that such action was removed from a County Court by certiorari, or that there was sufficient reason for bringing such action in the court in which such action was brought, then and in any of such cases the Court in which such action is brought, or the said judge at chambers, shall thereupon, by rule or order, direct that the plaintiff shall recover his costs, and thereupon the plaintiff shall have the same judgment to recover his costs that he would have had if the before-mentioned Act of the thirteenth and fourteenth Victoria, chapter sixty-one, had not been passed.

5. Re-issuing warrants of distraint.—That in all cases where a warrant of execution shall have been issued against the goods and chattels of any person, or an order for his commitment been made, and such person or his goods and chattels shall be out of the jurisdiction of the Court, and such warrant or order shall have been sealed and stamped by the clerk of another County Court, pursuant to the one hundred and fourth section of the Act of the ninth and tenth Victoria, chapter ninety-five, it shall be lawful for the said clerk of such other Court to re-issue the said warrant or order to the high bailiff of such other Court, and thereupon such high bailiff shall be authorised and required to act in all respects in the execution of the said warrant or order within the jurisdiction of the Court to which the same shall have been so sent in the same manner, with the same powers, and subject to the same rules as if the district to which the warrant or order shall have been sent were within the limits of the Court which originally issued the warrant or order.

6. Protection to officers.—If any action or suit shall be brought against any person for anything done in pursuance of this Act, or of any other Act relating to County Courts, such person may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and the warrant under the seal of the County Court, being produced in any such action or suit, shall be deemed sufficient proof of the authority of the said County Court previous to the issuing of such warrant; and in case the plaintiff in such action shall have a verdict pass against him, be nonsuit, or discontinue the action or suit, the defendant shall in any of the said cases be allowed full costs as between attorney and client.

7. On petition to her Majesty, the jurisdiction of court of local jurisdiction may be excluded from that of the County Court in concurrent causes.—If the council of any city or borough, or a majority of the ratepayers of any parish, within the limits of which a court of local jurisdiction other than a County Court is established, under the said Act of the ninth and tenth Victoria, chapter ninety-five, or into the limits of which the jurisdiction of such court of local jurisdiction shall extend, shall petition the Queen in Council that the jurisdiction of such court of local jurisdiction may be excluded in any causes whereof the County Court hath cognizance, and if notice of such petition shall be given two months before it is presented, by public advertisements in such city, borough, or parish, and in some newspaper therein circulated, her Majesty, by order in council, may declare such exclusion of the jurisdiction of such court of local jurisdiction throughout the whole or any part of the district assigned or which may hereafter be assigned to such County Court, if no petition against declaring such exclusion be presented, and no caveat be entered at the council office; and if any counter petition be presented, or any caveat be entered, then her Majesty may refer such petition and counter petition to the judicial committee of the privy council, upon whose report her Majesty may make such order in council as she shall be advised touching the matter of the said petitions, in respect of excluding the jurisdiction of such court of local jurisdiction, and may award compensation to any person or persons entitled to the franchise of appointing officers of such court, or to any officers thereof appointed before the passing of this Act, to be given by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, who are hereby empowered to pay the same.

8. As to audit of clerk's account.—The treasurer of the County Court in which any insolvent's estate shall be administered, at the audits of the account of the clerk of such court, shall also audit and examine the books and accounts of the clerk in all matters relating to such estate, and shall make a report to the judge of the Court, stating whether a dividend should be made, and the general result of such audit; and the judge shall examine the said clerk on oath as to the correctness of such accounts, and may make such order as he may deem requisite respecting a dividend or other matter relating to such estate and accounts; and the treasurer shall thereafter, at his future audit require and examine the receipts of the several creditors for any dividend; and the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall have power to make rules to be observed by the treasurers of County Courts respecting the audit of the clerk's accounts of insolvent estates, and shall have the same power of making rules for securing the balances and other sums of money in the hands of any officer of the County Courts under the last-mentioned Act, and for the due accounting and application of such balances and other sums, that they have with respect to balances and other sums in the same hands under the Act of the ninth and tenth Victoria, chapter ninety-five.

9. Account of fees to be delivered.—The clerk and the high bailiff of every County Court shall deliver quarterly to the treasurer, in such form as the treasurer, by direction of the said commissioners, shall require, a full account in writing of the fees from time to time received by them respectively under the Act of the ninth and tenth Victoria, chapter ninety-five.

10. Provision of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, as to persons qualified to practise before County Courts not to extend to this Act.—And whereas by the said Act passed in the ninth and tenth years of her present Majesty it was enacted, that no person should be entitled to appear for any other party to any proceeding in any of the said courts "unless he be an attorney of one of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record, or a barrister-at-law, instructed by such attorney on behalf of the party, or, by leave of the judge, any other person allowed by the judge to appear instead of such party, but that no barrister attorney, or other person, except by leave of the judge, should be entitled to be heard to argue any question as counsel for any other person in any proceeding in any court holden under that Act:" Be it enacted, That the said last-recited enactment be repealed; and that it shall be lawful for the party to the suit or other proceeding, or for an attorney of one of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record being an attorney acting generally in the action for such party, but not an attorney retained as an advocate by such first-mentioned attorney, or for a barrister retained by or on behalf of the party, on either side, but without any right of exclusive or pre-audience, or, by leave of the judge, for any other person allowed by the judge to appear instead of the party, to address the Court, but subject to such regulations as the judge may from time to time prescribe for the orderly transaction of the business of the Court.

11. Hundred Courts of Offlow and Hemlingford abolished.—From and after the passing of this Act no action or suit shall be commenced in the Hundred Court of Offlow, in the county of Stafford, or in the Hundred Court of Hemlingford, in the county of Warwick, and the authority and jurisdiction of the said courts shall cease, and all actions or suits depending in the said courts shall be transferred, with all the proceedings thereon, to the County Court for the district in which the respective defendants shall then reside; and such actions and suits shall be dealt with and decided, as to the costs of the same, as well as in other respects, according to the practice of the County Court or of the said Hundred Courts, according to the discretion of the judge of the County Court, which Court shall for the purposes of such actions or suits be deemed to have all the power and jurisdiction possessed by the said Hundred Courts before the passing of this Act.

12. Compensation to officers of Hundred Courts. Every person who is legally entitled to any franchise or office in or in respect of the said Hundred Courts shall be entitled to make a claim for compensation to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury within six months after the passing of this Act, and the said commissioners, in such manner as they shall think fit, may inquire what was the nature of the franchise or office, and what was the tenure thereof, and what were the lawful fees and emoluments in respect of which such compensation should be allowed; and the said commissioners in each case shall award such gross or yearly sum, and for such time, as they shall think just to be awarded, upon consideratian of the special circumstances of each case: provided always, that if any person holding any office in the said Hundred Courts shall be appointed to any public office or employment, the payment of the compensation awarded to him under this Act, so long as he shall continue to receive the salary or emoluments of such office or employment, shall be suspended, if the amount of such salary or emoluments be greater than the amount of the compensation, or, if not, shall be diminished by the amount of such salary or emoluments.

13. Compensations to be paid out of Consolidated Fund.—The several compensations herein-before granted shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury of the said United Kingdom are hereby empowered to pay the same accordingly.

14. Limiting salaries of judges and clerks.—After the passing of this Act the greatest salaries to be received in any case by the judges and clerks of the County Courts respectively shall be one thousand five hundred pounds by a judge, and seven hundred pounds by a clerk, but in no case shall any judge be paid a less salary than twelve hundred pounds: provided always, that the salary of any judge or clerk acting in the same capacity before the passing of the Act of the ninth and tenth Victoria, chapter ninety-five, in any court mentioned in schedule (A) to that Act, shall not be limited to any sum less than the average amount of the fees and emoluments of his office during the seven years next before the passing of the said last-mentioned Act.

15. Lord Chancellor may order retiring pension to be paid to County Court judges.—That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, from time to time, on a petition presented to him for that purpose, to recommend to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury that there shall be paid quarterly out of the Consolidated Fund to such of the judges of the County Courts as shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity, disabling him from the execution of his office, and who shall be desirous of resigning the same, an annuity or clear yearly sum of money for the term of his life, not exceeding two-thirds of the yearly salary which such judge shall be entitled to as a judge of County Court at the time of presenting his petition; and such annuity or sum shall be paid out of the said Consolidated Fund quarterly or otherwise, as the said Commissioners may direct.

16. Judges of County Courts not to practise at the Bar or as Special Pleaders.—After three months from the passing of this Act, no judge of the said County Courts shall practise at the bar, or as a Special Pleader or Equity Draftsman, or be directly or indirectly concerned as a conveyancer, notary public, solicitor, attorney, or proctor.

17. No clerk to be appointed for more than one district, except in certain cases.—No Clerk of a County Court shall henceforth be appointed for more than one district in which a Court is holden, unless from there being no attorney resident within the district of the court in which the office of clerk is vacant, or from any other reason, the Lord Chancellor, or, where the whole of the district is within the duchy of Lancaster, the chancellor of the duchy, shall deem it expedient to order otherwise.

18. A registry of County Courts judgments to be established.—That a registry of every judgment entered in the County Courts for the sum of ten pounds and upwards shall be formed in such manner, in such place, and under such regulations as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall appoint, and that for the inspection of the said register when formed such fees shall be charged to persons desirous of inspecting the same as shall be appointed by the said commissioners, and the proceeds of such fees shall be applied in such manner as the said commissioners shall appoint, in paying the expenses incurred in establishing and maintaining the said register, and the surplus of such fees, after providing for the payment of such expenses, shall be paid over to the credit of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

19. No other persons to be appointed clerks of the Bristol Court until all the present clerks shall die, resign, or be removed.—Upon the death, removal, or resignation of any of the persons now in possession of the office of clerk of the County Court of Gloucestershire holden at Bristol, the remaining person or persons holding such office at the time of such death, removal, or resignation shall be the sole clerk or clerks of such court, and no other person shall be appointed to such office of clerk, jointly or otherwise, until all the persons holding such office at the time of the passing of this Act shall have died, resigned, or been removed.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

PROPERTY AND INCOME TAX.—A Parliamentary paper just issued states that the assessment made under the above taxes was, in 1843, 1,681,852*l.* and the net amount received 1,609,801*l.*; in 1844, the assessment was 1,581,510*l.* and the net amount 1,526,377*l.*; in 1845, the assessment was 1,578,769*l.* and the net return 1,542,075*l.*; in 1846, the assessment was 1,717,123*l.* and the net amount 1,683,181*l.*; in 1847, the assessment was 1,768,420*l.* and the net produce 1,731,883*l.*; in 1848, the assessment was 1,754,363*l.* and the net amount 1,698,064*l.*; in 1849, the assessment was 1,584,601*l.* and the net amount was 1,517,406*l.*; in 1850, the assessment was 1,570,781*l.* and the net amount 1,529,611*l.*; in 1851, the assessment was 1,593,728*l.*; and the return 1,553,615*l.*

CRIMINAL OFFENDERS.—The annual tables, showing the number of criminal offenders in the year 1851, have been printed. 27,960 persons were committed for trial or bailed in England and Wales, of which 21,579 were convicted, and 6,359 acquitted. 70 were capitally convicted, of whom 10 only were executed, 52 having had their sentence commuted into transportation for life, and the rest into minor punishments, with the exception of one free pardon. 124 were transported for life, and 2,702 for minor periods. Of the offenders 22,391 were male, and 5,569 females. The total number of criminals in 1850 was 26,813; in 1849, 27,816; and in the five years ending 1851, 141,771. In the five years ending 1846, 136,852. In Scotland 4,001 persons were committed for trial or bailed, 2,892 male, and 1,109 females; of these one only was capitally convicted, 15 transported for life, and 487 for shorter periods. 3,070 cases resulted in convictions, 907 in acquittals.

IRISH CONSTABULARY FOR AUSTRALIA.—It is stated in generally well informed quarters that her Majesty's Government intend to send 2,000 of the Irish constabulary to Australia, to aid the civil power in that colony in performing the arduous duties now requisite for the protection of life and property, owing to the discovery of the gold fields.

SLOANE, THE SPECIAL PLEADER, who, with his wife, was convicted in February 1851, at the Central Criminal Court, of cruelty to Jane Wilbred, his servant, died on Tuesday morning after a lengthened illness. The sinking condition of the unhappy man had been observed for some time past, and through the kindness of the Rev. Mr. Davis, the ordinary of Newgate, the attention of some humane persons was drawn to the case. A medical examination took place, and certificates having been given by the proper medical officers shewing that any further imprisonment would be fatal to his existence, a free pardon was obtained about a week since through the Home Secretary, and Mr. Sloane was removed to private lodgings in Goswell-street-road, where he expired from the effects of illness arising from mental anxiety and confinement. The latter few months of his existence have been made as comfortable as the prison regulations would allow.

Some years ago, a servant girl who had robbed her mistress, a milliner in London, was transported to Sydney for a term of years. Since the discovery of the Bathurst Plains, the female convict has written to her former mistress that the colony was good place; that, as she now kept her carriage, she was happy to return the amount which she had stolen, with interest; that she earnestly recommended the milliner to come out and set up shop, in which case she should be happy to extend her patronage to a lady for whom she had so great an esteem.

THE METROPOLITAN TURNPIKE ROADS.—The total receipts on account of the metropolitan turnpike roads in the year ended the 25th of March, 1852, was £73,415 11s. 6d., and the expenditure was £63,001 7s. 8d., leaving a balance in hand of £10,441 3s. 10d.

THE NEW CITY PRISON AT HOLLOWAY.—By an Act of Parliament just printed (15 & 16 Vict. c. 70), the New City Prison and House of Correction is legalized to be a "good and valid prison," as if the same had been erected out of the county rates.

DRUNKENNESS, &c.—A return to the House of Commons, which has been printed, states that 8,754 persons were taken into custody in 1851 by the Metropolitan Police for drunkenness, and 194 by the City Police; in 1850, 9,718 were taken up by the former, 241 by the latter; in 1849, 8,622 by the former, and 170 by the latter.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

WINDING UP.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR has affirmed the decision of Vice-Chancellor BRUCE in Crossfield's case, 19 Law T. Rep. 236, and which was fully commented upon when reported from the Court below, in 17 Law T. Rep. 340. The Master may review his decision as to the liability of a contributory. The case seems so clear, that it is strange there should have been an appeal.

In Ex parte Hall, 19 Law T. Rep. 244, it was held that where the costs of an application to the Court were not disposed of at the time when the order was made, the application for them should be made to the Master in the first instance.

The unsettling of the decision in Upfill's case is producing, as might be expected, a great deal of confusion among lists of contributories that were settled in accordance with that case. All these must now be revised upon the rule of liability which we have stated as now the decided law. At last it has come back to the precise position in which we have from the first steadily maintained the law of liability of contributories in imperfect companies to stand,—namely, that it is purely a common law liability, to be determined by the law of principal and agent, and that each contributory is answerable only for so much as he has personally ordered, or authorised others to order on his account, and that the call can be made upon each only for such portions of the whole debts of the concern as could be recovered from him individually in an action at law. If, therefore, the Master has any doubt as to the liability for any particular debt, he should direct an issue to try it.

CAMERON'S COALBROOK AND LOUGHOR.—On the 7th inst. an inquiry took place before the Master in Chancery Richards with reference to the liability to be placed on the list by Mr. Turquand, the official manager, of what are termed the "seceding shareholders," who retired from the company at a certain period, and on whom it is proposed to make a call to pay off the debts of the company pro ratâ with the other shareholders.

DIRECT BIRMINGHAM AND OXFORD RAILWAY.—On Friday Master Brougham, on the application of Mr. Colley, solicitor to Mr. Hutton, the official manager, confirmed the call of 750*l.* on each of the members of the committee of management to discharge the liabilities, Mr. Spottiswoode, through his counsel, consenting to be made liable in conjunction with his co-partners, and not to contest his liability to the call.

METROPOLITAN RAILWAYS JUNCTION. — On Friday a meeting in this matter was held before Master Brougham to settle the admissibility or otherwise of several claims upon the company, which at the instance of the Master were referred to Messrs. Lake, the solicitors to the official manager, for adjudication. There being a sum of 1,811*l.* in the hands of Mr. James, the official manager, received from the bankers and other sources, it is conceived that this sum will be sufficient to pay off the company's liabilities in the event of a compromise being come to with Mr. Ashpitel in respect of a claim of about 1,000*l.* for moneys alleged to have been paid by him as a director to creditors under actions brought.

DIRECT WEST-END AND CROYDON.—The Master has recommended a compromise of the claims of all parties in this company, to save further delay and litigation, subject to the enforcement of certain outstanding calls on members of the provisional committee.

DIRECT CHICHESTER AND PORTSMOUTH.—The Master having the winding up of this company has also recommended that a compromise be entered into.

DOVER AND DEAL.—On Tuesday a meeting was held before Master Brougham, to make a call of two guineas a share in liquidation of outstanding liabilities. Mr. Dimsdale, who appeared for the official manager, stated that these liabilities amounted to between 3,000*l.* and 4,000*l.*, and the expenses of winding up the company to 1,000*l.* Counsel for Lord Londesborough, Mr. Mowatt, M.P. holder of 1,200 shares, and others, opposed the making of the call, which, after a desultory discussion, was made only in part by the Master to the extent of 5s. per share, to meet the cost, 1,000*l.*, of the official manager, leaving the 1,000*l.* or 5,000*l.* for liabilities to be provided for.

PETITIONS, ORDERS, MEETINGS, APPOINTMENTS, CALLS, &c.

[Announced, issued, and made, during the past week.]

Liverpool Union Glass Company.—Call for 9*l.* per share, on contributories in the "settled list," on July 30.—Blunt.

Cameron's Coalbrook Steam Coal, and Swansea and Loughor Railway Company.—Call for 1*l.* per share, on contributories already settled, on July 19.—Richards.

Camborne Consols Mining Company.—To proceed, and finally settle list of contributories, on July 30.—Richards.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

ALREADY there has been a decision under the New Wills Act. A will had been rejected in December last for not having been duly signed at "the foot or end." The motion for probate was now renewed, on the ground that the new Act had removed the objection of the 1st section, and by the 2nd section had provided that it should apply to every will already made, where probate had not been granted. The Court held it to fall within the provisions of the new Act, and granted probate accordingly.

The case of Curson v. Belworthy, 19 Law T. Rep. 233, in the House of Lords, is a remarkable one for its facts, but it determines no question of law, other, perhaps, than this, that in order to set aside a purchase something more than mere inadequacy of price must be shewn; there must be some evidence of fraud and gross misrepresentation. Although in this case their Lordships were of opinion that advantage had been taken of a pauper's ignorance by the superior knowledge of the purchaser of the estate, as it did not amount to positive fraud, they refused to interfere with it.

An interesting case in the Law of Vendor and Purchaser has been decided by the LORDS JUSTICES. At a sale by auction two lots, six and seven, were described as "valuable freehold estate." Lot seven was described as "a reservoir and waterworks, &c. which yielded a yearly rental of 60*l.*" By the sixth condition any mis-statement as to quality, tenure, outgoings, or other particulars was to be the subject of compensation only. By the second condition all objections were to be taken within a month from the delivery of the abstract or to be considered as waived. The abstracts were delivered on June 30. It turned out that the property was copyhold, not freehold, and that the pipes from the reservoir passed by permission through the property of others, to whom 5s. and 10s. were paid yearly for such permission. Upon a claim for specific performance it was held that the misdescription of tenure was a subject for compensation only. But that as to the misstatement of rental of the reservoir, specific performance could not be sustained, as this was not a matter of title, and, therefore, not waived by the defendant omitting to take the objection within the time specified by the conditions. (Price v. Macaulay, 19 Law T. Rep. 238.) Another case in the same branch of the law is reported from V. C. TURNER'S court. In Flint v. Woodin, 19 Law T. Rep. 240, an auctioneer sold his own estate, but did not disclose the fact that he was the vendor. Before the sale the purchaser intimated that he should bid a certain price; the estate was knocked down at that sum. The particulars of sale stated that the property was let on a repairing lease, but the vendor could not shew in whom this lease was vested. The purchaser objected on this ground, but the Court decreed specific performance. "The auctioneer," said the Vice-Chancellor, "may properly hold the character of owner." "The instant a party knows that there is an objection which affects the contract, it is his duty immediately to insist upon that objection, if he means to rely upon it. He cannot treat the contract as subsisting at one time and at a subsequent period say there was no contract."

In Wilson v. Bennett, 19 Law T. Rep. 243, the VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the case of Cooke v. Crawford, 13 Sim. 91, had been often misunderstood. "It was not an authority that a trustee might not devise trust estates, but that if a trustee had an estate, and also a power, he might devise the estate, although he might not devise the power."

The Court laid it down, in Re Coke's Trust, 19 Law T. Rep. 243, that, as a general rule, it will not appoint a tenant for life a trustee.

In Drake v. Whitmore, 19 Law T. Rep. 243, where the Court had directed money to be raised by mortgage, it refused an application that a power of sale should be inserted in the mortgage. The VICE-CHANCELLOR said "he did not consider that he could delegate such a power to a mortgagee."

A. was by decree in a cause declared to be tenant in tail in possession of certain real estates, and a receiver was appointed, with directions to pay assurances against fire upon the buildings, and to pay the surplus of the rents to A. A portion being burnt down, A. was held to be entitled to the moneys arising from the insurance. (Seymour v. Vernon, 19 Law T. Rep. 244.)

There are three decisions in our last number upon the construction of wills, but they turn upon the particular facts, and determine no point of law, and therefore we do not consider it necessary to notice them here, our purpose in these summaries being only to direct the attention of the busy reader to the decisions of some importance, which the practitioner ought to be acquainted with, and to note in his memory or his books.

Query.

STAMPS ON COPYHOLD ADMISSIONS.

Can any of the readers of the LAW TIMES state whether they have submitted a case to the Commissioners under the 14th section of the late Stamp Act, as to the stamp on an admission to copyhold estates under a bargain and sale, on a purchase from donees of a power under a will, and, if so, the result? It seems to me that the heading "Copyhold Estates and Customary Estates passing by surrender and admittance, or by admittance only, and not by deed: instruments relating thereto upon the sale and mortgage of any such estates;" should be read as if a semicolon was inserted after "Copyhold Estates," as was the case in 55 Geo. 3; and that the words "and not by deed," having reference to customary estates only, a 2*s.* 6*d.* stamp would be sufficient; but the steward of the manor thinks that the words "and not by deed," have reference also to copyhold estates, and that therefore the £1 stamp, under 55 Geo. 3, is still requisite.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

The Lord Chancellor has confirmed the decision of the Court below in Re Atkinson, 19 Law T. Rep. 237, that the rule requiring notice to complete an equitable assignment applies between the provisional assignee of an insolvent, and a subsequent assignee for value. He had always considered it settled that the provisional assignee took whatever the insolvent had, subject to all the equities to which the insolvent was liable; he was not aware of any positive rule of law which gave to a subsequent purchaser who had given notice to a trustee priority over a prior purchaser who had failed to do so. "The present case," said his Lordship, "ought to teach assignees to be more diligent in making inquiries as to the property of insolvents. If proper inquiries were made, as in the present case, among the families and friends of insolvents, interests of this kind could not be overlooked or concealed."

In Re John Higgs, 19 Law T. Rep. 248, the Insolvent Court has held that it has no power to order the discharge of an insolvent committed by a County Court for nonpayment of a debt from which he had been discharged by an adjudication under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

We have no information as yet as to the course which the Attorneys who practise in the County Courts are taking to evade the difficulties imposed upon them by the suddenly-introduced provision of the new Act. Necessarily, many will be averse to adopt the only means by which they can at once attain their object, and escape the danger of a violation of the law by taking their clients to another Attorney, retained not by them, but by the client. But there is no help for it. Wherever there is not a Bar, or the Attorney prefers to have his case conducted by an Attorney, he must now submit to the inconvenience of handing over his client altogether, to a rival it may be, who might possibly keep the client so obtained. This is one of the practical difficulties of the provision not foreseen by its framers. It was doubtless proposed on the assumption that every County Court would be attended by a Bar sufficiently large to offer a fair choice of Advocates. But in extensive districts of the country this is not the case now, nor is it likely to be, as the business there would not support a Bar. Where this occurs, perhaps the Judge might with propriety exercise the power vested in him to hear any person, by hearing an Attorney instructed by an Attorney. It would be unjust to suitors, no less than to the Attorneys, to deprive them of the assistance of an Advocate-Attorney, where there is no Barrister to be obtained, or no fair choice of wigs.

It must now be for the consideration of the Bar whether they will not adapt themselves to the County Courts by a new scale of fees, permitting of half-guinea fees in cases below 10*l.* Suitors for small sums cannot be expected to pay a guinea and a half for the assistance of Counsel and Attorney. But we trust that this reduction will be accompanied with an express condition that no brief is ever taken without the intervention of an Attorney.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

Equity Practice.—Under sequestration against A. for contempt, sums had been paid into court, and invested. A. had been ordered to pay certain costs to plaintiff, but A. being out of the jurisdiction, they could not be obtained. The Court, upon petition, charged these costs upon the sequestration account. (Westby v. Westby, 19 Law T. Rep. 243.)

Whether a case and opinion submitted to Counsel are privileged documents, and when, is a frequent subject of discussion, and the rule does not appear to be very clearly settled. In Enthoven v. Cobb, 19 Law T. Rep. 243, A. and B. having a common cause of action against C. brought separate actions against him, which were still pending. A. obtained Counsel's opinion on his case, and gave a copy of it to B. C. filed a bill of discovery against B. who admitted the possession of it. On a motion by C. for its production, it was held to be privileged.

In Re Richards's Estate, 19 Law T. Rep. 244, some useful hints were given as to the proper service of notices under the Trustee Act. The Vice-Chancellor said, "that section (38th) spoke of persons beneficially interested. Primâ facie, all the parties interested should receive notice, but if that were impracticable, a case should be made for proceeding as to particular parties with notice." In Re Levett's Trusts, 19 Law T. Rep. 244, it was ruled that a petition under this Act should state in terms the affidavit made on payment into Court of the money.

In Hood v. Bridport, 19 Law T. Rep. 244, it was decided that there should be a reference to ascertain if repairs to be done are for the benefit of an infant party to the cause.

Common Law.—It has been determined by Coltman, J. in chambers, that the lessor of the plaintiff, in an action of ejectment, is a "litigant" within sec. 6 of the new Evidence Act, and as such entitled to inspection of documents in the possession of the defendant. (Doe dem. King v. Holmes, 19 Law T. Rep. 248.)

Answers to Queries.

ENGLISH INSTRUMENTS SENT ABROAD

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—In reply to your correspondent's letter under this head, I beg to state that, from considerable experience which I have had in the business of foreign Law Courts, I can say that there is no fixed rule as to the formalities with which documents of other countries should be clothed, to be admissible in evidence there. This observation applies to the Continent of Europe generally, but more particular rules may possibly prevail in some of the small German states.

The great point to be attended to is the legalisation of the consul for the country in which the document is to be used, which is obtained, as a matter of course, here, but is regarded in the foreign country as authenticating not only the document itself, but, in very many cases, the contents also.

However, I have frequently sent over documents without even that legalisation, and never had any objection raised.

In the absence of fixed rules on the subject, such evidence is entirely in the discretion of the Court, and in the exercise of that discretion much will, of course, depend upon the nature of the instrument, and the points sought to be established by it.

Under these circumstances, it is impossible to fix upon any particular practice; but the most formal manner in which a document can be prepared for the purpose, is to have it signed by a magistrate, whose signature is authenticated by a notary public, and his signature, in turn, authenticated or legalised by the foreign consul.

There is no necessity for its being on one sheet of paper, but where there are more than one, care should be taken to have a riband or other fastening running through the whole, and the ends secured under the notarial seal.

As regards clerical errors, if the instrument will admit of it, the alterations should be enumerated in an attestation clause, and where that cannot be done, the initials of the parties set opposite will suffice; but this, as well as the previous observations, must materially depend upon the kind of instrument it is desired to use in evidence.

I am Sir, yours, &c.

G. S. B.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

The Privy Council has determined some interesting points in Maritime Law in the case of The Bold Buccleugh, 19 Law T. Rep. 235. A Scotch steamer ran down an English barque lying in the Humber, and kept out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty. The owners were then sued in Scotland, and the steamer was arrested there and sold without notice of this unsatisfied claim. While the Scotch suit was pending, she appeared in England and was arrested under an Admiralty warrant, and an action for damages was entered in the Admiralty Court here, and instructions sent immediately to abandon the Scotch suit. The owner pleaded the lis pendens and the purchase without notice. The first plea was held to be bad, as the suit in Scotland was substantially a proceeding in personam, while this one was in rem, and that the ship was liable into whose hands soever she came. The law was stated to be, that when a vessel at sea causes damage, an inchoate lien arises, and when the amount of damage is judicially ascertained by a proceeding in rem, the lien relates back to the period when it first attached, and takes priority, to the extent of the then value of the ship, over all other liens, and travels with her wheresoever she goes; but this lien may be lost by negligence or delay, where the rights of third parties are compromised. We recommend the attentive perusal of this case to our readers interested in maritime law, and especially to students.

In Bankruptcy, Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque has held, in Anonymous, 19 Law T. Rep. 248, that under sec. 211 an order for protection to a day named, instead of "until further order," is irregular, but not void, and may be amended.

Secretary of Bankrupts' Office Abolition Act.—An Act of Parliament received the Royal Assent on the 30th ult., by which the office of Secretary of Bankrupts was abolished "from and after the 1st June, 1852," nearly a month before the Act was passed. The office of clerks of enrolments is also abolished with compensation. The Act provides that Mr. John Campbell shall be the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy and for other matters connected with the office.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

On Wednesday the Benchers of the Middle Temple appointed Henry Sumner Maine, esq. LLD. Regius Professor of Civil Law in the University of Cambridge, to the Readership in General Jurisprudence and Civil Law recently established by the Inns of Court.

Commissions signed by the Lord-Lieutenant of the County of Surrey.—The Hon. William John Monson and William Beckford, esq. to be deputy-lieutenants.

Messrs. Whiting, Leeman, and Pugh, chief clerks to the Masters in Chancery, who retire, have received the appointment of chief clerks to the new equity judges.

COURT PAPERS.

HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY.

On Monday, the 12th inst. the Lord Chancellor made the following Order to the suitors in Chancery respecting the closing of the Accountant-General's books:—

Whereas it is proper that the accounts kept by the Accountant-General of this Court should be examined and compared, in order to settle the same, and it will require considerable time to perfect such examination, and it is necessary that a time should be appointed for closing the books of accounts of the said Accountant-General, for the purposes aforesaid, his Lordship ordered that the books of the said Accountant-General be closed from and after Thursday, the 19th day of August next, to Thursday, the 28th day of October next inclusive, in order to adjust the accounts of the suitors with the books kept at the Bank, and that during that time no draught for any money, or certificate for any effects under the care and direction of this Court, be signed or delivered out by the said Accountant-General, or any Stocks or Annuities accepted or transferred by him relating to the suitors of this Court, and that no purchase, sale, or transfer be made by the said Accountant-General, unless the order, request, or registrar's certificate be left at his office on or before Thursday, the 12th day of August next, and that no order for the payment of any money out of court which may be then in court be received at the Accountant-General's office after Saturday, the 14th; and to the end that the suitors may have notice hereof, and apply to the Court as there shall be occasion, to have money paid to them out of the Bank, or Stocks or Annuities transferred to them before the said 19th day of August next.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

A Manual of the Parliamentary Election Law of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. By SAMUEL WARREN, Esq. F.R.S London: Butterworth.

UNFORTUNATELY this volume, bulky as it is, contains only a portion of the Parliamentary Law. It omits entirely all that relates to the proceedings subsequent to the return of the members, such as the petition, the committee, the punishment of bribery and treating, and the disfranchisement of the guilty borough through the machinery of the Act passed during the Session just closed. Two-thirds of the portly volume are occupied with a reprint of the various statutes relating to elections, which fill no less than 362 closely-printed pages, while nearly fifty pages are devoted to a Digest of the Registration Appeals decided by the Court of C. P. but which ought to have appeared in the portion of the volume that treats of the franchise and of registration. The bulk of the book is thus swollen by the introduction of all the statutes that relate to Ireland and Scotland alone, and which, being useless to the English Lawyer, might have been advantageously omitted from a work designed for him. Thus, practically, this formidable volume of Election Law resolves itself into 269 pages of treatise, and if this original portion of it had appeared alone, without being burdened by an appendix twice as bulky as itself, we should have had little else than approbation to bestow upon the work. Nevertheless, the truth must be told that even these 269 pages of treatise are to be subjected to further curtailment before the extent of practical information here to be found can be ascertained. It opens with an Introduction of 31 pages, an essay upon the British Constitution rather than a legal exposition of the Law of Elections—a sketch of the rise and progress of the representative system, very interesting and very ably written, but better adapted for the library of the general reader than for that of the Lawyer, and altogether out of place in a practical law book. Whole pages are extracted from the speeches of Lord John Russell and others on the subject of Parliamentary Reform. Then 27 pages more are given to an account of the Parliamentary Election Law of Scotland and Ireland; and it is not until we arrive at the 60th page that the legal treatise commences, and, as it concludes at page 269, the whole of the practical law of the volume is thus found to be contained in just 209 pages.

These alone are of real interest to the legal reader, and of these we can speak with great commendation. Arranging his subject after the manner of all his predecessors, Mr. WARREN treats, first, of the franchise; then, briefly, of the registration; then of incapacities to elect; then of the qualifications and disqualifications for being elected; then of the duties of the returning officer; then of the election, and of the incidents by which it may be affected—as bribery, treating, interference, intimidation, and violence. These are described very fully and clearly, with the author's wonted copiousness of quotations, and in a style whose grace and beauty will be acknowledged by every reader. The list of incapacities to elect is conveniently arranged in alphabetical order. The greatest defect of this portion of the volume is, the omission from it of so many of the decisions of the Court of Appeal, and placing them together at the end, reference to and fro being always troublesome. In another edition we would recommend the introduction of these in their proper places, and the omission of all the merely Irish and Scotch statutes, thus materially diminishing the bulk and cost of the volume, without in any way impairing its usefulness. Mr. WARREN apologises in his preface for the haste with which it was brought out to meet the present demand. It has come too late even for that, and there will now be ample leisure for perfecting it. So much of it as the author was enabled to complete is well done. It only wants to be made a little more practical and a little less discursive, to be an excellent book upon an important subject.

The County Courts Improvement Act: with Notes, a Digest of all the recent County Courts Cases, an Abstract of the City Small Debts Act, and a copious Index. By E. W. COX and M. LLOYD, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law. London: LAW TIMES Office.

An Appendix to the Fourth Edition of Cox and Lloyd's Practice of the County Courts, containing the above. London: LAW TIMES Office.

THE new Act for improving the County Courts contains some provisions of peculiar interest to the Profession; but it is not, as it is termed by the Queen's printer, an Extension Act. All those clauses were struck out; but so hastily and carelessly that the old title was suffered to remain. As this is likely to mislead, the editors of the present edition of it have given to it the more appropriate name of "The County Courts Improvement Act," to distinguish it from preceding Acts. To make it more complete, they have added a digest of all the cases relating to the practice of the County Courts decided since the publication of the last (the fourth) edition of Cox and Lloyd's Law and Practice of the County Courts, to which it forms a useful and necessary appendix. The City Small Debts Act is included, and a copious index gives ready access to any part of it. The digest of cases is arranged in the order of the original work, to the pages of which reference is made.

A new jurisdiction has been given to the County Courts by an Act of last session, for regulating partnerships among workmen. The sections of this statute are also introduced here.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Assizes.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

DEVIZES, July 13.—This circuit commenced yesterday, when the commission was opened by Barons Platt and Martin. The business is exceedingly light, there being only eighteen prisoners for trial, and two nisi prius causes.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

ABINGDON, July 13.—The cause list presents an entry of six cases, which were all disposed of in about half an hour. Four were undefended actions for goods sold, money lent, &c.; another, a new trial, and marked as a special jury cause, was settled under a judge's order; and in the other cause, a plea puis darrien continuance, alleging an agreement, in the nature of an accord and satisfaction of the causes of action, entered into on the commission day, was tendered on the part of the defendant. The plea having been verified and received, the cause stands over until the next assizes. In the Crown Court, the calendar contained the names of twenty-eight prisoners, charged with the following offences:—Child murder 1 (subsequently ignored by the grand jury); manslaughter, 4; robbery with violence, 4; housebreaking, 1; arson, 2; indecent assaults, 2; false pretences, 1; and larceny, 12.

ABINGDON, JULY 12.—This afternoon the commission for the assizes for Berkshire was opened by Mr. Justice Cresswell and Mr. Justice Williams. The most important cause in the Nisi Prius Court is that of Thoyts v. Hobbs, which is an action of assumpsit by the assignees of a Francis Goddard, an insolvent, to recover the value of property amounting to nearly 1,000*l.* stated to have passed to Hobbs just prior to Goddard's insolvency. This cause was tried at the Lent assizes, at Reading, and a verdict given for the plaintiff for 404*l.* It was subsequently, however, set aside by the Court of Exchequer on the ground of misdirection on certain points by Mr. Justice Wightman before it was tried. The criminal business appears to be heavier than for many years past at a summer assize. The calendar contains the names of twenty-one prisoners for trial, of whom 1 is for infanticide; 4 for manslaughter; arson, 1; highway robbery and assault, 3; burglary, 1; firing a plantation, 1; and the remainder are for petty offences.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.

LINCOLN, July 12.—Mr. Baron Alderson entered the city on Saturday, and forthwith opened the commission in the city and county courts, and then adjourned the business till this morning. Justice Coleridge arrived last evening, he having gone to Oxford to vote at the University election. The calendar is light, and the cause list contains only seven entries.

NOTTINGHAM, July 14.—Mr. Baron Alderson arrived here in the middle of the day, and proceeded to open the commissions for the town and county. The county calendar contains the names of 21 prisoners, and include one charge of murder, two of cutting and wounding, one of rape, one of assault, one of concealment of birth, one of bigamy, one of arson, one of night-poaching, one of burglary, and one of robbery with violence.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

AYLESBURY, July 14.—The Chief Baron and Baron Parke arrived yesterday. The calendar contains the names of 20 prisoners, charged with serious offences, for the most part, but the cause-list presents only three causes, two of them being virtually but one cause.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

YORK, July 12.—Lord Campbell and Mr. Justice Wightman arrived in this city on Saturday. The criminal calendar contains the names of 126 prisoners,—of whom 4 are charged with murder, 1 with attempt to murder, 9 with manslaughter, 26 with assault and robbery, 9 with rape, 25 with burglary, 4 with forgery, 5 with perjury, 4 with cutting and wounding, and the rest with minor offences. The cause list is expected to be very light. The list for the North and East Ridings has 18 entries; the West Riding list will not be published until to-morrow.

HOME CIRCUIT.

HERTFORD, July 12.—The commission for the county of Herts was opened on Saturday. The calendar and the cause-list are both very light, which is usually the case in summer, and the general election also tends to prevent the entry of civil cases. Both Courts proceeded to business this morning, but no cases of any importance were disposed of.

THE RECORDERSHIP OF WINDSOR.—At the quarterly meeting of the Windsor town council, on the 1st inst. the town clerk announced that he had received a communication from Allan Maclean Skinner, esq. of the Oxford Circuit, intimating that he had been appointed to succeed the late Honourable J. C. Talbot, Q.C. as recorder of the borough. At the same meeting the following resolution was passed:—"That this Court deeply deplores the loss which this town has sustained by that solemn dispensation of Providence which has recently deprived this borough of the valuable services of the Hon. John Chetwynd Talbot, Q.C. as recorder; and feels it incumbent to give a permanent expression of the high sense the members of the town council entertain of the exalted virtues, the undeviating rectitude, and those high and ennobling qualities which were constantly exhibited by the late Mr. Talbot, as a private gentleman, a member of the Bar, and the highest legal officer of this borough." It was also agreed that each member of the council should subscribe one guinea, and transmit the total amount, in the name of the mayor and coporation, towards the Talbot scholarship.

It is anticipated that a larger number of election petitions will be presented in the forthcoming session than for many years, and doubtless many seats will be exchanged. It is rumoured that an eminent Queen's counsel has already received twenty-five retainers.—Globe.

CONTENTS.

To Readers and Correspondents.

"T. C., Portsea."—Cordially agreeing in our correspondent's opinion, that the true remedy is to establish for both branches of the Profession a high standard of general as well as legal knowledge as a title to admission to practice, we shall not fail to make use of his hints, for which we thank him. His letter has been mislaid; hence the delay in noticing it.

"ARTICLED CLERK."—It would scarcely be required of him that he should master the new law by Michaelmas Term. But it would be as well to study it, so as to be prepared.

"W. B."—The series is intended to be continued as soon as the recent changes in the law, which are of urgent importance, shall have been fully laid before our readers.

"STUDENT."—The Equity Statutes will be issued as soon as the new Orders are ready by which they are to be carried into effect. Without them they are unintelligible and worthless.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1852.

TO READERS.

THE great importance of all the cases decided in the Courts of Appeal, especially those in the House of Lords, makes it incumbent upon us to supply the Profession with the most complete and accurate reports of them. But accuracy and completeness, without which they would be worthless either for perusal, or citation as authorities, cannot be attained without giving to them considerable space. Hence the unavoidable length of many of the recent cases and of many yet to come, for which we have been unable as yet to find room. The cause of this unwonted influx of important cases is found in the fact that the House of Lords before its rising cleared off its entire list of appeals; the Common Law Courts exhausted their lists, and the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Justices are striving to do the same. The value to the practitioner and the student of such a collection of reports as the present year will yield, presenting as they do, in almost every case, the judgments verbatim, will, we trust, more than compensate for the inevitable encroachment thus temporarily made upon other departments of the LAW TIMES, and for the postponement of some, where all come crowding together in numbers far exceeding the limits even of our extensive weekly sheet.

We could, of course, cut them down to mere short notes of cases; but this, we presume, would not be satisfactory to any of our readers, as they could not then profit by present reading of them, nor would they be of any value for future reference.

The case of Lumley v. Wagner, reported from the Lord Chancellor's Court, occupies a considerable space, but it is one of the most important and able of the judgments of the present Chancellor, being a complete review of the law of injunction, and laying down some new principles. It will henceforth be a leading case, and therefore we were unwilling to abbreviate it.

THE FIRST BLOW.

WITH profound regret we learn from a periodical, which avows itself to be conducted by, and to be the organ of, the Junior Bar, that their design is by no means abandoned of practising without the intervention of an Attorney. The 'plan' recommended to the Junior Bar is, however, not that of an open attack upon the Attorneys, a bold and brave endeavour to supplant them and to do without them; but the battle is to be begun by a covert warfare,—the approaches to the end sought are to be made by stealthy steps. The Junior Bar are advised by their organ to open the campaign by undertaking, without the aid of an attorney, the cases of poor suitors in the County Courts, that, having thus obtained a footing there and become accustomed to dispense with an Attorney, they may teach the public and satisfy themselves at the same time that an Attorney is not necessary, and that the Bar can do the suitor's work without the Attorney's help. It will be the thin point of the wedge; the rest will certainly follow. This is the suggestion of the organ of the Junior Bar—the Legal Examiner:—

> We venture to express our opinion that, considering the nature and objects of the County Courts, there are cases in which the Bar ought to relax the rule of etiquette. Where a party is poor, especially in the case of a defendant, and when the answer to a plaintiff's claim is one of a simple character, but to which the party himself is unable to do justice, we really think it to be the duty of the Bar to lend their assistance in court, without the formality of instructions by an attorney.

We do most earnestly deprecate the object thus sought to be attained, because we believe it will be fraught with the deepest injury to the Profession, the two branches of which will thus be converted into hostile camps of rivals and competitors, to the damage and discomfiture of both. But even more than to the object sought are we averse to the manner in which it is proposed to be pursued. It is a question upon which men may fairly differ in their opinions, whether it be desirable to link together the Bar and the Attorneys, or whether the two branches of the Profession should enter the lists in a struggle for clients, one against the other. Howsoever we may differ in our conclusions as to the propriety of either course, we have no right to find fault with those who think otherwise, or to blame those who advise or act upon the principle, that the Bar should assert its entire independence of the Attorneys, and that open war should be proclaimed between them. But it is impossible to approve the sort of covert warfare thus proposed. Let not the approach be made under a masked battery. The project is right or it is wrong. If right, let it be openly and plainly advocated and pursued; if wrong, let it be openly abandoned. We have so often stated our reasons for opposing the proposition of the Junior Bar, and we have such high authorities to adduce in support of those objections,—no less than the LORD CHANCELLOR, the LORD CHIEF-JUSTICE OF ENGLAND, and Lord CRANWORTH,—that we need not now repeat them. Our present purpose is only to enter our instant and earnest protest, on the part of the Profession, against the adoption of the first step that has been proposed on behalf of the Junior Bar by its organ, towards that which, we verily believe, would lead, in no long time, to the destruction of both its branches. If the Bar should invade the province of the Attorneys, the Attorneys will be justified in a similar attack upon their invaders, and the public, who have no love either for the one or for the other, will take advantage of their common weakness (produced by an internecine warfare) to annihilate both.

THE COMMON LAW PROCEDURE ACT.

THERE has been much anxious consultation with Mr. KERR, who has undertaken the LAW TIMES edition of this Statute, whether it should be prepared and printed hastily, with only a few notes, a short introduction, and an index, to serve merely for present reading and to be thrown aside when a more perfect one could be produced, or if, at the cost of two or three weeks' delay, he should annotate it carefully, shew in what the new law has altered the old law, give practical instructions, present a sketch of an action as it will be under the altered procedure, introduce the necessary forms, and, in short, place in the hands of the Lawyers a book of real value and permanent utility. It was a question of time. Clearly, it would be impossible to produce anything more than a reprint of the Act itself, with a few notes, if it was to be prepared, printed, and published in three weeks from its becoming law. On the other hand, if made a book of substantial worth, its publication must be delayed for two or three weeks. This was the choice before us. After much deliberation, it was determined that the LAW TIMES edition of so important a statute should not be merely an ephemeral and almost worthless reprint, but a careful and complete book upon the new Procedure, such as should be useful to the Profession and creditable to the editor; and we trust that the decision will be approved by those who have ordered it. But as they may be desirous in the meanwhile of making some acquaintance with the statute itself, we have in this number commenced the publication of it entire, so that, while waiting for Mr. KERR's copiously annotated edition, they may gather from the text of the law itself a general knowledge of the changes it has effected.

It may be stated that Mr. KERR confidently expects to complete his labours by the end of next week, and all the arrangements are made for rapid printing and instant delivery to the subscribers.

ADVOCACY.

THE Legal Observer questions the correctness of our statement, that by the strict law as it was before the recent alteration, an Attorney was not entitled to appear as Advocate for another Attorney, although such was the practice of the Profession, custom having sanctioned what the strict law prohibits.

Our authority is the Court of Q. B.; the judgment, that of the Lord Chief Justice of England; the case, that of Mr. AMOS, on the occasion of the criminal information that was moved against him by Mr. CARTER. Lord CAMPBELL then explicitly declared it to be the opinion of the Court that it was illegal for an Attorney to appear as an Advocate, instructed by another Attorney.

No reasons were assigned for this dictum, but they are sufficiently obvious. It results from the well-known rule of law, delegatus non potest delegari. An Attorney is the agent of the client, and he cannot delegate his agency to another. If he employs another Attorney to conduct a case for him as an Advocate, he can so employ him only in his character of Attorney, for in no other character has he a right to appear in the Court. But, if he appears as an Attorney, it must be as an Attorney of the client, and not as the Attorney of the Attorney, or the rule above stated would be violated. Try it thus.

The Attorney is legally responsible for the conduct of his client's case, and an action will lie against him for negligence. Now, suppose that the actual Attorney in the case had instructed another Attorney to appear for him, to conduct it as an Advocate, and the Advocate-Attorney were to be guilty of gross negligence, and an action were to be brought against him, would not his answer be, that he was not the Attorney in the case? And would not that be a sufficient answer? But, if he be not the Attorney in the case, he clearly could have no right to appear in it, for the right to appear in any case does not belong to the Profession generally, but to the particular Attorney in the case then before the Court, and to no other.

We are now only stating what is the law, and the reasons for it; we are not vindicating its propriety. So far from approving it, we think that it might be advantageously modified; that its enforcement will operate unjustly and injuriously over many parts of the country, where there is not now, nor is there likely to be, for a long time to come, an efficient Bar; and therefore we would suggest the propriety of some such alteration as this, namely, to authorise the employment by one Attorney of another, as an Advocate in all courts in which a Bar of not less than four Counsel shall not be in regular attendance. Attorneys and suitors are equally entitled to require that there shall be a reasonable choice of Advocates, if compelled to take them from one class only.

Such an arrangement would probably reconcile all interests, for then there would be an option in the County Courts to have as an Advocate either

The Attorney actually concerned in the case, and instructed by the client; or

One of four Counsel regularly attending;

Or, if there be no Counsel, or less than four,

An Attorney instructed by the Attorney in the case.

COSTS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

The Lord Chancellor has not yet appointed the five Judges who are to frame the new scale of Attorneys' costs in the County Courts, under the first section of the new Act.

The whole value of this provision to the Profession will depend upon the liberality with which that scale is constructed.

Having obtained this boon for the Attorneys, we feel, of course, more than common interest in its full and efficient adoption, and we shall not relax our vigilance until it is completed.

The next step to be taken will be to prepare such a scale of costs, to be submitted to the committee of the Judges when appointed, as may be at once satisfactory to the Profession and just to the public.

Necessarily, it must be a somewhat lower scale than that adopted in the Superior Courts; but it may be framed without curtailing the profits of the practitioners, for there will be no agents to share them.

We ask our practical readers to direct their attention to this important subject, and if they will send us such scales of fees as each may consider fair, we will consider and compare them, and from the whole construct one, which we will publish here for the purpose of taking upon it the opinion of the Profession, previously to submitting it to the committee of the Judges.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

The list of Lawyers in the new Parliament is not so formidable as it threatened to be, from the long array of legal candidates for that honour. Very nearly one-half of them were defeated at the polls. The actual increase of their numbers, as compared with those in the last Parliament, is trifling. The wonder is how, in the present state of the Profession, so many of its members were enabled to provide for the unavoidable expenses of an election. It would seem to shew that the Lawyers are not so badly off as they appear to be; or is it that, in a fit of desperation, they have been staking all upon a last chance?

We wait the completion of the returns before we present to our readers a complete list of the Lawyers in the new Parliament. But there is one very creditable fact which we may note now, as falling within our personal sonal knowledge.

No less than eight members of the Western Circuit have been elected, all of them for towns within their circuit; three of them for their native places, viz. Mr. Phinn for Bath, Mr. Collier for Plymouth, and Mr. Carter for Tavistock. This is highly creditable to the men so chosen, and to the towns that have chosen them. They have been preferred where they are best known by their friends and neighbours, who, instead of feeling jealous at their rise, have deemed that honours won by their fellow townsmen are, in truth, reflected upon themselves. These instances have proved that, in the West of England, at least, there are noble exceptions to the saying, that "a prophet has no honour in his own country."

THE NEW EQUITY REFORMS.

The Equity Reform Acts of last session are only skeletons. Everything is to be done by Orders, which, we understand, are in a forward state, and will be issued before the Vacation. The Acts alone being worthless without them, the announced edition by Mr. Tudor will not be published until they can be made intelligible and useful by the introduction of the Orders that are to give them effect.

AN ABUSE OF THE LAW.

The following is a copy of a Broker's Bill for a distress for rent taken at Manchester on the property of a poor widow. Is it possible that these can be the usual charges in that town? If so, the law on this subject requires immediate amendment, and we direct to it the attention of the Law Reformers in Parliament:—

PROMISSORY NOTE STAMP.

We are glad to be able to set at rest the question as to the effect of the decision in Escritt v. Mason. The attorney for one of the parties has favoured us with a copy of the note in question, and it proves to be, as our various correspondents had suggested, and not as our reporter had supposed. It was payable to bearer on demand, and does not, therefore, support the point stated in the head-note of the report. The following communication speaks for itself:—

ESCRITT v. MASON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—As the attorney having the conduct of the trial of this cause in London, I beg to inclose you a copy of note on which the action was brought. You will observe that the same is made payable to bearer on demand, which rendered it liable to the higher stamp-duty. The defendant alleged that the note was copied from a country bank note, which, of course, would be capable of being reissued, and therefore liable to the higher duty.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

NEW STATUTES.

[In this record of Legislation only the Statutes of practical utility are given at length. Of the others an abstract or the titles only are presented.]

Cap. LXXVI.

An Act to amend the Process, Practice, and Mode of Pleading in the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster, and in the Superior Courts of the Counties Palatine of Lancaster and Durham. (June 30, 1852.)

Whereas the process, practice, and mode of pleading in the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster may be rendered more simple and speedy: be it enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Commencement of Act.—The provisions of this Act shall come into operation on the twenty-fourth day of October in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two.

Writs for commencement of actions.—And with respect to the writs for the commencement of personal actions in the said Courts against defendants, whether in or out of the jurisdiction of the Courts, be in enacted as follows:—

2. Personal actions, when defendant resides within the jurisdiction, to be commenced by writ of summons in form No. 1 of Schedule A.—All personal actions brought in her Majesty's Superior Courts of Common Law, where the defendant is residing or supposed to reside within the jurisdiction of the said courts, shall be commenced by writ of summons in the form contained in the schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 1, and in every such writ and copy thereof the place and county of the residence or supposed residence of the party defendent, or wherein the defendant shall be or shall be supposed to be, shall be mentioned; and such writ shall be issued by any one of the officers of the said courts respectively by whom like process hath been heretofore issued from such court, or by such other officer as the Court shall direct.

3. No form or cause of action to be mentioned in writ.—It shall not be necessary to mention any form or cause of action in any writ of summons, or in any notice of writ of summons, issued under the authority of this Act.

4. Writ to state names of all defendants, and for only one action.—Every writ of summons shall contain the names of all the defendants, and shall not contain the name or names of any defendant or defendants in more actions than one.

5. Writ to be dated of day of issuing, and tested in the name of chief or senior judge.—Every writ of summons shall bear date on the day on which the same shall be issued, and shall be tested in the name of the Lord Chief Justice or Lord Chief Baron of the court from which the same shall issue, or in case of a vacancy of such office, then in the name of a senior puisne judge of the said court.

6. Writ to be indorsed with name and abode of attorney, or a memorandum that writ has been sued by plaintiff in person.—Every writ of summons shall be indorsed with the name and place of abode of the attorney actually suing out the same, and in case such attorney shall not be an attorney of the court in which the same is sued out, then also with the name and place of abode of the attorney of such Court in whose name such writ shall be taken out; and when the attorney actually suing out any writ shall sue out the same as agent for an attorney in the country, the name and place of abode of such attorney in the country shall also be indorsed upon the said writ; and in case no attorney shall be employed to issue the writ, then it shall be indorsed with a memorandum expressing that the same has been sued out by the plaintiff in person, mentioning the city, town, or parish, and also the name of the hamlet, street, and number of the house of such plaintiff's residence, if any such there be.

7. Attorney on demand to declare whether writ issued by his authority, and to declare name and abode of his client if ordered—If writ issued with out authority of attorney, proceedings to be stayed.—Every attorney whose name shall be indorsed on any writ issued by authority of this Act shall, on demand in writing, made by or on behalf of any defendant, declare forthwith whether such writ has been issued by him or with his authority or privity and if he shall answer in the affirmative, then he shall, also, in case the Court or a judge shall so order and direct, declare in writing, within a time to be allowed by such Court or judge, the profession, occupation, or quality, and place of abode of the plaintiff, on pain of being guilty of a contempt of the Court from which such writ shall appear to have been issued; and if such attorney shall declare that the writ was not issued by him, or with his authority or privity, all proceedings upon the same shall be stayed, and no further proceedings shall be taken thereupon without leave of the Court or a judge.

8. Indorsement of debt and costs on writ and copy of writ for a debt, with notice that proceedings will be stayed on payment within four days.—Upon the writ and copy of any writ served for the payment of any debt the amount of the debt shall be stated, and the amount of what the plaintiff's attorney claims for the costs of such writ, copy, and service, and attendance to receive debt and costs, and it shall be further stated that upon payment thereof within four days to the plaintiff or his attorney, further proceeding will be stayed; which indorsement shall be written or printed in the following form or to the like effect:—

"The plaintiff claims £ for debt, and £ for costs, and if the amount thereof be paid to the plaintiff or to his attorney within four days from the service hereof further proceedings will be stayed."

But the defendant shall be at liberty, notwithstanding such payment, to have the costs taxed, and if more than one-sixth shall be disallowed, the plaintiff's attorney shall pay the costs of taxation.

9. Concurrent writs may be issued.—The plaintiff in any such action may, at any time during six months from the issuing of the original writ of summons, issue one or more concurrent writ or writs, each concurrent writ to bear teste of the same day as the original writ, and to be marked with a seal bearing the word "concurrent," and the date of issuing the concurrent writ; and such seal shall be provided and kept for that purpose at the offices of the Masters of the said courts, and shall be impressed upon the writ by the proper officer of the court out of which the original writ issued: Provided always, that such concurrent writ or writs shall only be in force for the period during which the original writ in such action shall be in force.

10. From commencement of this Act certain provisions of 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, are repealed.—From the time when this Act shall commence and take effect, so much of a certain Act of Parliament passed in the second year of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for Uniformity of Process in Personal Actions in his Majesty's Courts of Law at Westminster," as relates to the duration of writs, and to alias and pluries writs, and to the proceedings necessary for making the first writ in any action available to prevent the operation of any statute whereby the time for the commencement of any action may be limited, shall be repealed, except so far as may be necessary for supporting any writs that have been issued before the commencement of this Act, and any proceedings taken or to be taken thereon.

11. Renewal of writs of summons to save the Statute of Limitation, and for other purposes.—No original writ of summons shall be in force for more than six months from the day of the date thereof, including the day of such date; but if any defendant therein named may not have been served therewith, the original or concurrent writ of summons may be renewed at any time before its expiration, for six months from the date of such renewal, and so from time to time during the currency of the renewed writ, by being marked with a seal bearing the date of the day, month, and year of such renewal, such seal to be provided and kept for that purpose at the offices of the Masters of the said Superior Courts, and to be impressed upon the writ by the proper officer of the court out of which such writ issued, upon delivery to him by the plaintiff or his attorney of a præcipe in such form as has heretofore been required to be delivered upon the obtaining of an alias writ; and a writ of summons so renewed shall remain in force and be available to prevent the operation of any statute whereby the time for the commencement of the action may be limited, and for all other purposes, from the date of the issuing of the original writ of summons.

12. Renewal of writs issued before this Act.—Where any writ of summons in any such action shall have been issued before, and shall be in force at, the commencement of this Act, such writ may at any time before the expiration thereof be renewed under the provisions of and in the manner directed by this Act; and where any writ, issued in continuation of a preceding writ according to the provisions of the said Act of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, shall be in force and unexpired, or where one month next after the expiration thereof shall not have elapsed at the commencement of this Act, such continuing writ may, without being returned non est inventus, or entered of record according to the provisions of the said act of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, be filed in the office of the court within one month next after the expiration of such writ, or within twenty days after the commencement of this Act; and the original writ of summons in such action may thereupon, but within the same period of one month next after the expiration of the continuing writ, or within twenty days after the commencement of this Act, be renewed under the provisions of and in the manner directed by this Act; and every such writ shall after such renewal have the same duration and effect for all purposes, and shall, if necessary, be subsequently renewed, in the same manner as if it had originally issued under the authority of this Act.

13. Production of renewed writ evidence of commencement of action.—The production of a writ of summons purporting to be marked with the seal of the court, shewing the same to have been renewed according to this Act, shall be sufficient evidence of its having been so renewed, and of the commencement of the action as of the first date of such renewed writ for all purposes.

14. Writ may be served in any county.—The writ of summons in any action may be served in any county.

15. Indorsement of service to be made.—The person serving the writ of summons shall and he is hereby required, within three days at least after such service, to indorse on the writ the day of the month and week of the service thereof, otherwise the plaintiff shall not be at liberty, in case of non-appearance, to proceed under this Act; and every affidavit of service of such writ shall mention the day on which such indorsement was made.

16. As to service of writ on corporation and inhabitants of hundreds and towns.—Every such writ of summons issued against a corporation aggregate may be served on the mayor or other head officer, or on the town clerk, clerk, treasurer, or secretary of such corporation; and every such writ issued against the inhabitants of a hundred, or other like district, may be served on the high constable thereof, or any one of the high constables thereof; and every such writ issued against the inhabitants of any county of any city or town, or the inhabitants of any franchise, liberty, city, town, or place not being part of a hundred or other like district, on some peace officer thereof.

17. Proceedings where personal service cannot be effected, but defendant knows of the writ, and evades service.—The service of the writ of summons, wherever it may be practicable, shall, as heretofore, personal; but it shall be lawful for the plaintiff to apply from time to time, on affidavit, to the court out of which the writ of summons issued, or to a judge; and in case it shall appear to such court or judge that reasonable efforts have been made to effect personal service, and either that the writ has come to the knowledge of the defendant, or that he wilfully evades service of the same, and has not appeared thereto, it shall be lawful for such court or judge to order that the plaintiff be at liberty to proceed as if personal service had been effected, subject to such conditions as to the court or judge may seem fit.

18. As to actions against British subjects residing out of the jurisdiction of Superior Courts.—In case any defendant, being a British subject, is residing out of the jurisdiction of the said Superior Courts, in any place except in Scotland or Ireland, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff to issue a writ of summons in the form contained in the schedule (A.) to his Act annexed, marked No. 2, which writ shall bear the indorsement contained in the said form, purporting that such writ is for service out of the jurisdiction of the said Superior Courts; and the time for appearance by the defendant to such writ shall be regulated by the distance from England of the place where the defendant is residing; and it shall be lawful for the Court or judge, upon being satisfied by affidavit that there is a cause of action, which arose within the jurisdiction, or in respect of the breach of a contract made within the jurisdiction, and that the writ was personally served upon the defendant, or that reasonable efforts were made to effect personal service thereof upon the defendant, and that it came to his knowledge, and either that the defendant wilfully neglects to appear to such writ, or that he is living out of the jurisdiction of the said Courts, in order to defeat and delay his creditors, to direct from time to time that the plaintiff shall be at liberty to proceed in the action in such manner and subject to such conditions as to such Court or judge may seem fit, having regard to the time allowed for the defendant to appear being reasonable, and to the other circumstances of the case: Provided always, that the plaintiff shall, and he is hereby required to, prove the amount of the debt or damages claimed by him in such action, either before a jury upon a writ of inquiry, or before one of the Masters of the said Superior Courts in the manner hereinafter provided, according to the nature of the case, as such Court or judge may direct; and the making such proof shall be a condition precedent to his obtaining judgment.

19. As to actions against foreigners residing out of the jurisdiction of Superior Courts.—In any action against a person residing out of the jurisdiction of the said courts, and not being a British subject, the like proceedings may be taken as against a British subject resident out of the jurisdiction, save, that in lieu of the form of writ of summons in the schedule (A) to this Act annexed marked No. 2, the plaintiff shall issue a writ of summons according to the form contained in the said schedule (A.) marked No. 3, and shall in manner aforesaid serve a notice of such last-mentioned writ upon the defendant therein mentioned, which notice shall be in the form contained in the said schedule also marked No. 3; and such service shall be of the same force and effect as the service of the writ of summons in any action against a British subject resident abroad, and by leave of the Court or a judge, upon their or his being satisfied by affidavit as aforesaid, the like proceedings may be had and taken thereupon.

20. Omission to insert or indorse matters in or on writ not to nullify it.—If the plaintiff or his attorney shall omit to insert in or indorse on any writ or copy thereof any of the matters required by this Act to be inserted therein or indorsed thereon, such writ or copy thereof shall not on that account be held void, but it may be set aside as irregular, or amended, upon application to be made to the Court out of which the same shall issue, or to a judge; and such amendment may be made, upon any application to set aside the writ, upon such terms as to the Court or judge may seem fit.

21. Substitution by mistake or inadvertence of one form of writ for another may be by judge without costs.—If either of the forms of writ of summons contained in the schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, and marked respectively Nos. 1, 2, and 3, shall by mistake or inadvertence be substituted for any other of them, such mistake or inadvertence shall not be an objection to the writ or any other proceeding in such action, but the writ may, upon an ex parte application to a judge, whether before or after any application to set aside such writ or any proceeding thereon, and whether the same or notice thereof shall have been served or not, be amended by such judge without costs.

22. Writs for service within and without jurisdiction may be concurrent, and vice versâ.—A writ for service within the jurisdiction may be issued and marked as a concurrent writ with one for service but of the jurisdiction, and a writ for service out of the jurisdiction may be issued and marked as a concurrent writ with one for service within the jurisdiction.

23. Affidavits in certain cases may be sworn before a consul. Any affidavit for the purpose of enabling the Court or a judge to direct proceedings to be taken against a defendant residing out of the jurisdiction of the said courts may be sworn before any consul-general, consul, vice-consul, or consular agent for the time being, appointed by her Majesty at any foreign port or place; and every affidavit so sworn by virtue of this Act may be used and shall be admitted in evidence, saving all just exceptions, provided it purport to be signed by such consul-general, consul, vice-consul, or consular agent, upon proof of the official character and signature of the person appearing to have signed the same: provided always, that if any person shall forge the signature of any such affidavit, or shall use or tender in evidence any such affidavit with a false or counterfeit signature thereto, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, he shall be guilty of felony, and shall upon conviction be liable to transportation for seven years, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three years, nor less than one year, with hard labour; and every person who shall be charged with committing any felony under this Act may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and, if convicted, sentenced, and his offence may be laid and charged to have been committed in the county or place in which he shall be apprehended or be in custody; and every accessory before or after the fact to any such offence may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and, if convicted, sentenced, and his offence may be laid and charged to have been committed, in any county or place in which the principal offender may be tried: provided also, that if any person shall wilfully and corruptly make a false affidavit before such consul-general, consul, vice-consul, or consular agent, every person so offending shall be deemed and taken to be guilty of perjury, in like manner as if such false affidavit had been made in England before competent authority, and shall and may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and, if convicted, sentenced, and his offence may be laid and charged to have been committed in any county or place in which he shall be apprehended or be in custody, as if his offence had been actually committed in that county or place.

24. Distringas to compel appearance or to proceed to outlawry abolished.—From the time when this Act shall commence and take effect, so much of the said Act of his late Majesty King William the Fourth as relates to the writ of distringas, and the proceeding thereon, whether for the purpose of compelling appearance or for proceedings to outlawry, shall be repealed, except so far as may be necessary for the purpose of giving effect to proceedings already taken, or to be taken after the commencement of this Act, under or by reason of any writ of distringas issued before the commencement of this Act, or under any rule or order authorising the issuing of such writ, and made before the commencement of this Act.

25. Special indorsement of the particulars of debts or liquidated demands may be made on the writ—Special indorsement to stand for particulars of demand.—In all cases where the defendant resides within the jurisdiction of the Court, and the claim is for a debt or liquidated demand in money, with or without interest, arising upon a contract, express or implied, as, for instance, on a bill of exchange, promissory note, or cheque, or other simple contract debt, or on a bond or contract under seal for payment of a liquidated amount of money, or on a statute where the sum sought to be recovered is a fixed sum of money, or in the nature of a debt, or on a guarantee, whether under seal or not, where the claim against the principal is in respect of such debt or liquidated demand, bill, cheque, or note, the plaintiff shall be at liberty to make upon the writ of summons and copy thereof a special indorsement of the particulars of his claim, in the form contained in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 4, or to the like effect; and when a writ of summons has been indorsed in the special form hereinbefore mentioned, the indorsement shall be considered as particulars of demand, and no further or other particulars of demand need be delivered, unless ordered by a Court or judge.

And with respect to the appearance of the defendant, and proceedings of the plaintiff in default of appearance, be it enacted as follows.

26. Appearance according to provisions of Acts of 12 Geo. 1, c. 29, and 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, abolished.—From the time when this Act shall commence and take effect, so much of a certain Act of Parliament passed in the twelfth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the First, intituled "An Act to prevent frivolous and vexatious Arrests," and so much of the said Act of his late Majesty King William the Fourth as relates to the entering an appearance for the defendant by the plaintiff in any action in any of the said Superior Courts, shall be repealed, except so far as may be necessary to support proceedings heretofore taken, and no appearance need be entered by the plaintiff for the defendant.

27. Final judgment upon writ specially indorsed in default of appearance.—In case of non-appearance by the defendant, where the writ of summons is indorsed in the special form hereinbefore provided, it shall and may be lawful for the plaintiff, on filing an affidavit of personal service of the writ of summons, or a judge's order for leave to proceed under the provisions of this Act, and a copy of the writ of summons, at once to sign final judgment in the form contained in the schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 5 (on which judgment no proceeding in error shall lie), for any sum not exceeding the sum indorsed on the writ, together with interest at the rate specified, if any, to the date of the judgment, and a sum for costs (to be fixed by the Masters of the said Superior Courts, or any three of them, subject to the approval of the judges thereof, or any eight of them, of whom the Lord Chief Justices and the Lord Chief Baron shall be three), unless the plaintiff claim more than such fixed sum, in which case the costs shall be taxed in the ordinary way; and the plaintiff may upon such judgment issue execution at the expiration of eight days from the last day for appearance, and not before: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Court or a judge, either before or after final judgment, to let in the defendant to defend upon an application, supported by satisfactory affidavits accounting for the non-appearance, and disclosing a defence upon the merits.

28. Judgment for non-appearance where the writ is not indorsed in the special form.—In case of such non-appearance, where the writ of summons is not indorsed in the special form hereinbefore provided, it shall and may be lawful for the plaintiff, on filing an affidavit of personal service of the writ of summons, or a judge's order for leave to proceed under the provisions of this Act, and a copy of the writ of summons, to file a declaration indorsed with a notice to plead in eight days, and to sign judgment by default at the expiration of the time to plead, so indorsed as aforesaid; and in the event of no plea being delivered, where the cause of action mentioned in the declaration is for any of the claims which might have been inserted in the special indorsement on the writ of summons hereinbefore provided, and the amount claimed is indorsed on the writ of summons, the judgment shall be final, and execution may issue for an amount not exceeding the amount indorsed on the writ of summons, with interest at the rate specified, if any, and the sum fixed by the Masters for costs, as hereinbefore mentioned, unless the plaintiff claim more, in which case the costs shall be taxed in the ordinary way: Provided always, that in such case the plaintiff shall not be entitled to more costs than if he had made such special indorsement, and signed judgment upon non-appearance.

29. Appearance to be entered at any time before judgment.—The defendant may appear at any time before judgment, and if he appear after the time specified either in the writ of summons, or in any rule or order to proceed as if personal service had been effected, he shall, after notice of such appearance to the plaintiff or his attorney, as the case may be, be in the same position as to pleadings and other proceedings in the action as if he had appeared in time: Provided always, that a defendant appearing after the time appointed by the writ shall not be entitled to any further time for pleading or any other proceeding than if he had appeared within such appointed time.

30. Appearance by the defendant in person to give an address at which proceedings may be served.—Every appearance by the defendant in person shall give an address, at which it shall be sufficient to leave all pleadings and other proceedings not requiring personal service; and if such address be not given, the appearance shall not be received; and if an address so given shall be illusory or fictitious, the appearance shall be irregular, and may be set aside by the Court or a judge, and the plaintiff may be permitted to proceed by sticking up the proceedings in the Master's office without further service.

31. Mode of appearance to writ of summons.—The mode of appearance to every such writ of summons, or under the authority of this Act, shall be by delivering a memorandum in writing according to the following form, or to the like effect:—

"A, Plaintiff, against C. D. | The defendant C. D. appears in person.
against C. D. and another, | E. F. attorney for C. D. appears for him. or against C. D. and others.

"[If the defendant appears in person here give his address."]

"Entered the day of , 18 ."

Such memorandum to be delivered to the proper officer or person in that behalf, and to be dated on the day of the delivery thereof.

32. Proceedings mentioned in writ or notice may be had and taken. All such proceedings as are mentioned in any writ or notice issued under this Act shall and may be had and taken in default of a defendant's appearance.

33. Proceedings where only some of the defendants appear to a writ specially endorsed.—In any action brought against two or more defendants, where the writ of summons is indorsed in the special form hereinbefore provided, if one or more of such defendants only shall appear, and another or others of them shall not appear, it shall and may be lawful for the plaintiff to sign judgment against such defendant or defendants only as shall not have appeared, and before declaration against the other defendant or defendants, to issue execution thereupon, in which case he shall be taken to have abandoned his action against the defendant or defendants who shall have appeared; or the plaintiff may, before issuing such execution, declare against such defendant or defendants as shall have appeared, stating, by way of suggestion, the judgment obtained against the other defendant or defendants who shall not have appeared, in which case the judgment so obtained against the defendant or defendants who shall not have appeared shall operate and take effect in like manner as a judgment by default obtained before the commencement of this Act against one or more of the several defendants in an action of debt before the commencement of this Act.

And with respect to the joinder of parties to actions, be it enacted as follows:

34. Nonjoinder and misjoinder of plaintiffs may be amended before trial. It shall and may be lawful for the Court or a judge, at any time before the trial of any cause, to order that any person or persons, not joined as plaintiff or plaintiffs in such cause, shall be so joined; or that any person or persons, originally joined as plaintiff or plaintiffs, shall be struck out from such cause, if it shall appear to such Court or judge that injustice will not be done by such amendment, and that the person or persons to be added as aforesaid, consent, either in person or by writing, under his, her, or their hands, to be so joined, or that the person or persons to be struck out as aforesaid were originally introduced without his, her, or their consent, or that such person or persons consent in manner aforesaid to be so struck out; and such amendment shall be made upon such terms as to the amendment of the pleadings (if any), postponement of the trial, and other [illegible] ment is made shall think proper; and when any such amendment shall have been made, the liability of any person or persons, who shall have been added as co-plaintiff or co-plaintiffs, shall, subject to any terms imposed as aforesaid, be the same as if such person or persons had been originally joined in such cause.

35. Nonjoinder and misjoinder of plaintiffs may be amended at the trial, as in cases of amendments of variances under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42.—In case it shall appear at the trial of any action that there has been a misjoinder of plaintiffs, or that some person or persons, not joined as plaintiff or plaintiffs, ought to have been so joined, and the defendant shall not, at or before the time of pleading, have given notice in writing that he objects to such nonjoinder, specifying therein the name or names of such person or persons, such misjoinder or nonjoinder may be amended, as a variance, at the trial by any Court of Record holding plea in civil actions, and by any judge sitting at Nisi Prius, or other presiding officer, in like manner as to the mode of amendment, and proceedings consequent thereon, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit, as in the case of amendments of variances under an Act of Parliament passed in the session of Parliament, held in the third and fourth years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the further Amendment of the Law, and the better Advancement of Justice," if it shall appear to such Court, or judge, or other presiding officer, that such misjoinder or nonjoinder was not for the purpose of obtaining an undue advantage, and that injustice will not be done by such amendment, and that the person or persons, to be added as aforesaid, consent, either in person or by writing, under his, her, or their hands, to be so joined, or that the person or persons, to be struck out as aforesaid, were originally introduced without his, her, or their consent, or that such person or persons consent, in manner aforesaid, to be so struck out; and such amendment shall be made upon such terms as the Court, or judge, or other presiding officer, by whom such amendment is made, shall think proper; and when any such amendment shall have been made, the liability of any person or persons, who shall have been added as co-plaintiff or co-plaintiffs, shall, subject to any terms imposed as aforesaid, be the same as if such person or persons had been originally joined in such action.

36. Upon notice or plea of nonjoinder of plaintiffs, proceedings may be amended.—In case such notice be given, or any plea in abatement of nonjoinder of a person or persons as co-plaintiff or co-plaintiffs, in cases where such plea in abatement may be pleaded by the defendant, the plaintiff shall be at liberty, without any order, to amend the writ and other proceedings before plea, by adding the name or names of the person or persons named in such notice or plea in abatement, and to proceed in the action without any further appearance, on payment of the costs of, and occasioned by such amendment only, and in such case the defendant shall be at liberty to plead de novo.

37. Misjoinder of defendants may be amended before or at trial.—It shall and may be lawful for the Court or a judge in the case of the joinder of too many defendants in any action on contract, at any time before the trial of such cause, to order that the name or names of one or more of such defendants be struck out, if it shall appear to such Court or judge that injustice will not be be done by such amendment; and the amendment shall be made upon such terms as the Court or judge, by whom such amendment is made, shall think proper; and in case it shall appear at the trial of any action on contract that there has been a misjoinder of defendants, such misjoinder may be amended, as a variance, at the trial, in like manner as the misjoinder of plaintiffs has been hereinbefore directed to be amended, and upon such terms as the Court, or judge, or other presiding officer, by whom such amendment is made, shall think proper.

38. Upon plea in abatement for nonjoinder of defendants, proceedings may be amended.—In any action on contract where the nonjoinder of any person or persons as a co-defendant or co-defendants has been pleaded in abatement, the plaintiff shall be at liberty, without any order, to amend the writ of summons and the declaration, by adding the name or names of the person or persons named in such plea in abatement as joint contractors, and to serve the amended writ upon the person or persons so named in such plea in abatement, and to proceed against the original defendant or defendants, and the person or persons so named in such plea in abatement: provided that the date of such amendment shall, as between the person or persons so named in such plea in abatement and the plaintiff, be considered for all purposes as the commencement of the action.

39. Provision in the case of subsequent proceedings against the persons named in a plea in abatement for nonjoinder of defendants.—In all cases after such plea in abatement and amendment, if it shall appear upon the trial of the action that the person or persons so named in such plea in abatement was or were jointly liable with the original defendant or defendants, the original defendant or defendants shall be entitled as against the plaintiff to the costs of such plea in abatement and amendment; but if at such trial it shall appear that the original defendant or any of the original defendants is or are liable, but that one or more of the persons named in such plea in abatement is or are not liable as a contracting party or parties, the plaintiff shall nevertheless be entitled to judgment against the other defendant or defendants who shall appear to be liable; and every defendant who is not so liable shall have judgment, and shall be entitled to his costs as against the plaintiff, who shall be allowed the same, together with the costs of the plea in abatement and amendment, as costs in the cause against the original defendant or defendants who shall have so pleaded in abatement the nonjoinder of such person: provided that any such defendant who shall have so pleaded in abatement shall be at liberty on the trial to adduce evidence of the liability of the defendants named by him in such plea in abatement.

40. Joinder of claims by husband and wife, with claims in right of husband.—In any action brought by a man and his wife for an injury done to the wife, in respect of which she is necessarily joined as co-plaintiff, it shall be lawful for the husband to add thereto claims in his own right, and separate actions brought in respect of such claims may be consolidated, if the Court or a judge shall think fit: provided that in the case of the death of either plaintiff such suit, so far only as relates to the causes of action, if any, which do not survive, shall abate.

And with respect to joinder of causes of action, be it enacted as follows:

41. Different causes of action may be joined, but separate trials may be ordered.—Causes of action, of whatever kind, provided they be by and against the same parties and in the same rights, may be joined in the same suit; but this shall not extend to replevin or ejectment; and where two or more of the causes of action so joined are local, and arise in different counties, the venue may be laid in either of such counties; but the Court or a judge shall have power to prevent the trial of different causes of action together, if such trial would be inexpedient, and in such case such Court or judge may order separate records to be made up, and separate trials to be had.

And for the determination of questions raised by consent of the parties without pleading, be it enacted as follows:

42. Questions of fact may, after writ issued, by consent and leave of a judge, be raised without pleadings.—Where the parties to an action are agreed as to the question or questions of fact to be decided between them, they may, after writ issued, and before judgment, by consent, and order of a judge (which order any judge shall have power to make, upon being satisfied that the parties have a bonâ fide interest in the decision of such question or questions, and that the same is or are fit to be tried), proceed to the trial of any question or questions of fact without formal pleadings; and such question or questions may be stated for trial in an issue in the form contained in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 6, and such issue may be entered for trial and tried accordingly, in the same manner as any issue joined in an ordinary action, and the proceedings in such action and issue shall be under and subject to the ordinary control and jurisdiction of the Court, as in other actions.

43. Agreement may be entered into for the payment of money and costs according to the result of the issue.—The parties may, if they think fit, enter into an agreement in writing, which shall not be subject to any stamp duty, and which shall be embodied in the said or any subsequent order, that upon the finding of the jury in the affirmative or negative of such issue or issues, a sum of money fixed by the parties, or to be ascertained by the jury upon a question inserted in the issue for that purpose, shall be paid by one of such parties to the other of them, either with or without the costs of the action.

44. Judgment to be entered according to the agreement, and execution issued forthwith, unless stayed.—Upon the finding of the jury in any such issue, judgment may be entered for such sum as shall be so agreed or ascertained as aforesaid, with or without costs, as the case may be, and execution may issue upon such judgment forthwith, unless otherwise agreed, or unless the Court or a judge shall otherwise order for the purpose of giving either party an opportunity for moving to set aside the verdict, or for a new trial.

45. Proceedings upon issue may be recorded.—The proceedings upon such issue may be recorded at the instance of either party, and the judgment, whether actually recorded or not, shall have the same effect as any other judgment in a contested action.

46. Questions of law may be raised after writ issued, by consent, &c. without pleading.—The parties may, after writ issued, and before judgment, by consent, and order of a judge, state any question or questions of law in a special case for the opinion of the Court, without any pleadings.

47. Agreement as to payment of money and costs, according to judgment upon special case.—The parties may, if they think fit, enter into an agreement in writing, which shall not be subject to any stamp duty, and which shall be embodied in the said or any subsequent order, that upon the judgment of the Court being given in the affirmative or negative of the question or questions of law raised by such special case, a sum of money, fixed by the parties, or to be ascertained by the Court, or in such manner as the Court may direct, shall be paid by one of such parties to the other of them, either with or without costs of the action; and the judgment of the Court may be entered for such sum as shall be so agreed or ascertained, with or without costs, as the case may be, and execution may issue upon such judgment forthwith, unless otherwise agreed, or unless stayed by proceedings in error.

48. Costs to follow the event, unless otherwise agreed.—In case no agreement shall be entered into as to the costs of such action, the costs shall follow the event, and be recovered by the successful party.

And with respect to the language and form of pleadings in general, be it enacted as follows:

49. Fictitious and needless averments not to be made.—All statements which need not be proved, such as the statement of time, quantity, quality and value, where these are immaterial; the statement of losing and finding, and bailment, in actions for goods or their value; the statement of acts of trespass having been committed with force and arms, and against the peace of our lady the queen; the statement of promises which need not be proved, as promises in indebitatus counts, and mutual promises to perform agreements; and all statements of a like kind, shall be omitted.

50. Judgment upon demurrer to be given according to the very right of the cause.—Either party may object by demurrer to the pleading of the opposite party, on the ground that such pleading does not set forth sufficient ground of action, defence, or reply, as the case may be; and where issue is joined on such demurrer, the court shall proceed and give judgment according as the very right of the cause and matter in law shall appear unto them, without regarding any imperfection, omission, defect in, or lack of form; and no judgment shall be arrested, stayed, or reversed for any such imperfection, omission, defect in, or lack of form.

51. Objections by way of special demurrer taken away.—No pleading shall be deemed insufficient for any defect which could heretofore only be objected to by special demurrer.

52. Pleadings framed to embarrass may be struck out or amended.—If any pleading be so framed as to prejudice, embarrass, or delay the fair trial of the action the opposite party may apply to the court or a judge to strike out or amend such pleading, and the court or any judge shall make such order respecting the same, and also respecting the costs of the application, as such court or judge shall see fit.

53. Four days' notice substituted for rule to declare, reply, or rejoin.—Rules to declare, or declare peremptorily, and rules to reply, and plead subsequent pleadings, shall not be necessary, and instead thereof a notice shall be substituted requiring the opposite party to declare, reply, rejoin, or as the case may be, within four days, otherwise judgment, such notice to be delivered separately or indorsed on any pleading to which the opposite party is required to reply, rejoin, or as the case may be.

54. Pleadings to be dated and entered as of time of pleading, unless order to the contrary.—Every declaration and other pleading shall be entitled of the proper court, and of the day of the month and year when the same was pleaded, and shall bear no other time or date, and every declaration and other pleading shall also be entered on the record made up for trial and on the judgment roll under the date of the day of the month and year when the same respectively took place, and without reference to any other time or date, unless otherwise specially ordered by the court or a judge.

55. Profert and oyer abolished.—It shall not be necessary to make profert of any deed or other document mentioned or relied on in any pleading; and if profert shall be made it shall not entitle the opposite party to crave oyer of or set out upon oyer such deed or other document.

56. Document may be set forth, and be considered a part of the pleading in which it is set forth.—A party pleading in answer to any pleading in which any document is mentioned or referred to shall be at liberty to set out the whole or such part thereof as may be material, and the matter so set out shall be deemed and taken to be part of the pleading in which it is set out.

57. Performance of conditions precedent may be averred generally.—It shall be lawful for the plaintiff or defendant in any action to aver performance of conditions precedent generally, and the opposite party shall not deny such averment generally, but shall specify in his pleading the condition or conditions precedent the performance of which he intends to contest.

And with regard to the time and manner of declaring, and particulars of demand, be it enacted as follows:—

58. Plaintiff to declare within a year.—A plaintiff shall be deemed out of Court, unless he delare within one year after the writ of summons is returnable.

59. Forms of commencement, &c. of declaration.—Every declaration shall commence as follows, or to the like effect:—

> [Venue.] "A.B. by E.F. his attorney [or in person, as the case may be], sues C.D. for [here state the cause of action];"

And shall conclude as follows, or to the like effect:—

> "And the plaintiff claims £ [or, if the action is brought to recover specific goods, the plaintiff claims a return of the said goods or their value, and £ for their detention.]"

60. Commencement of declaration after plea of nonjoinder.—In all cases in which, after a plea in abatement of the nonjoinder of another person as defendant, the plaintiff shall, without having proceeded to trial on an issue thereon, commence another action against the defendant or defendants in the action in which such plea in abatement shall have been pleaded, and the person or persons named in such plea in abatement as joint contractors, or shall amend by adding the omitted defendant or defendants, the commencement of the declaration shall be in the following form, or to the like effect:

> [Venue.] "A. B. by E. F. his attorney [or in his own proper person, &c.], sues C. D. and G. H. which said C. D. has heretofore pleaded in abatement the nonjoinder of the said G. H. for," &c.

61. Declaration for libel or slander.—In actions of libel and slander the plaintiff shall be at liberty to aver that the words or matter complained of were used in a defamatory sense, specifying such defamatory sense without any prefatory averment to shew how such words or matter were used in that sense, and such averment shall be put in issue by the denial of the alleged libel or slander; and where the words or matter set forth, with or without the alleged meaning, shew a cause of action, the declaration shall be sufficient.

And as to pleas and subsequent pleadings, be it enacted as follows:—

62. Rules to plead and demand of plea abolished.—No rule to plead or demand of plea shall be necessary, and the notice to plead indorsed on the declaration or delivered separately shall be sufficient.

63. Time for pleading, where defendant is within jurisdiction, to be eight days.—In cases where the defendant is within the jurisdiction, the time for pleading in bar, unless extended by the Court or a judge, shall be eight days; and a notice requiring the defendant to plead thereto in eight days, otherwise judgment may, whether the declaration be delivered or filed, be indorsed upon the declaration, or delivered separately.

64. Express colour abolished.—Express colour shall no longer be necessary in any pleading.

65. Special traverses abolished.—Special traverses shall not be necessary in any pleading.

66. Formal commencement and prayer of judgment unnecessary.—In a plea or subsequent pleading it shall not be necessary to use any allegation of actionem non, or actionem ulterius non, or to the like effect, or any prayer of judgment, nor shall it be necessary in any replication or subsequent pleading, to use any allegation of precludi non, or to the like effect, or any prayer of judgment.

67. Commencement of plea.—No formal defence shall be required in a plea, or avowry, or cognisance, and it shall commence as follows, or to the like effect:—

> "The defendant, by his attorney [or in person, or as the case may be], says that [here state first defence];"

and it shall not be necessary to state in a second or other plea, or avowry, or cognisance, that it is pleaded by leave of the Court or a judge, or according to the form of the statute, or to that effect; but every such plea, avowry, or cognisance shall be written in a separate paragraph, and numbered, and shall commence as follows, or to the like effect:—

> "And for a second [&c.] plea the defendant says, that [here state second, &c. defence];"

or if pleaded to part only, then as follows, or to the like effect:—

> "And for a second [&c.] plea to [stating to what it is pleaded], the defendant says that," &c.

and no formal conclusion shall be necessary to any plea, avowry, cognisance, or subsequent pleading.

68. Plea of matter subsequent to action.—Any defence arising after the commencement of any action shall be pleaded according to the fact, without any formal commencement or conclusion; and any plea which does not state whether the defence thereon set up arose before or after action shall be deemed to be a plea of matter arising before action.

69. Plea puis darrein continuance, when and how to be pleaded.—In cases in which a plea puis darrein continuance has heretofore been pleadable in Banc or at Nisi Prius, the same defence may be pleaded, with an allegation that the matter arose after the last pleading; and such plea may, when necessary, be pleaded at Nisi Prius, between the tenth of August and twenty-fourth of October; but no such plea shall be allowed unless accompanied by an affidavit that the matter thereof arose within eight days next before the pleading of such plea, or unless the Court or a judge shall otherwise order.

70. Payment into court in certain actions.—It shall be lawful for the defendant in all actions (except actions for assault and battery, false imprisonment, libel, slander, malicious arrest or prosecution, criminal conversation, or debauching of the plaintiff's daughter or servant), and, by leave of the Court or a judge, upon such terms as they or he may think fit, for one or more of several defendants to pay into court a sum of money by way of compensation or amends: provided that nothing herein contained shall be taken to affect the provisions of a certain Act of Parliament passed in the Session of Parliament holden in the sixth and seventh years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Law respecting defamatory Words and Libel."

71. Payment into court how pleaded.—When money is paid into court, such payment shall be pleaded in all cases, as near as may be, in the following form, mutatis mutandis:—

"The defendant, by his attorney [or in person, &c.] [if pleaded to part say, as to £ parcel of the money claimed], brings into court the sum of £ and says that the said sum is enough to satisfy the claim of the plaintiff in respect of the matter herein pleaded to."

72. No order to pay money into court.—No rule or judge's order to pay money into court shall be necessary, except in the case of one or more of several defendants, but the money shall be paid to the proper officer of each court, who shall give a receipt for the amount in the margin of the plea, and the said sum shall be paid out to the plaintiff or to his attorney, upon a written authority from the plaintiff, on demand.

73. Proceeding by plaintiff after payment into court.—The plaintiff, after the delivery of a plea of payment of money into court, shall be at liberty to reply to the same by accepting the sum so paid into court in full satisfaction and discharge of the cause of action in respect of which it has been paid in, and he shall be at liberty in that case to tax his costs of suit, and, in case of nonpayment thereof within forty-eight hours, to sign judgment for his costs of suit so taxed, or the plaintiff may reply that the sum paid into court is not enough to satisfy the claim of the plaintiff in respect of the matter to which the plea is pleaded; and, in the event of an issue thereon being found for the defendant, the defendant shall be entitled to judgment and his costs of suit.

74. Pleas to actions partaking both of breach of contract and wrong.—Whereas certain causes of action may be considered to partake of the character both of breaches of contract and of wrongs, and doubts may arise as to the form of pleas in such actions, and it is expedient to preclude such doubts: Any plea, which shall be good in substance, shall not be objectionable on the ground of its treating the declaration either as framed for a breach of contract, or for a wrong.

75. Payment, set-off, and other pleadings which can be construed distributively, shall be so construed.—Pleas of payment and set-off, and all other pleadings capable of being construed distributively, shall be taken distributively, and if issue is taken thereon, and so much thereof as shall be sufficient answer to part of the causes of action proved shall be found true by the jury, a verdict shall pass for the defendant in respect of so much of the causes of action as shall be answered, and for the plaintiff in respect of so much of the causes of action as shall not be so answered.

76. Traverse of the declaration.—A defendant may either traverse generally such of the facts contained in the declaration as might have been denied by one plea, or may select and traverse separately any material allegation in the declaration, although it might have been included in a general traverse.

77. Traverse of plea, or subsequent pleading of defendant.—A plaintiff shall be at liberty to traverse the whole of any plea or subsequent pleading of the defendant by a general denial, or, admitting some part or parts thereof to deny all the rest, or to deny any one or more allegations.

78. Traverse of replication or subsequent pleading of the plaintiff.—A defendant shall be at liberty in like manner to deny the whole or part of a replication or subsequent pleading of the plaintiff.

79. Joinder of issue.—Either party may plead, in answer to the plea or subsequent pleading of his adversary, that he joins issue thereon, which joinder of issue may be as follows, or to the like effect:

"The plaintiff joins issue upon the defendant's 1st [&c. specifying what or what part] plea:"

"The defendant joins issue upon the plaintiff's replication to the 1st [&c. specifying what] plea;"

and such form of joinder of issue shall be deemed to be a denial of the substance of the plea or other subsequent pleading, and an issue thereon; and in all cases where the plaintiff's pleading is in denial of the pleading of the defendant, or some part of it, the plaintiff may add a joinder of issue for the defendant.

80. As to pleading and demurring together.—Either party may, by leave of the Court or a judge, plead and demur to the same pleading at the same time, upon an affidavit by such party, or his attorney if required by the Court or judge, to the effect that he is advised and believes that he has just ground to traverse the several matters proposed to be traversed by him, and that the several matters sought to be pleaded as aforesaid by way of confession and avoidance are respectively true in substance and in fact and that he is further advised and believes that the objections raised by such demurrer are good and valid objections in law, and it shall be in the discretion of the Court or a judge to direct which issue shall be first disposed of.

81. Several matters may be pleaded at any stage of the pleadings.—The plaintiff in any action may, by leave of the Court or a judge, plead in answer to the plea, or the subsequent pleading of the defendant, as many several matters as he shall think necessary to sustain his action; and the defendant in any action may, by leave of the Court or a judge, plead in answer to the declaration, or other subsequent pleading of the plaintiff, as many several matters as he shall think necessary for his defence, upon an affidavit of the party making such application, or his attorney, if required by the Court or judge, to the effect that he is advised and believes that he has just ground to traverse the several matters proposed to be traversed by him, and that the several matters sought to be pleaded as aforesaid by way of confession and avoidance are respectively true in substance and in fact; provided that the costs of any issue, either of fact or law, shall follow the finding or judgment upon such issue, and be adjudged the successful party, whatever may be the result of the other issue or issues.

82. Judge's order to plead several matters sufficient.—No rule of court for leave to plead several matters shall be necessary where a judge's order has been made for the same purpose.

83. Objections to pleadings to be heard on summons to plead several matters.—All objections to the pleading of several pleas, replications, or subsequent pleadings, or several avowries or cognisances, on the ground that they are founded on the same ground of answer or defence, shall be heard upon the summons to plead several matters.

84. Certain pleas may be pleaded together without leave.—The following pleas, or any two or more of them, may be pleaded together as of course, without leave of the Court or a judge; that is to say, a plea denying any contract or debt alleged in the declaration; a plea of tender as to part; a plea of the Statute of Limitations, set-off, bankruptcy of the defendant, discharge under an Insolvent Act, plene administravit, plene administravit præter, infancy, coverture, payment, accord and satisfaction, release, not guilty, a denial that the property an injury to which is complained of is the plaintiff's, leave and licence, son assault demesne, and any other pleas which the judges of the said Superior Courts, or any eight or more of them, of whom the chief judges of the said courts shall be three, shall by any rule or order, to be from time to time by them made in Term or Vacation, order or direct.

85. Signature of counsel.—The signature of counsel shall not be required to any pleading.

86. For pleading several matters without leave, judgment may be signed.—Except in the cases herein specifically provided for, if either party plead several pleas, replications, avowries, cognizances, or other pleadings, without leave of the Court or a judge, the opposite party shall be at liberty to sign judgment; provided that such judgment may be set aside by the Court or a judge, upon an affidavit of merits, and such terms as to costs and otherwise as they or he may think fit.

87. One new assignment only allowed in respect of the same cause of action.—One new assignment only shall be pleaded to any number of pleas to the same cause of action; and such new assignment shall be consistent with and confined by the particulars delivered in the action, if any, and shall state that the plaintiff proceeds for causes of action different from all those which the pleas profess to justify, or for an excess over and above what all the defences set up in such such pleas justify, or both

88. Pleas not to be repeated.—No plea, which has already been pleaded to the declaration, shall be pleaded to such new assignment, except a plea in denial, unless by leave of the Court or a judge; and such leave shall only be granted upon satisfactory proof that the repetition of such plea is essential to a trial on the merits.

89. Form of demurrer and joinder in demurrer.—The form of a demurrer, except in the cases herein specifically provided for, shall be as follows, or to the like effect:—

"The defendant, by his attorney [or, in person, &c. or, plaintiff] says, that the declaration [or, plea, &c.] is bad in substance;"

and in the margin thereof some substantial matter of law intended to be argued shall be stated; and if any demurrer shall be delivered without such statement, or with a frivolous statement, it may be set aside by the Court or a judge, and leave may be given to sign judgment as for want of a plea; and the form of a joinder in demurrer shall be as follows, or to the like effect:—

"The plaintiff [or, defendant] says that the declaration [or, plea, &c.] is good in substance."

90. Time for pleading after amendment.—Where an amendment of any pleading is allowed, no new notice to plead thereto shall be necessary; but the opposite party shall be bound to plead to the amended pleading within the time specified in the original notice to plead, or within two days after amendment, whichever shall last expire, unless otherwise ordered by the Court or a judge; and in case the amended pleading has been pleaded to before amendment, and is not pleaded to de novo within two days after amendment, or within such other time as the Court or a judge shall allow, the pleadings originally pleaded thereto shall stand and be considered as pleaded in answer to such amended pleading.

And whereas it is desirable that examples should be given of the statements of causes of action, and of forms of pleading, be it enacted as follows:—

91. Forms of schedule may be adopted.—The forms contained in the schedule (B.) to this Act annexed shall be sufficient, and those and the like forms may be used, with such modifications as may be necessary to meet the facts of the case; but nothing herein contained shall render it erroneous or irregular to depart from the letter of such forms, so long as the substance is expressed without prolixity.

And with respect to judgment by default, and the mode of ascertaining the amount to be recovered thereupon, be it enacted as follows:—

92. Rule to compute abolished.—No rule to compute shall be necessary or used; but nothing in this Act contained shall invalidate any proceedings already taken or to be taken by reason of any rule to compute made, or applied for, before the commencement of this Act.

93. Judgment by default for liquidated demands final.—In actions where the plaintiff seeks to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money, judgment by default shall be final.

94. Inquiry of damages may be directed to take place before the Master.—In actions in which it shall appear to the Court or a judge that the amount of damages sought to be recovered by the plaintiff is substantially a matter of calculation, it shall not be necessary to issue a writ of inquiry, but the Court or a judge may direct that the amount, for which final judgment is to be signed, shall be ascertained by one of the Masters of the said Court; and the attendance of witnesses and the production of documents before such Master may be compelled by subpœna, in the same manner as before a jury upon a writ of inquiry; and it shall be lawful for such Master to adjourn the inquiry from time to time, as occasion may require; and the Master shall indorse upon the rule or order for referring the amount of damages to him, the amount found by him, and shall deliver the rule or order, with such indorsement, to the plaintiff; and such and the like proceedings may thereupon be had as to taxation of costs, signing judgment, and otherwise, as upon the finding of a jury upon a writ of inquiry.

95. Judgment for money demands without distinction between debt and damages.—In all actions where the plaintiff recovers a sum of money, the amount to which he is entitled may be awarded to him by the judgment generally, without any distinction being therein made as to whether such sum is recovered by way of a debt or damages.

96. Saving as to certain provisions of 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11.—Nothing in this Act contained shall in any way affect the provisions of a certain Act of Parliament passed in the session of Parliament holden in the eighth and ninth years of the reign of his Majesty King William the Third, intituled "An Act for the better preventing frivolous and vexatious Suits," as to the assignment or suggestion of breaches, or as to ment for a penalty as a security for damages in respect of further breaches.

And with respect to notice of trial and inquiry, and command thereof, be it enacted as follows:—

97. Time for notice of trial and inquiry.—Ten days' notice of trial or inquiry shall be given, and shall be sufficient in all cases, whether at Bar or Nisi Prius, in town or country, unless otherwise ordered by the Court or a judge.

98. Notice of countermand.—A countermand of notice of trial shall be given four days before the time mentioned in the notice of trial, unless short notice of trial has been given, and then two days before the time mentioned in the notice of trial, unless otherwise ordered by the Court or a judge, or by consent.

99. Costs of day.—A rule for costs of the day for not proceeding to trial, pursuant to notice, or not countermanding in sufficient time, may be drawn up on affidavit, without motion.

And with respect to judgment for default in not proceeding to trial, be it enacted as follows:

100. Statute 14 Geo. 2, c. 17, as to judgment in case of nonsuit, repealed.—The Act passed in the fourteenth year of the reign of His Majesty King George the Second, intituled "An Act to prevent Inconveniences arising from Delays of Causes after Issue joined," so far at the same relates to judgment as in the case of a nonsuit, shall be and the same is hereby repealed, except as to proceedings taken or commenced thereupon before the commencement of this Act.

101. Proceeding where plaintiff neglects to bring on the cause to be tried.—Where any issue is or shall be joined in any cause, and the plaintiff has neglected or shall neglect to bring such issue on to be tried, that is to say, in town causes where issue has been or shall be joined in, or in the Vacation before, any Term, for instance, Hilary Term, and the plaintiff has neglected or shall neglect to bring the issue on to be tried during or before the following Term and Vacation, for instance, Easter Term and Vacation, and in country causes where issue has been or shall be joined in, or in the Vacation before Hilary or Trinity Term, and the plaintiff has neglected or shall neglect to bring the issue on to be tried at or before the second assizes following such Term, or if issue has been or shall be joined in, or in the Vacation before Easter or Michaelmas Term, then, if the plaintiff has neglected or shall neglect to bring the issue on to be tried at or before the first assizes after such Term, whether the plaintiff shall in the meantime have given notice of trial or not, the defendant may give twenty days' notice to the plaintiff to bring the issue on to be tried at the sittings or assizes, as the case may be, next after the expiration of the notice; and if the plaintiff afterwards neglects to give notice of trial for such sittings or assizes, or to proceed to trial in pursuance of the said notice given by the defendant, the defendant may suggest on the record that the plaintiff has failed to proceed to trial, although duly required so to do (which suggestion shall not be traversable, but only be subject to be set aside if untrue), and may sign judgment for his costs; provided that the Court or a judge shall have power to extend the time for proceeding to trial, with or without terms.

And with respect to the Nisi Prius Record, be it enacted as follows

102. Nisi Prius record not to be sealed or passed.—The record of Nisi Prius shall not be sealed or passed, but may be delivered to the proper officer of the Court in which the cause is to be tried, to be by him entered as at present, and remain until disposed of.

103. Trials in counties palatine.—Records of the Superior Courts of Common Law shall be brought to trial and entered and disposed of in the counties palatine in the same manner as in other counties.

And with respect to juries and jury process, be it enacted as follows:

104. Jury process abolished.—The several writs of venire facias juratores, and distringas juratores, or habeas corpora juratorum, and the entry jurata ponitur in respectu, shall no longer be necessary or used.

105. Precept by judges of assize to summon jurors for civil as well as criminal trials.—The precept issued by the judges of assize to the sheriff to summon jurors for the assizes shall direct that the jurors be summoned for the trial of all issues, whether civil or criminal, which may come on for trial at the assizes; and the jurors shall thereupon be summoned in like manner as at present.

106. A printed panel to be prepared, and annexed to the record.—A printed panel of the jurors summoned shall, seven days before the commission day, be made by the sheriff, and kept in the office for inspection; and a printed copy of such panel shall be delivered by the sheriff to any party requiring the same, on payment of one shilling; and such copy shall be annexed to the Nisi Prius record.

107. Sheriffs of London and Middlesex to summon common jurors, and prepare a panel, to be annexed to the record.—The sheriffs of London and Middlesex respectively shall, pursuant to a precept under the hand of a judge of any of the said Superior Courts, and without any other authority, summon a sufficient number of common jurors for the trial of all issues in the Superior Courts of Common Law, in like manner as before this Act; and seven days before the first day of each sittings a printed panel of the jurors so summoned for the trial of causes at such sittings shall be made by such sheriffs, and kept in their offices for public inspection; and a printed copy of such panel shall be delivered by the said sheriffs to any party requiring the same, on payment of one shilling; and such copy shall be annexed to the Nisi Prius record; and the said precept shall and may be in like form as the precept issued by the judges of assize, and one thereof shall suffice for each Term, and for all the Superior Courts; and it shall be the duty of the sheriffs respectively to apply for and procure such precept to be issued in sufficient time before each Term to enable them to summon the jurors in manner aforesaid; and it shall be lawful for the several courts, or any judge thereof, at any time to issue such precept or precepts to summon jurors for disposing of the business pending in such Courts, and to direct the time and place for which such jurors shall be summoned, and, all such other matters as to such judge shall seem requisite.

108. Special jurors, not exceeding forty-eight in number, to be summoned to try all special jury causes at assizes.—The precept issued by the judges of assize as aforesaid shall direct the sheriff to summon a sufficient number of special jurymen, to be mentioned therein, not exceeding forty-eight in all, to try the special jury causes at the assizes; and the persons summoned in pursuance of such precept shall be the jury for trying the special jury causes at the assizes, subject to such right of challenge as the parties are now by law entitled to; and a printed panel of the special jurors so summoned shall be made, kept, delivered, and annexed to the Nisi Prius Record, in like time and manner and upon the same terms as hereinbefore provided with reference to the panel of common jurors; and upon the trial the special jury shall be ballotted for, and called in the order in which they shall be drawn from the box, in the same manner as common jurors: provided that the Court or a judge, in such case as they or he may think fit, may order that a special jury be struck according to the present practice, and such order shall be a sufficient warrant for striking such special jury, and making a panel thereof for the trial of the particular cause.

109. Mode of obtaining a special jury in country causes.—In any county, except London and Middlesex, the plaintiff in any action, except replevin, shall be entitled to have the cause tried by a special jury, upon giving notice in writing to the defendant, at such time as would be necessary for a notice of trial, of his intention that the cause shall be so tried; and the defendant, or plaintiff in replevin, shall be so entitled, on giving the like notice within the time now limited for obtaining a rule for a special jury: provided that the Court or a judge may at any time order that a cause shall be tried by a special jury, upon such terms as they or he shall think fit.

110. Special jurors in London and Middlesex, how struck.—In London and Middlesex special jurors shall be nominated and reduced by and before the under-sheriff and secondary respectively, in like manner as by the Master before this Act, upon the application of either party entitled to a special jury, and his obtaining a rule for such purpose; and the names of the jurors so struck shall be placed upon the panel, which shall be delivered and annexed to the Nisi Prius record, in like manner and upon the same terms as hereinbefore provided with reference to the panel of common jurors; and upon the trial the special jury shall be ballotted for, and called i the order in which they shall be drawn from the box, in the same manner as common jurors.

111. Remedy for delay by notice of trial by special jury.—Where the defendant in any case, or plaintiff in replevin, gives notice of his intention to try the cause by a special jury, and the venue is in London or Middlesex, the Court or a judge, if satisfied that such notice is given for the purpose of delay, may order that the cause be tried by a common jury, or make such other order as to the trial of the cause as such Court or judge shall think fit.

112. Notice to sheriff of trial by special jury.—Where notice has been given to try by special jury, either party may, six days before the first day of the sittings in London or Middlesex, or adjournment day in London, or commission day of the assizes, give notice to the sheriff that such cause is to be tried by a special jury; and in case no such notice be given no special jury need be summoned or attend, and the cause may be tried by a common jury, unless otherwise ordered by the Court or a judge.

113. If special jury not summoned, cause to be tried by a common jury.—In all cases where notice is not given to the sheriff that the cause is to be tried by a special jury, and by reason thereof a special jury is not summoned or does not attend, the cause may be tried by a common jury, to be taken from the panel of common jurors, in like manner as if no proceedings had been had to try the cause by a special jury.

114. View to be by rule without writ.—A writ of view shall not be necessary or used, but, whether the view is to be had by a common or special jury, it shall be sufficient to obtain a rule of the Court, or judge's order, directing a view to be had; and the proceedings upon the rule for a view shall be the same as the proceedings heretofore had under a writ of view; and the sheriff, upon request, shall deliver to either party the names of the viewers, and shall also return their names to the associate for the purpose of their being called as jurymen upon the trial.

115. Proceedings before jurors so returned same as before this Act.—The jurors contained in such panels as aforesaid shall be the jurors to try the causes at the assizes and sittings for which they shall be summoned respectively; and all such proceedings may be had and taken before such juries in like manner, and with the like consequences in all respects, as before any jury summoned in pursuance of any writ or writs of venire facias juratores, distringas juratores, or habeas corpora juratorum, before this Act.

116. Defendant's right to try, upon default of the plaintiff, preserved.—Nothing herein contained shall affect the right of a defendant to take down a cause for trial, after default by the plaintiff to proceed to trial, according to the course and practice of the Court; and if records are entered for trial both by the plaintiff and the defendant, the defendant's record shall be treated as standing next in order after the plaintiff's record in the list of causes, and the trial of the cause shall take place accordingly.

And with respect to the admission of documents, be it enacted as follows:

117. Admission of documents.—Either party may call upon the other party by notice to admit any document, saving all just exceptions; and in case of refusal or neglect to admit, the costs of proving the document shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the cause may be, unless at the trial the judge shall certify that the refusal to admit was reasonable; and no costs of proving any document shall be allowed unless such notice be given, except in cases where the omission to give the notice is, in the opinion of the Master, a saving of expense.

118. Proof of admissions.—An affidavit of the attorney in the cause, or his clerk, of the due signature of any admissions made in pursuance of such notice, and annexed to the affidavit, shall be in all cases sufficient evidence of such admissions.

119. Proof of notice to produce.—An affidavit of the attorney in the cause, or his clerk, of the service of any notice to produce, in respect of which notice to admit shall have been given, and of the time when it was served, with a copy of such notice to produce annexed to such affidavit, shall be sufficient evidence of the service of the original of such notice, and of the time when it was served.

And with respect to execution, be it enacted as follows:

120. Execution after trial.—A plaintiff or defendant, having obtained a verdict in a cause tried out of Term, shall be entitled to issue execution in fourteen days, unless the judge who tries the cause, or some other judge, or the Court, shall order execution to issue at an earlier or later period, with or without Terms.

121. Ground writs abolished.—It shall not be necessary to issue any writ directed to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, but writs of execution may issue at once into any county, and be directed to and executed by the sheriff of any county, whether a county palatine or not, without reference to the county in which the venue is laid, and without any suggestion of the issuing of a prior writ into such county.

122. Writs in counties palatine to be directed to the sheriff.—All writs of every description issuing out of the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster, to be executed in the counties palatine, shall be directed and delivered to the sheriffs of such counties, and executed and returned by them to the courts out of which such writs are issued, in the same manner in all respects as writs are executed and returned by the sheriffs of other counties.

123. Expenses of execution.—In every case of execution, the party entitled to execution may levy the poundage fees and expenses of the execution, over and above the sum recovered.

124. Writs of execution to remain in force for one year, and to be renewed if necessary.—A writ of execution issued after the commencement of this Act, if unexecuted, shall not remain in force for more than one year from the teste of such writ, unless renewed in the manner hereinafter provided; but such writ may, at any time before its expiration, be renewed, by the party issuing it, for one year from the date of such renewal, and so on from time to time during the continuance of the renewed writ, either by being marked with a seal bearing the date of the day, month, and year of such renewal (such seal to be provided and kept for that purpose at the office of the Master of the court out of which such writ issued), or by such party giving a written notice of renewal to such sheriff, signed by the party or his attorney, and bearing the like seal of the Court; and a writ of execution so renewed shall have effect, and be entitled to priority, according to the time of the original delivery thereof.

125.—Production of renewed writ, evidence of renewal.—The production of a writ of execution, or of the notice renewing the same, purporting to be marked with such seal, shewing the same to have been renewed according to this Act, shall be sufficient evidence of its having been so renewed.

126. Sheriff or gaoler may discharge prisoner by authority of attorney in the cause.—A written order under the hand of the attorney in the cause, by whom any writ of capias ad satisfaciendum shall have been issued, shall justify the sheriff, gaoler, or person in whose custody the party may be under such writ, in discharging such party, unless the party for whom such attorney professes to act shall have given written notice to the contrary to such sheriff, gaoler, or person in whose custody the opposite party may be; but such discharge shall not be a satisfaction of the debt, unless made by the authority of the creditor; and nothing herein contained shall justify any attorney in giving such order for discharge without the consent of his client.

127. Proceedings for charging in execution a person already in prison of the Court.—It shall not be necessary in any case to sue out a writ of habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum to charge in execution a person already in the prison of the Court, but such person may be so charged in execution by a judge's order made upon affidavit that judgment has been signed and is not satisfied; and the service of such order upon the keeper of the prison for the time being shall have the effect of a detainer.

And with respect to proceedings for the revival of judgments and other proceedings by and against persons not parties to the record, be it enacted as follows:

128. Execution in six years without revival.—During the lives of the parties to a judgment, or those of them during whose lives execution may at present issue within a year and a day without a scire facias, and within six years from the recovery of the judgment, execution may issue without a revival of the judgment.

129. Judgment to be revived by writ or with leave of Court, or judge, by suggestion.—In cases where it shall become necessary to revive a judgment by reason either of lapse of time, or of a change, by death or otherwise, of the parties entitled or liable to execution, the party alleging himself to be entitled to execution may either sue out a writ of revivor in the form hereinafter mentioned, or apply to the Court or a judge for leave to enter a suggestion upon the roll, to the effect that it manifestly appears to the Court that such party is entitled to have execution of the judgment, and to issue execution thereupon; such leave to be granted by the Court or a judge upon a rule to shew cause or a summons, to be served according to the present practice, or in such other manner as such Court or judge may direct, and which rule or summons may be in the form contained in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 7, or to the like effect.

130. Proceedings upon application for suggestion to revive judgment.—Upon such application, in case it manifestly appears that the party making the same is entitled to execution, the Court or judge shall allow such suggestion as aforesaid to be entered in the form contained in the schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 8, or to the like effect, and execution to issue thereupon, and shall order whether or not the costs of such application shall be paid to the party making the same; and in case it does not manifestly so appear, the Court or judge shall discharge the rule or dismiss the summons with or without costs: provided nevertheless, that in such last-mentioned case the party making such application shall be at liberty to proceed by writ of revivor or action upon the judgment.

131. Writ of revivor and proceedings thereon.—The writ of revivor shall be directed to the party called upon to shew cause why execution should not be awarded, and shall bear teste on the day of its issuing; and, after reciting the reason why such writ has become necessary, it shall call upon the party to whom it is directed, to appear, within eight days after service thereof, in the Court out of which it issues, to shew cause why the party at whose instance such writ has been issued should not have execution against the party to whom such writ is directed, and it shall give notice that, in default of appearance, the party issuing such writ may proceed to execution; and such writ may be in the form contained in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 9, or to the like effect, and may be served in any county, and otherwise proceeded upon, whether in Term or Vacation, in the same manner as a writ of summons; and the venue in a declaration upon such writ may be laid in any county; and the pleadings and proceedings thereupon, and the rights of the parties respectively to costs, shall be the same as in an ordinary action.

132.—Writs of scire facias in other cases to be tested, directed, and proceeded upon in like manner. All writs of scire facias issued out of any of the Superior Courts of Law at Westminster against bail on a recognizance; ad audiendum errores; against members of a joint-stock company or other company or other body upon a judgment recorded against a public officer or other person sued as representing such company or body, or against such company or body itself; by or against a husband to have execution of a judgment for or against a wife; for restitution after a reversal in error; upon a suggestion of further breaches after judgment for any penal sum, pursuant to the statute passed in the session holden in the eighth and ninth years of the reign of King William the Third, intituled "An Act for the better preventing frivolous and vexatious Suits," or for recovery of land taken under an elegit, shall be tested, directed, and proceeded upon, in like manner as writs of revivor.

133. Appearance to writ of revivor.—Notice in writing to the plaintiff, his attorney or agent, shall be sufficient appearance to a writ of revivor.

134. As to issue of writ of revivor upon judgment more than ten years old.—A writ of revivor to revive a judgment less than ten years old shall be allowed without any rule or order; if more than ten years old, not without a rule of court or a judge's order; nor, if more than fifteen, without a rule to shew cause.

And with respect to the effect of death, marriage, and bankruptcy upon the proceedings in an action, be it enacted as follows:

135. Action not to abate by death.—The death of a plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the action to abate, but it may be continued as hereinafter mentioned.

136. Proceedings in case of death of one or more of several plaintiffs or defendants.—If there be two or more plaintiffs or defendants, and one or more of them should die, if the cause of such action shall survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs, or against the surviving defendant or defendants, the action shall not be thereby abated; but such death being suggested upon the record, the action shall proceed at the suit of the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs against the surviving defendant or defendants.

137. Proceeding in case of sole plaintiff.—In case of the death of a sole plaintiff or sole surviving plaintiff, the legal representative of such plaintiff may, by leave of the Court or a judge, enter a suggestion of the death, and that he is such legal representative, and the action shall thereupon proceed; and, if such suggestion be made before the trial, the truth of the suggestion shall be tried thereat, together with the title of deceased plaintiff, and such judgment shall follow upon the verdict in favour of or against the person making such suggestion, as if such person were originally the plaintiff.

138. Proceeding upon death of sole or sole surviving defendant.—In case of the death of a sole defendant or sole surviving defendant, where the action survives, the plaintiff may make a suggestion, either in any of the pleadings, if the cause has not arrived at issue, or in a copy of the issue, if it has so arrived, of the death, and that a person named therein is the executor or administrator of the deceased; and may thereupon serve such executor or administrator with a copy of the writ and suggestion, and with a notice, signed by the plaintiff or his attorney, requiring such executor or administrator to appear within eight days after service of the notice, inclusive of the day of such service, and that in default of his so doing the plaintiff may sign judgment against him as such executor or administrator; and the same proceedings may be had and taken in case of nonappearance after such notice, as upon a writ against such executor or administrator in respect of the cause for which the action was brought; and in case no pleadings have taken place before the death, the suggestion shall form part of the declaration, and the declaration and suggestion may be served together, and the new defendant shall plead thereto at the same time; and in case the plaintiff shall have declared, but the defendant shall not have pleaded before the death, the new defendant shall plead at the same time to the declaration and suggestion; and in case the defendant shall have pleaded before the death, the new defendant shall be at liberty to plead to the suggestion, only by way of denial, or such plea as may be appropriate to and rendered necessary by his character of executor or administrator, unless, by leave of the Court or a judge, he should be permitted to plead fresh matter in answer to the declaration; and in case the defendant shall have pleaded before the death, but the pleadings shall not have arrived at issue, the new defendant, besides pleading to the suggestion, shall continue the pleadings to issue in the same manner as the deceased might have done, and the pleadings upon the declaration and the pleadings upon the suggestion shall be tried together; and in case the plaintiff shall recover, he shall be entitled to the like judgment in respect of the debt or sum sought to be recovered, and in respect of the costs prior to the suggestion, and in respect of the costs of the suggestion and subsequent thereto, he shall be entitled to the like judgment as in an action originally commenced against the executor or administrator.

139. Death between verdict and judgment.—The death of either party between the verdict and the judgment shall not hereafter be alleged for error, so as such judgment be entered within two Terms after such verdict.

140. Proceedings in case of death after interlocutory, and before final judgment.—If the plaintiff in any action happen to die after an interlocutory judgment and before a final judgment obtained therein, the said action shall not abate by reason thereof, if such action might be originally prosecuted or maintained by the executor or administrator of such plaintiff; and if the defendant die after such interlocutory judgment, and before final judgment therein obtained, the said action shall not abate, if such action might be originally prosecuted or maintained against the executor or administrator of such defendant; and the plaintiff, or if he be dead after such interlocutory judgment, his executors or administrators, shall and may have a writ of revivor, in the form contained in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 9, or to the like effect, against the defendant, if living after such interlocutory judgment, or, if he be dead, then against his executors or administrators, to shew cause why damages in such action should not be assessed and recovered by him or them; and if such defendant, his executors, or administrators, shall appear at the return of such writ, and not shew or allege any matter sufficient to arrest the final judgment, or shall make default, a writ of inquiry of damages shall be thereupon awarded, or the amount for which final judgment is to be signed shall be referred to one of the Masters, as hereinbefore provided; and upon the return of the writ, or delivery of the order with the amount indorsed thereon to the plaintiff, his executors or administrators, judgment final shall be given for the said plaintiff, his executors or administrators, prosecuting such writ of revivor, against such defendant, his executors or administrators respectively.

141. Marriage not to abate action.—The marriage of a woman plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the action to abate, but the action may, notwithstanding, be proceeded with to judgment; and such judgment may be executed against the wife alone, or by suggestion or writ of revivor pursuant to this Act, judgment may be obtained against the husband and wife, and execution issue thereon; and in case of a judgment for the wife, execution may be issued thereupon by the authority of the husband without any writ of revivor or suggestion; and if in any such action the wife shall sue or defend by attorney appointed by her when sole, such attorney shall have authority to continue the action or defence, unless such authority be countermanded by the husband, and the attorney changed according to the practice of the Court.

142. Bankruptcy and insolvency of plaintiff, when not to abate action.—The bankruptcy or insolvency of the plaintiff in any action, which the assignees might maintain for the benefit of the creditors, shall not be pleaded in bar to such action, unless the assignees shall decline to continue, and give security for the costs thereof, upon a judge's order to be obtained for that purpose, within such reasonable time as the judge may order, but the proceedings may be stayed until such election is made; and in case the assignees neglect or refuse to continue the action, and give such security within the time limited by the order, the defendant may, within eight days after such neglect or refusal, plead the bankruptcy.

And with respect to proceedings upon motions to arrest the judgment, and for judgment non obstante veredicto, be it enacted as follows:

143. Upon motion in arrest of judgment, pursuant to 1 Wm. 4, c. 7, or for judgment non obstante veredicto, omitted facts may, by leave of the Court, be suggested.—Upon any motion made in arrest of judgment, or to enter an arrest of judgment, pursuant to the statute passed in the first year of late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the more speedy Judgment and Execution in Actions brought in his Majesty's Courts of Law at Westminster, and in the Court of Common Pleas of the County Palatine of Lancaster, and for amending the Law as to Judgment on a Cognovit Actionem in cases of Bankruptcy," or for judgment non obstante veredicto, by reason of the non-averment of some alleged material fact or facts or material allegation or other cause, the party whose pleading is alleged or adjudged to be therein defective, may, by leave of the Court, suggest the existence of the omitted fact or facts, or other matter, which, if true, would remedy the alleged defect; and such suggestion may be pleaded to by the opposite party within eight days after notice thereof, or such further time as the Court or a judge may allow; and the proceedings for trial of any issues joined upon such pleadings shall be the same as in an ordinary action.

144. Judgment to follow result of suggestion.—If the fact or facts suggested be admitted, or found to be true, the party suggesting shall be entitled to such [illegible] would have been entitled to, if such fact or facts or allegations had been originally stated in such pleading, and proved or admitted on the trial, together with the costs of, and occasioned by, the suggestion and proceedings thereon; but if such fact or facts be found untrue, the opposite party shall be entitled to his costs of, and occasioned by, the suggestion and proceedings thereon, in addition to any other costs to which he may be entitled.

145. Costs of abortive issues.—Upon an arrest of judgment, or judgment non obstante veredicto, the Court shall adjudge to the party, against whom such judgment is given, the costs occasioned by the trial of any issues of fact arising out of the pleading for defect of which such judgment is given, upon which such party shall have succeeded; and such costs shall be set off against any money or costs adjudged to the opposite party, and execution may issue for the balance, if any.

And with respect to Proceedings in Error, be it enacted as follows:

146. Error to be brought within six years.—No judgment in any cause shall be reversed or avoided for any error or defect therein, unless error be commenced, or brought and prosecuted with effect, within six years after such judgment signed or entered of record.

147. Proviso for disabilities.—If any person that is or shall be entitled to bring error as aforesaid is or shall be, at the time of such title accrued, within the age of twenty-one years, feme covert, non compos mentis, or beyond the seas, then such person shall be at liberty to bring error as aforesaid, so as such person commences, or brings and prosecutes the same with effect, within six years after coming to or being of full age, discovert, of sound memory, or return from beyond the seas; and if the opposite party shall, at the time of the judgment signed or entered of record, be beyond the seas, then error may be brought, provided the proceedings be commenced and prosecuted with effect within six years after the return of such party from beyond seas.

148. Writ of error abolished.—A writ of error shall not be necessary or used in any cause, and the proceeding to error shall be a step in the cause, and shall be taken in manner hereinafter mentioned; but nothing in this Act contained shall invalidate any proceedings already taken or to be taken by reason of any writ of error issued before the commencement of this Act.

149. Error in law how brought.—Either party alleging error in law may deliver to one of the Masters of the Court a memorandum in writing, in the form contained in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 10, or to the like effect, entitled in the court and cause, and signed by the party or his attorney, alleging that there is error in law in the record and proceedings; whereupon the Master shall file such memorandum, and deliver to the party lodging the same a note of the receipt thereof; and a copy of such note, together with a statement of the grounds of error intended to be argued, may be served on the opposite party or his attorney.

150. Error not supersedeas till service of the copy of the note and grounds of error.—Proceedings in error in law shall be deemed a supersedeas of execution from the time of the service of the copy of such note, together with the statement of the grounds of error intended to be argued, until default in putting in bail, or an affirmance of the judgment, or discontinuance of the proceedings in error, or until the proceedings in error shall be otherwise disposed of without a reversal of the judgment; provided always, that if the grounds of error shall appear to be frivolous, the Court or a judge upon summons may order execution to issue.

151. Bail in error.—Upon any judgment hereafter to be given in any of the said Superior Courts of Common Law in any action, execution shall not be stayed or delayed by proceedings in error, or supersedeas thereupon, without the special order of the Court or a judge, unless the person in whose name such proceedings in error be brought, with two, or, by leave of the Court or a judge, more than two sufficient sureties, such as the Court (wherein such judgment is or shall be given) or a judge shall allow of, shall, within four clear days after lodging the memorandum alleging error, or after the signing of the judgment, whichever shall last happen, or before execution executed, be bound unto the party for whom any such judgment is or shall be given, by recognizance to be acknowledged in the same Court, in double the sum adjudged to be recovered by the said judgment (except in case of a penalty, and in case of a penalty in double the sum really due, and double the costs), to prosecute the proceedings in error with effect, and also to satisfy and pay (if the said judgment be affirmed, or the proceedings in error be discontinued by the plaintiff therein), all and singular the sum or sums of money and costs adjudged or to be adjudged upon the former judgment, and all costs and damages to be also awarded for the delaying of execution, and shall give notice thereof to the defendant in error, or his attorney.

152. Suggestion instead of assignment of and joinder in error.—The assignment of and joinder in error in law shall not be necessary or used, and, instead thereof, a suggestion to the effect that error is alleged by the one party and denied by the other, may be entered on the judgment-roll in the form contained in Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 11, or to the like effect: provided that in case the defendant in error intends to rely upon the proceding in error being barred by lapse of time, or by release of error, or other like matter of fact, he may give four days' written notice to the plaintiff in error to assign error as heretofore, instead of entering the suggestion; and he shall, within eight days, plead thereto the bar by lapse of time, or release of error, or other like matter of fact; and thereupon such proceedings may be had as heretofore.

153. Roll to be made up and suggestion entered by plaintiff in error.—The roll shall be made up, and the suggestion last aforesaid entered by the plaintiff in error within ten days after the service of the note of the peceipt of the memorandum alleging error, or within such other time as the Court or a judge may order; and in default thereof, or of assignment of error in cases where an assignment is required, the defendant in error, his executors or administrators, shall be at liberty to sign judgment of non-pros.

154. Error brought by one of several persons against whom judgment has been given.—In case error be brought upon a judgment given against several persons, and one or some only shall proceed in error, the memorandum alleging error, and the note of the receipt of such memorandum, shall state the names of the persons by whom the proceedings are taken; and in case the other persons, against whom judgment has been given, decline to join in the proceedings in error, the same may be continued, and the suggestion last aforesaid entered, stating the persons by whom the proceedings are brought, without any summons and severance, or if such other persons elect to join, then the suggestion shall state them to be, and they shall be deemed as plaintiffs in error, although not mentioned as such in the previous proceedings.

155. Judgment roll to be brought into court instead of transcript.—Upon such suggestion of error alleged and denied being entered, the cause may be set down for argument in the Court of Error in the manner heretofore used; and the judgment roll shall, without any writ or return, be brought by the Master into the Court of Error in the Exchequer Chamber, before the justices, or justices and barons, as the case may be, of the other two Superior Courts of Common Law, on the day of its sitting, at such time as the judges shall appoint, either in Term or in Vacation; or if the proceedings in error be before the High Court of Parliament, then before the High Court of Parliament, before or at the time of its sitting; and the Court of Error shall and may thereupon review the proceedings, and give judgment as they shall be advised thereon; and scuh proceedings and judgment, as altered or affirmed, shall be entered on the original record; and such further proceedings as may be necessary thereon shall be awarded by the Court in which the original judgment was given.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

POOR-LAW cases are now so few and far between, that we welcome them as friends long parted, but whose "old familiar faces" recal a thousand pleasant remembrances of the past Still we read them with eager interest, and probably those feelings are shared by many o. our readers once profoundly versed in all the learning of that ponderous volume 5 of Chitty's Burn. Although not a point of very general interest, still as the only one that has been mooted for some time, there is to be noted in our last number the case of Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 19 Law T. Rep. 255, in which the Q. B. held that the expenses of maintaining an Irish pauper lunatic, who has no known settlement, but who has resided for five years previously in parish A. in the B. union, are by sec. 5 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, thrown upon the union, and not upon the county.

INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT SOCIETIES.—An Act was passed at the end of the late session (15 and 16 Vict. c. 31), "to legalize the formation of Industrial and Provident Societies." It is intended by this Act that societies of working men may be established for attaining the objects of the Friendly Societies Acts by means of joint trade, except banking. The rules of such societies are to be framed in accordance with the Act. The funds are not to be invested with the National Debt Commissioners, and societies established before the passing of the Act shall come under its provisions so soon as they shall conform to the provisions thereof. As to the liability of members, it is provided that "nothing in this or the said recited Act (Friendly Societies Act) shall be construed to restrict in anywise the liability of the members of such society established under or by virtue of this Act, or claiming the benefit thereof, to the lawful debts and engagements of such society, provided always that no person shall be liable for the debts or engagements of any such society after the expiration of two years from his ceasing to be a member of the same." The Act is to be cited as the "Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1852."

PROTESTANT DISSENTERS.—By an Act of the late session, it is enacted that places of religious worship for Protestant dissenters need not be certified or registered in a bishop's registry. Such places are to be registered in the General Registration Office for Births, Deaths, and Marriages. A fee of 2s. 6d. is to be taken for such certificate of registration, and a list of such places to be open for inspection without any fee.

ST. PANCRAS.—WRIT OF MANDAMUS.—On Saturday, the 120 vestrymen and forty directors of the poor of St. Pancras, were served by Messrs. Sharpe, Field, and Jackson, the solicitors to the Poor Law Board, with copies of a writ of mandamus, issued by the Court of Queen's Bench, to compel the authorities of the parish to reinstate Mr. Eaton in his office of master of the workhouse, from which he was dismissed some weeks since by the vestry, for alleged misconduct, and without the consent of the Poor Law Board.

THE STAFF OF THE TITHE-OFFICE, says a correspondent, amounted at one time to 130 officials, consisting of commissioners, clerks, and surveyors. At the present time it does not amount to a tenth of that number. There are three commissioners, with salaries of 1,500*l.* a year each. Owing to a personal quarrel among them, one of them at one time never went near the office for three or four years. Another of the commissioners is absent about six months in the year, personally superintending a pottery, which he possesses in the west of England. A short time since the Government ordered a reduction of the staff of the tithe-office, and after it was done the commissioners assured the clerks who were retained that no further alteration would take place. To the surprise of the latter, however, a short time afterwards their salaries were considerably reduced. Many who had worked hard for a series of years, and whose salaries had been raised from 80*l.* to 200*l.* a year, found them reduced to 150*l.*; a respectful memorial was addressed to the commissioners, but no redress was obtained, and nearly all the clerks resigned. Not the slightest reduction has taken place in the commissioners' salaries, nor have their labours been increased. Soon after the resignation of the clerks some of them were solicited to return, as it was found their services could not be dispensed with. The conduct of the Tithe Commissioners will be brought before Parliament next session. The whole of the tithe documents, which have cost the country a million of money, are now so carelessly attended to that they will shortly be seriously injured, if not wholly destroyed.—Daily News.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

THE power of carriers to limit their liability by notices to their customers, has been the subject of much discussion, and many decisions in the courts of law. It was understood to be settled law that they could not limit their liabilities by any general notice, but only be making a special contract with the particular customer. Lately, however, the Courts have relaxed the supposed stringency of this rule, and in a series of cases growing out of the carrier business of railways, they have determined that the liability may be limited by certain notices in their nature general. One of these we reported from the Ex. a short time since. (Carr v. The Lancashire, &c. Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 124.) The C. P. has now come to the same conclusion. In Austin v. Manchester, &c. Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 256, horses were sent by the railway. The ticket stated that it was issued, "subject to the owner's undertaking to bear all cost of injury by conveyance, and other contingencies," &c. and that the company would not be responsible for "any damages, however caused, to horses, cattle, or live stock of any description, travelling upon their railway." During the journey an axle of one of the carriages broke, through negligence of the servants of the company in omitting to grease the wheels, and a horse was killed. The company was held not to be liable. The Court said, "At one time the Courts were disposed to hold that carriers could not limit their liability, but now their right to do so is well established. . . . Whatever be the nature of the conduct here charged, we think it is covered by the terms of the contract."

It is obvious how capable of abuse is the power thus recognised in a company to define its own liabilities. If they may do so with horses, they may do so with human beings. They ask the State for special powers, that give them a monopoly; the State has a right to impose just conditions upon the exercise of those powers, and the liabilities of companies ought to be defined by statute as well as their rights. No subject of more general interest or importance than this could engage the attention of parliament.

WINDING UP.

Last week we presented the promised report of the case of Hutton v. Bright, 19 Law T. Rep. 249, in which the House of Lords has practically reversed its own decision in Upfill's case. For the sake of appearances, the late decision is not stated to be an overruling of the former one, their lordships finding an excuse for it in some slight dissimilarity of facts, which is really a distinction without a difference. It will be seen by the report that the law is now precisely what we stated it to be a fortnight since. Upfill's case had been understood by all the world to decide that, although a provisional committeeman, merely as such, was not a contributory, nor was an allottee, yet if both these ingredients were combined, that is to say, if the committeeman had also accepted shares, he was liable as a contributory. Every Judge of every Court before whom the case was cited expressed his inability to understand the principle of the decision, but held himself to be absolutely bound by it. The House of Lords, however, has taken the very unusual course of correcting its own error, and reversing its own judgment; and in the case now under review it has determined, after receiving the unanimous opinion of the Common Law Judges, that the additional fact of being an allottee does not make a provisional committeeman a contributory. The law, therefore, may now be taken as settled, that a provisional committeeman is only liable for all such debts as he may have sanctioned personally, or given to other persons authority to contract in his behalf. It is a question to be determined according to the Common Law, and in almost every case a question of fact to be tried by a jury.

This is precisely the view which we have taken of this question from the beginning, and it is gratifying to find it thus adopted in the end by the highest judicial authorities.

In Ex parte Holme, 19 Law T. Rep. 250, the Lord Chancellor has affirmed the decision of the Court below, which was fully reported in 17 Law T. Rep. 11, and then duly noted in the Summary. We therefore deem it unnecessary to repeat the note here.

Cameron's Coalbrook, Swansea, and Loughor.—On Monday, before Master Richards, a meeting was held to make a call upon the shareholders to meet the costs occasioned by proceedings that had for their object the including certain parties, called "seceding shareholders," in the list of the contributories. Mr. Roxburgh, with Messrs. Galsworthy, appeared for Mr. Turquand, the official manager, whose report set forth that seventy persons, holding 15,281 shares, had been placed on the list as liable, and that fifty-nine other persons, holding 3,655, were also sought to be included; but that these latter claimed to be exempted by reason of the alleged transfer of shares, the validity of which was the subject of great litigation, and that a considerable amount of costs had been incurred in consequence, to meet which and the cost of further proceedings, together with the taxed costs of Mr. Williams, the solicitor to the company, which had been allowed at 3,800*l.* a call of 1*l.* per share would be required, more particularly as there was reason to believe that the call would not be productive as regarded 12,800 shares. After considerable discussion, the Master decided on making a call of 4s. per share.

A bond was given for securing the sum of 300*l.* and conditioned to be void if the obligor should pay the said sum of 300*l.* and the interest and premiums due on certain policies of assurance effected as a collateral security. Proviso, that if default be made in regular payment of interest or premiums, the bond should be forfeited, and the principal sum of 300*l.* be forthwith recoverable. This was held to be properly stamped with the bond stamp for 300*l.* "We think this is not a bond for the payment of the premiums, but only for the payment of 300*l.* the 300*l.* being demandable as soon as there is a deficiency in the payment of interest or premiums; but when it becomes forfeited by the omission to do that, all that can be recovered under it is the amount of the 300*l.* and not any thing else." (Prudential Mutual Assurance Society v. Curzon, 19 Law T. Rep. 257.)

In Quinn v. Quinn, 19 Law T. Rep. 249, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland has held that where a lady had lodged money in a bank with the declared purpose of preserving it for the benefit of her children, a trust was fastened upon it for their benefit, and she could not recover possession of the money.

COPYHOLD.

ADJUDICATION STAMPS.

A. as one of the two heirs of the deceased wife of B. claims one moiety, and C. as the other heir, claims the other moiety of a copyhold messuage. At a special Court, A. is admitted as to one moiety, and C. as to the other moiety of the said messuage.

Afterwards, at the same Court, in consideration of 5*l.* to said A. and of 5s to said C. respectively paid by said B. and in consideration of the said B. having been in receipt of the rents and profits of said messuage since his wife's decease, and for the purpose of carrying out her intention to devise same to him, said A. and C. do, and each of them doth, surrender same to the use of said B. Thereupon B. is admitted.

The commissioners, on the one copy of court-roll of the above proceedings, have adjudged the following amounts of duty, viz.—

For the admittance of A. as to his moiety	£1
" C. "	1
For the surrender and B.'s admittance, three 1*l.* stamps	3

Considering that there is only one tenement, there ought in fairness to be only one admittance duty charged on A. and C.'s admittance. They were, in fact, only admitted to the entirety as tenants in common. It makes no difference whether the form is to them as tenants in common, or to one as to one undivided moiety, or to the other as to the other undivided moiety.

The custom of this manor as to descents being according to gavelkind, there might possibly have been twelve shares instead of two, in which case, according to the above mode of charging, the admittance duty would have been 12*l.*

The surrender is jointly made; but because it is made by two tenants in common, it seems that 1*l.* is imposed in respect of each tenant; so that had there been twelve tenants, as above suggested, there would have been 12*l.* again, instead of 1*l.* for this surrender.

Surely this construction of the Stamp Act cannot be correct.

It is on the safe side for the commissioners; and if this be their general way of deciding, the public will have to pay dear for their adjudication.

COPYHOLDS.

Can any of your readers inform me if the Commissioners of Inland Revenue have decided whether a warrant to enter satisfaction on a conditional surrender is liable to be stamped as a "reconveyance, release, surrender, discharge, or renunciation of any mortgage," &c. under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, Schedule, tit. Mortgage?

This point has been mooted once or twice in your columns, but I have seen no reply to the question; yet the subject is not without considerable interest.

New Act for School Sites.—According to an Act now in operation, the provisions of former Acts with respect to sites for schools are extended to schools and colleges for the religious or educational training of the sons of yeomen or tradesmen, or others, or for the theological training of candidates for holy orders of the Established Church, which are erected or maintained in part by charitable aid.

Suits relating to Charities.—Mr. Hume requested some particulars of a sum of 7,000*l.* charged in the Civil Contingencies on account of bills of costs as solicitor to the Attorney-General in suits relating to charities, and the following statement has just been published in a Parliamentary paper:—"This is a sum which has been advanced to Mr. J. P. Fearon to enable him to carry on proceedings as solicitor to the Attorney-General in charity suits taken by that officer under the authority of the Acts of Parliament. It is expected that this sum, and other advances which have been made from time to time to the predecessors of Mr. Fearon, will be ultimately recovered so soon as the whole of the charity suits shall have been brought to a close. The results of the proceedings instituted by the Attorney-General in several of these suits have been of a most satisfactory character. Property to a considerable amount, which had in the course of years been diverted from the original charitable purposes contemplated by the donors, particularly in regard to hospitals and schools, has been recovered and properly applied. Already more than 600,000*l.* have been recovered for the benefit of certain charities, and in one case alone upwards of 60,000*l.* have been recovered and placed in due course of administration. The number of charities with which the Attorney-General and Mr. Fearon have to deal is 28,000, involving property to the amount of a million and a half per annum."

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

We last week published in full the County Courts Improvement Act, 19 Law T. Rep. 123. We have already presented to our readers an outline of the principal provisions of this measure. We have only now to add that sec. 1, for which we feel a parent's interest, and by which regular costs are secured to the Profession in the County Courts, instead of the insulting fixed fee, will not come into practical operation until the five Judges are appointed by the Lord Chancellor to frame a scale of fees, and these shall have been submitted to the Judges of the Superior Courts, and approved by them. We are not aware if any steps have yet been taken to carry out this valuable provision, but we trust there will be no delay in doing so. The next most important section is the 18th, which establishes a registry of County Court judgments; but the time and manner of doing it are confided to the Treasury, so that it is impossible even to surmise when it is likely to be done. The 16th section forbids the Judges to practise at the Bar or as special pleaders after the 30th of September next. By that time the salaries should be raised to the sum given by the new Act. But if the Judges are forbidden to practise, why should Deputy-Judges be allowed to do so? Any objection applicable to the one applies even more strongly to the other. Sec. 6 gives additional protection to officers executing warrants of execution, making the warrant under the seal of the Court sufficient evidence of authority — not of the officer acting under—but "of the said County Court previous to the issuing of such warrant." This would seem to protect the Court, even when acting without jurisdiction; but surely that could not have been the intention of the Legislature.

It will be seen that in Hickie v. Salamo, 19 Law T. Rep. 257, it has been decided, upon appeal, that in an action by two plaintiffs, where one resides within and the other beyond twenty miles from the defendant, the Superior Courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the County Courts.

COSTS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The Profession are undoubtedly deeply indebted to you for your exertions in watching and advocating their interests from time to time, and particularly in reference to the late County Courts Amendment Act, and the clause securing a fair remuneration for their services, but unless the judges exercise a corresponding liberality in settling the table of fees which shall be allowed in County Court proceedings, Paul may plant and Apollos water in vain. I would, therefore, suggest, on behalf of the Profession in general, that every influence should be exercised to get a fair scale of charges laid before them officially for the purpose, otherwise most of the work done out of Court will still be unprovided for, and it will therefore be desirable such scale should be prepared by some practical man, and suggestions furnished by the Profession to that end, in which I shall be happy to join; probably those taken from bills of costs that have been already taxed by the Masters as between attorney and client, will be considered by the judges more authentic and entitled to their fair weight when fixing the scale.

The absurd and insulting practice under the old law not only prohibited creditors from seeking to recover their just rights, on account of the time and labour required to get up their cases themselves (rather than incur the expense of legal assistance, which they would have ultimately to pay for in any event), but also materially increased the spirit of litigation and opposition on the part of the debtors themselves; and therefore the alteration which has now been effected will be a boon, not merely to the Profession, but to suitors also, and all parties will be satisfied. The only defect is the omission to give creditors the option of proceeding by writ in a Superior Court for demands under 20*l.* as well as above, and no provision being made for judgments by default. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

FRED. CHAPMAN.

Guildhall Chambers, Plymouth,
July 19, 1852.

EFFECTS OF THE COUNTY COURTS.—The effects of the County Courts are not more remarkable in the diminution of the number of cases in Westminster Hall than in the diminution of the number of prisoners in the Queen's Bench prison. Till the operation of the County Courts Act the average number of prisoners was considerably upwards of three hundred; at present there is scarcely a third of that number, and a full half of these have been in confinement from a period antecedent to the passing of the Act referred to. One man has been in prison for the space of forty years. He entered a hale and strong man of thirty-five—he is now in his dotage. Two have been there for thirty-one years, four for twenty years, and a considerable number for upwards of ten years. Every advance made by our Legislature in providing cheap justice to the people must necessarily have the effect of diminishing the number of prisoners for debt all over the kingdom. Not unfrequently persons have been kept in confinement for many years for the mere costs in an action, irrespective of the alleged debt or claim altogether—as, for example, in a case where the judge had ordered that each party should pay his own costs. Cheap justice will render such cases rare, it being more difficult to run up a large bill of costs for proceedings in the County Courts than in the Superior ones. A reform in the Court of Chancery will also have the effect of diminishing the number of inmates in the Queen's Prison. Many of the Chancery prisoners are committed for contempt—that is, they may have chanced not to appear to some summons at the Master's or Registrar's office, or otherwise, as the case may be, during the progress of the suit, which may have been prolonged to a tedious duration. The costs connected with such contempts are enormous. If the proceedings in the cause had been more speedy, no contempt, in the shape of non-attendance, would have been committed, and the poor litigant would not have been put in confinement for a debt wholly irrespective of, and apart from, the general costs in the suit.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—Defendants who come within the jurisdiction after decree moved without notice to the other defendants, were, in Vincent v. Watts, 19 Law T. Rep. 253, allowed to have the same benefit of the decree as if they had put in an answer.

Where the tenant for life of trust money paid into Court under the Trustee Act petitioned for payment of dividends, the costs of the petition were ordered to be paid out of the corpus, and not out of the income, of the fund. (Re Field's Trust, 19 Law T. Rep. 253.)

In Ex parte Richards, 19 Law T. Rep. 253, an infant interested under a settlement, made by an alleged lunatic ten years before, was allowed to attend the inquisition by Counsel, the object being to carry back the lunacy for thirty years.

COMMON LAW. In an action on a money bond, alleging a single breach, if the Statute of Limitations is pleaded, and issue taken thereon, the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict on that issue, if he proves a single breach within the twenty years, although there may have been an earlier breach beyond the twenty years. (Amott v. Holden, 19 Law T. Rep. 253.)

In Horton v. The Westminster Improvement Commissioners, 19 Law T. Rep. 256, an order had been made for changing the venue, on payment of costs, and other terms were included. But such payment of costs was held not to be necessarily conditional on the change of venue, but the Court would ascertain from the facts whether such payment should be obligatory.

WESTMINSTER COUNTY COURT.

Thursday, July 15.

FRANCE v. GREEN.

IMPORTANT TO AUCTIONEERS.

This was an action by a furniture broker against an auctioneer to recover 2*l.* for his expenses, loss of time, and anticipated profit, in consequence of the postponement of a sale of furniture.

The plaintiff appeared in person; Mr. Parry counsel, and Mr. Sangster, solicitor, for the defendant.

From the plaintiff's statement it appeared that, in consequence of an advertisement stating that defendant would, on the 10th of June last, sell some household furniture at Chigwell-row, he, plaintiff, went there for the purpose of buying, but that when he arrived he found that the sale was postponed. That it was a very wet day, and he supposed the sale was postponed in consequence of the rain. Plaintiff claimed 2*l.* for his expenses, loss of time &c.

In answer to questions put by the judge, the plaintiff said he had not seen Mr. Green before the proposed sale, nor could he prove that the advertisement was inserted by him.

The learned judge said that was fatal to the case, but for the plaintiff's satisfaction he would add, that if he had connected Mr. Green with the advertisement, he knew no law by which an auctioneer was liable in such a case. It was an experiment of the plaintiff, and he should give judgment for the defendant.

Mr. Parry was not called upon.

All Masters Extraordinary in Chancery are requested to transmit to the Principal Secretary of the Lord Chancellor, Quality-court, Chancery-lane, on or before the last day of August next, a statement, in writing, mentioning their names, their place of residence, their actual occupation, and the date of their appointment.

DEATH OF "JOHN DOE AND RICHARD ROE."—On the 24th of October next these celebrated characters will legally cease to exist. By an Act passed in the late session (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), it is enacted that, "instead of the present proceeding by ejectment, a writ shall be issued, directed to the persons in possession of the property claimed, which property shall be described in the writ with reasonable certainty."

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

ONE of the most important and interesting cases, as affecting the mercantile community and the bankers especially, has been fully and carefully reported to us from the House of Lords. In Mangles v. Dixon, 19 Law T. Rep. 260, these were the facts: A. (a merchant) and B. (a shipowner) agreed to share the profits of a particular voyage of a ship that belonged to B. This agreement was contained in three instruments: first, a charter-party by which about one-half of the freight at so much per ton per month was to be paid by A. to B. by monthly instalments during the voyage and the rest on the return of the ship; second, a memorandum by which the parties agreed that they should be liable to expenses and share profits in equal moieties; third, a guarantee. After the ship had sailed, B. deposited the charter-party with his bankers as security for a balance then due on his account, with an order indorsed thereon, addressed to A. to pay to the bankers the freight thereafter to become due. Notice of the deposit and indorsement was afterwards given to A. who accordingly paid to the bankers the instalments as they fell due, but did not inform them of the agreement. B. became bankrupt; the ship returned, having made a losing voyage, and then A. refused to make any further payment, alleging that by virtue of the agreement he was liable only for half the freight made payable by the charter-party. Until this objection was made, the bankers were not informed of the existence of the agreement. They now claimed the full benefit of the charter-party deposited with them, without its being affected by the agreement of which they had no notice. But the House of Lords, reversing the judgment of Lord Chancellor COTTENHAM, has held that they could not do so, that they were entitled to no larger benefit from it than the assignor was entitled to, and the general rule was affirmed that an assignee of a chose in action takes it subject to all the then subsisting equities against it in the hands of the assignor.

In Amott v. Holden, 19 Law T. Rep. 253, the bankruptcy and certificate of the defendant were held to be no bar to an action by the grantor of an annuity on a joint and several bond, conditioned for payment of the annuity, but executed by defendant only as surety for the grantor, although the bond was forfeited before the bankruptcy, and by its terms the principal and surety were coequally bound. WIGHTMAN, J. differed from the rest of the Court, doubting whether in this case the defendant was a surety. But upon this point Lord CAMPBELL, C. J. said, "With the most sincere deference for the opinion of my brother WIGHTMAN, I have not been able to bring myself to entertain any doubt that in this transaction the defendant is a surety. A surety is a person who makes himself liable for the debt of another, and he is still a surety, though he may be called on for payment at the same moment as the principal. If he has no interest in the transaction, except as surety, and this is fully known to the creditor, who accepts him in the relation of surety, his contract with the creditor must be attended with all the incidents of suretyship."

Another extremely important question in Bankruptcy has been decided by a Court of Error, in Tetley v. Taylor, 19 Law T. Rep. 258, overruling the judgment of the Q. B. It is now decided that a deed of arrangement between a trader and his creditors executed by six-sevenths in number and value of those whose debts amount to 10*l.* and upwards, under the 224th to 230th sections of the New Bankruptcy Act, is not binding upon creditors who are not parties to the deed, unless the deed provides for the distribution of the whole of the trader's estate among his creditors.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Assizes.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

OXFORD, July 15.—The commission was opened here yesterday. The Court sat at twelve o'clock to-day. Five causes were entered; one of them proved to be undefended; in another a verdict was taken for the plaintiff by consent. The calendar is unusually light, there being only fifteen prisoners for trial in the county and one in the city. In the city case the prisoner is charged with the murder of his wife.

STAFFORD, July 22.—The commission was opened on Wednesday. Fourteen causes were entered for trial. Mr. Justice Williams presided in the Crown Court. The calendar, containing the names of sixty-nine prisoners, was comparatively light, both in the number of prisoners and the nature of the offences with which they were charged, which called forth from the learned judge, in his charge to the grand jury, his congratulations on the decrease of crime in the county.

WORCESTER, July 19.—The commission was opened here on Saturday. At Nisi Prius there are five common [illegible] Crown Court there are fifty-five prisoners for trial.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

HUNTINGDON, July 20.—The commission for this county was opened yesterday afternoon, there being two common jury causes of an ordinary description (of which one was settled in the course of the day) on the one side, and on the other eight prisoners, involved in two charges of manslaughter, three of burglary, two of highway robbery, and one of assault.

CAMBRIDGE, July 22.—The commission was opened yesterday. On the civil side there is an entry of seven common jury cases. The calendar contains the names of twenty-four prisoners charged with serious offences, including one case of rape, one of bigamy, one of abduction, one of burglary, one of stabbing, three of arson, one of highway robbery, one of perjury, one of concealment of birth, one of uttering counterfeit coin, two of felonious assaults, and five of ordinary larcenies. Besides these, there is, however, a road indictment, which was made a remanet from the last assizes.

Leicester, July 22.—The calendar for the county contains the names of eighteen prisoners for trial; but there are few charges of magnitude—three of cutting and wounding, two of arson, one of burglary, one of housebreaking, one of robbery, one of forgery, and one of throwing a stone upon a railway carriage. The cause list shews an entry of six causes.

HOME CIRCUIT.

Lewes, July 22.—The commission was opened Wednesday, and this morning both the courts proceeded to business; Chief Justice Jervis presiding on the Crown side, and Mr. Justice Maule at Nisi Prius. The gaol calender contains the names of thirty-two prisoners; but the cases, with one or two exceptions, are of the ordinary description. On the civil side fourteen causes are entered—thirteen common and one special jury cases.

Chelmsford, July 17.—The commission was opened here on Thursday. The calendar was an unusually light one, and the offences charged were, with two exceptions, of a trivial character. Mr. Justice Maule sat on the civil side, and disposed of the business on the list, which was also an unusually meagre one.

Derby, July 17.—Mr. Justice Coleridge arrived here this afternoon. Only three venires have been returned, and the calendar contains the names of only nineteen prisoners. Some of the charges are, however, of a serious kind. They include two cases of murder, one of stabbing, one of rape, one of forgery, and one of subornation of perjury.

A Fracas at the Bar.—The new member for Sunderland, Mr. Digby Seymour, having been accused of dishonesty in his political opinions by his antagonist, Mr. Fenwick, during the late election, which personal aspersions were indignantly repelled, Mr. Fenwick resorted to the expedient of writing to members of the Northern Bar for their opinion as to Mr. Seymour's politics, and obtained answers from Mr. Pollock, Mr. Baxter, Mr. Otter, M Price, and Mr. Campbell Foster, which letters he published, in some instances at least without the consent of the writers. Thereupon Mr. Seymour was very indignant, and in a speech delivered by him at Sunderland he accused Mr. Campbell Foster of having, from personal resentment, been a party to this imputation on his political integrity, and entered at some length into the grounds on which he arrived at this conclusion. This speech was reported in the Sunderland News of July 10; and on the same day the commission for the York Assizes was opened. Mr. Campbell Foster, on Monday following, addressed a letter to Mr. Seymour, demanding to know whether the report of this speech was correct, and Mr. Seymour sent a reply, which has not been published; its purport, however, may be gathered from the subsequent correspondence. Mr. Dearsley, a member of the Northern Bar, on Wednesday, the 14th, wrote to Mr. Seymour, as from Mr. C. Foster, professing to be their mutual friend, and requesting him "to express his unqualified regret that in a moment of great difficulty and excitement he (Mr. Seymour) was betrayed into expressions and matter of which his better judgment disapproved." Mr. Seymour replied—complying with the request of Mr. Dearsley, and expressing his "regret that under great excitement he felt compelled to make observations and introduce matters relating to Mr. Foster, which his cooler judgment and the subsequent perusal of his letter satisfied him had been better omitted." Mr. Dearsley rejoined that on the part of Mr. C. Foster he was satisfied with this apology, and in one of the York papers of Saturday this correspondence was published by Mr. C. Foster (omitting, however, Mr. Seymour's reply to his first letter). It was imagined that with this publication would end "this war of words," but Monday brought Mr. Seymour and Mr. Foster to an interview with each other, and it would appear that some difference had occurred as to whether Mr. Seymour's letter was to be deemed an apology. The parties met in the robing-room at York Castle, and after some words Mr. Foster, who had a cane in his hand, struck Mr. Seymour three or four smart blows across the shoulders. Mr. Seymour resented this violence, and a "set-to" commenced, in the course of which both the "learned gentlemen" came to the ground. Mr. Knowles, Q.C. and other barristers who were present, then interposed, and ultimately the belligerents were separated. Mr. Knowles, as one of the Commissioners of Assize, felt it to be his duty to apprise the judges—Lord Campbell and Mr. Justice Wightman—and they summoned Mr. C. Foster and Mr. Seymour before them in their private room. The facts being there stated, the learned judges required Mr. Foster and Mr. Seymour to enter into their own recognizances, in 500*l.* each, to keep the peace and be of good behaviour to each other for the next six months. The learned gentlemen were also admonished on the great impropriety of their conduct. Thus the matter at present stands.—Daily News.

Representative Peers for Scotland.—An Act of Parliament, which received the Royal assent on the 30th ult. has just taken effect in relation to the election of representative Peers for Scotland. By this Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 35), Peers of Scotland may take the oaths, &c. in courts of Ireland, or before any judge of a County Court in England, and before other officers, to enable them to vote by proxy.

The Western Bar.—No less than eight counsel who do, or did, travel the Western Circuit, have been returned to the present Parliament, and all for boroughs in the counties of the circuit—namely, Mr. Crowder for Liskeard, Sir A. Cockburn for Southampton, Mr. Butt for Weymouth, Mr. Massy for Newport, Mr. Collier for Plymouth, Mr. Phinn for Bath, and Mr. E. Carter for Tavistock.

Registered Letters.—The Postmaster-General has ordered a relaxation of the stringent rules now in force respecting the delivery of registered letters. At present a registered letter can only be delivered to the party to whom it is addressed, and whose receipt alone is taken for it. For the future, when this is impracticable, a receipt will be taken for a registered letter from the husband, wife, or, failing this, from a member of the same family residing under the same roof of the party to whom such letter is addressed. This will be a very great convenience to the public.

It is stated that one eminent Queen's counsel has already received twenty-five retainers on petitions against election returns, for undue practices.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JULY 31, 1852.

LAW REFORMS AND LAW REFORMERS.

MODERATION is the rarest of virtues. Not long ago it was difficult to obtain a favourable hearing for the most obvious improvements in the law. Now, the wildest schemes are gravely proposed and warmly supported. Many of our would-be Law Reformers are endeavouring to vie with one another in the extravagance of their plans, as if they thought that popularity was to be gained by the highest bidder for Law destruction, under the plausible name of Law Reform. Accomplish the desires of these flaming patriots, and what would be the result? The administration of justice in England would be assimilated to that of Turkey, where a Cadi is judge and jury, and his decisions are governed according to his individual notions of the equity of the case. That is the perfection of the two objects most held in veneration by our legal destructives—speed and cheapness.

The truth is, that there exists a very great desire in many quarters to destroy the Lawyers. That feeling is at the bottom of many a professsion of patriotic zeal for Law Reform. It moves a considerable portion of the pens that supply the leading articles in the newspapers. We regret to be obliged to declare our conviction that it is the aim of some of the noisiest of the Law Reformers. Let philosophers explain it as they may, the fact is confirmed by every day's experience, that those who have failed in a profession usually become its enemies. It is a remarkable fact that the most violent of the Law Reformers—they who are for revolutionising the law—have been unsuccessful in the pursuit of the law; the Profession has failed to recognise their merits. Now they come forward, and by tongue and speech endeavour to promote schemes of which the certain result would be to destroy the Profession that has slighted themselves. Whether this coincidence is an accident, or the facts are connected in the relationship of cause and effect, the reader will form his own judgment.

But whatever the motive that impels these revolutionary projects, the duty of the Profession, and of those who are associated with it, is to offer to them the most resolute resistance. Such schemes find a certain amount of public favour, because they are seen to be ruinous to the Lawyers, who are not in favour with the public. Therefore they will require to be carefully watched in all their details, and the Profession should be prepared, upon the first sound of alarm from the sentinel, to rise as one man and resist the attack, whether it comes from open foes without, or pretended friends within, the camp.

MORTGAGES.

PROTECTION being now abandoned, relief for the landed interest will be sought in other directions, and it is certain that the efforts of all the friends of agriculture will be directed to the promotion of measures that will reduce the burdens upon land, or, which is equally desirable, increase its market value.

Undoubtedly, one of the most serious of its burdens is the cost of conveying and mortgaging it. If a plan could be devised by which these charges could be reduced, land would be transferred and mortgaged much more frequently than it is at present, and the Profession would reap a sum of advantage by multiplied conveyancing more than equivalent to the diminution of profit on each transaction.

We have already shewn why it will be impossible materially to diminish the costs of a conveyance without making considerable alterations in the law of real property, for so long as the law recognises the existence of a variety of interests in land, besides that of the actual possessor, there must be, on every transfer, an inquiry into the existence of such interests, and the owners of them must be parties to the conveyance.

But a plan has suggested itself to us by which a considerable improvement might be made in the practice of mortgages, and which would have the double effect of diminishing the cost of a mortgage and reducing the rate of interest.

This plan was suggested to us by the provision in the Copyholds Enfranchisement Act, that permits the rent-charges for which the compensation to the lord may be exchanged, to be represented by a transferable certificate of charge, that will pass from hand to hand by indorsement, like a bill of exchange.

Now we propose that a somewhat similar plan should be adopted with respect to mortgages; that there should be a voluntary register of mortgaged property; that the registrar should grant a certificate of charges of any property so registered, which certificate should be transferable by indorsement, with notice to the registrar, or, if deemed more secure, by indorsement of the registrar personally—by whom a register of all such certificates and transfers should be preserved.

Thus, for example. You take up 500*l.* on mortgage. The mortgage deed is deposited with the registrar, for which he issues to the mortgagee so many certificates of charge as may be desired, no one certificate being for a less sum than 50*l.* These certificates of charge refer to the mortgage, and state the interest payable, and the day and place of payment. They are transferable, either by indorsement of the transferor alone, or by an indorsement on the certificate by the registrar, who keeps a register of such transfers. If at any time the mortgagee wants to raise money, these certificates are the best securities, for they are equivalent to small mortgages; they will be put into circulation, pass regularly into the money market, command the highest price there, or, which is the same thing, the lowest rate of interest, and if the mortgagor at any time desires to redeem, he can buy them up either by degrees or altogether, according to his means.

This is the rude outline of the plan we propose. Necessarily its details will require much thought and care in the elaboration, and they will be attended with some difficulties: but there is nothing in them impracticable, or which might not be overcome by a resolution to accomplish the object. If any of our readers should be pleased with the design, and will favour us with their opinions upon it, or with practical hints for its improvement, or for the construction of the lesser details, we shall feel much obliged by the transmission of their hints.

COMMON LAW PROCEDURE ACT.

IN our last number, by a slight mistake of the printer, the word "week" instead of "month" was used inadvertently in the last paragraph of our notice of the LAW TIMES edition of this statute.

We have received a very valuable suggestion from more than one of our correspondents in reference to our edition of this important statute. It is stated that it would be desirable to give the new procedure under the 6th section of the Law of Evidence Act, relating to the inspection of documents. The power (analogous to that of giving discovery in equity) conferred by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, upon the Common Law Courts, will be of immense consequence now that profert and oyer are abolished; and under the sections effecting this change, we are informed that the new procedure of the Courts above referred to will be given, the suggestions of our correspondents having alone presented themselves to the editor of the statutes as a proper and necessary subject of commentary.

We are glad also to see that the resolution of the editor to delay the publication of the "Common Law Procedure Act" has met with the warm approval of a large number of our subscribers.

APPEALS IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

We stated last week that the Lords had cleared off their list of Appeals. This must be taken, however, with an explanation, that the term does not include the appeals entered during the session, but only the list issued at the commencement of the session. All the arrears are disposed of. We expect to receive some curious returns illustrative of the appeal business, as it was and is, and which may suggest some further improvements in the system.

THE ADVOCATE:
HIS TRAINING, PRACTICE, RIGHTS, AND DUTIES.(a)
SIXTIETH ARTICLE.
THE REPLY.

The reply is usually deemed to be the test of an orator's ability, and his most difficult achievement. It may rightly be so in debate, because the reply is the only portion of it which we are sure could not have been prepared, and in which we know that the speaker gives expression only to his own thoughts, in his own words, thus enabling us to measure his capacities. But, at the Bar, it is dangerous to come prepared with an opening speech, still more dangerous to anticipate a defence, and therefore the tact and skill required for a defence are even greater than those demanded for a reply. In a defence, half the case is conjectural; in reply, all is known, and the Advocate may deal with it after his own fashion, without fear of contradiction from forthcoming evidence. Hence the wide scope which the reply affords for the exercise of all the powers of the intellect, and which really makes it a less difficult achievement than the other oratorical duties of an Advocate that compel the speaker to caution and restraint, the curb in oratory being a great deal more trying to the speaker's intellect than unlicensed liberty.

The reply is always the duty of the leader, and it is to enable him to mould the case, so that he may maintain a consistent argument, that to him is also intrusted the task of cross-examining the witnesses for the defence.

No rules can be suggested for regulating a reply, because the utmost licence is given to you, alike in respect of subject and of treatment. You reply upon the whole case. You may comment upon every portion of it, repeat your own evidence, review that of the defendant, compare the one with the other, point out the relative strength or weakness of either, shew inconsistencies, criticise the witnesses, confirm the weak, denounce the false, vindicate the true, answer the arguments of your opponent, elaborate your own, invoke the aid of wit or wisdom, humour or pathos, as it serves your purpose. The wide range thus given to the play of your intellect is to yourself one of the most delightful exercises of your mind and if you have ... and various ... prompt ... sensibly with ... divers topics, you cannot fail to arrest the attention of your audience, and dull indeed must be the jury that will deny to you a patient hearing.

Hence the extreme importance of the right to reply. Doubtless you have many times read in the reports, or witnessed in the courts, the contests upon the claim of right to begin, and possibly you may have wondered what great advantage, worth so much talk, could arise to a party from the mere permission to state his case first. But the battle is not really for the right to begin, but for the right of reply, which is consequent upon the right to begin. The general rule is briefly stated: that party begins with whom rests the affirmative of the issue; but, as with all general rules, the application of it to particular cases often produces great and reasonable doubts where the affirmative does lie.

The value of a reply can scarcely be over-estimated. In the hands of a skilful Advocate, scarcely any case is hopeless where a reply is given to him. Instances of its importance must continually occur to all who have had experience in our courts. How often have we seen a jury intimate that they had made up their minds but, being told by the Judge that it was their duty to hear the whole case, reluctantly and sullenly at first submitting to the Advocate's address, then listening of good-will, and ultimately delivering a verdict directly opposed to that upon which their minds had been made up! Remember that the reply is the last word, and we all know the proverbial worth of that. Arguments, however fallacious, must pass unanswered, save by the Judge in summing up, and the evidence may be so skilfully disposed as to give to it such aspects as the Advocate desires. He may batter down his adversary's case, and there is none to set it up again, or display his own in glowing colours and it cannot be stripped of its hues, however shadowy or deceptive.

You will now understand why it is that the Counsel for the defence should always exercise such care in resolving whether to call witnesses. If he does not do so, the case ends there, and the defence has the benefit of the last word. As a general rule, a cautious Advocate will not call witnesses for the defence, unless they are absolutely required to meet the case established by the plaintiff. If the plaintiff has failed to ... it so, with the impression of the speech for the defence full in the minds of the jury, than to hazard a reply, which can never be given without danger.

This difficulty, however, occurs more frequently in the Criminal Courts, in treating of which we shall have occasion to return to the topic, and adduce the reasons for the rule we are recommending. It suffices merely to hint it here.

But even a reply should be governed by some regard to method. No such orderly array is required as in the opening speech, which is a narrative of facts, or in the defence, which is partly argument and partly narrative. But it should not be desultory and unmethodical. It should be artistically arranged, and not a mere string of disconnected sentences. Remember, that it ought to be a continuous and complete argument. However sparkling with wit, or glowing with elegance, however you may seem to play with your theme and to fat away on this side or on that in pursuit of illustrations, or even for the indulgence of your fancy, you must never lose the thread of your discourse; an under current of argument must run through every part of it, and all must be directed and actually tend to the conclusion which you desire that the jury shall draw from it. A formal logical discourse would be disagreeable and repulsive; but if the flowers with which you adorn it be stripped off, there beneath them the logic should be found that gives pith and substance to the whole.

Remember what is your purpose—to answer by argument the case that has been made out for the defence by the evidence. That is the principal object of a reply; the others are only secondary. You have also to answer the arguments of the Counsel for the defence, but these are of small moment compared with the duty of meeting and explaining away his facts, for arguments are but dimly understood by the majority of jurymen, and by almost all of them are but feebly remembered; whilst facts make their way into the minds of the dullest, and remain there. It will, therefore, be the most prudent course, upon the principle of reserving your most important points to the last, that they may leave the most vivid impression, to begin with an answer to the arguments of the other side, and then to proceed to review the facts of the case as proved by yourself, dwelling emphatically upon such as have been left unanswered by the defence. This serves to refresh the minds of the jury upon the strong points of your own case, and it will also enable them more readily to follow you in your examination of the case submitted for the defence. Good generalship and great caution are required in this, so as to handle your own case as not to bring into prominency its weaknesses and defects, and to give strength and symmetry to its best points by your manner of recalling them. But that manner cannot be conveyed by rule; it can only be taught by experience, combined with a quick perception, and a power of ready adaptation to the demands of the moment.

This done, you proceed to comment upon the evidence for the defence, and to that the same instructions are applicable as have been already submitted to you for your guidance in the speech that opens the defence, for your business in either is the same in this particular, namely, to shew that the evidence is not credible, or, if credible, that it does not support the case. But you have something more to do than mere criticism on the evidence of the defendant, you must compare it with your own case, and shew how and where it is weak, and what it has failed to shake, and what it has left unassailed. In the defence, your only duty was to criticise the case of the plaintiff; you could scarcely venture to compare it with your own, because yours remained as yet unproved; you could only speak of it in anticipation, and as you knew not how it might fail in the witness-box, it would have been dangerous to treat it as proved, and dwell upon it by comparisons with that which was actually proved. But in reply the best and the worst are known; there is nothing to fear from failure of proof; the range of the Advocate's review is only limited by the legitimate boundaries of the whole case; he will set the one fact against the other, and draw such a comparison in his own favour as the contrast will permit, and with the results of that comparison, carefully summed up and put to the jury in the clearest language, he will close his reply.

Observe, however, that this is but an outline of the form of a reply; as a general rule, it would be most prudent to adopt this arrangement of your theme, as being the natural order in which it would recur to the thoughts of the jury. For its details, for the ornaments with which you should surround it, and almost conceal its shape, you can be indebted only to your own skill and accomplishments exercised at the moment. There is scarcely one of the graces of oratory which you may not now advantageously employ, provided it be in accord with the subject. And this suggests to us another hint, not out of place here. Let your treatment of every case be consistent with itself. Let the tone, the manner of handling, and the language, be in harmony with the character of the case. If a fit theme for light and jesting treatment, so treat it; if for pathos, be pathetic; if it be a grave matter, deal with it gravely; if shameless, severely. But do not endeavour to mingle all humours, nor approach it in an unsuitable mood. Such bad taste is far more offensive to an audience than many positive faults. And yet it is not an uncommon spectacle in our courts, especially among possible, and indulge in no "fine phrensies." Courts of Justice are places of business, where men resort for the despatch of earnest and serious affairs, and not for empty declamation and debating-club talk. The occasions are extremely rare that permit of anything more than a sensible plain-spoken address to a jury;—enlivened, if you please, by a spice of humour, or a dash or two of wit, fairly suggested by some person or event on which you are required to comment in due course;—but let nothing tempt you to be eloquent about mere matters of business—to rhapsodise upon a tradesman's bill, or to scatter the flowers of oratory over a right of way.

THE COMMON LAW PROCEDURE ACT.

I. THE WRIT OF SUMMONS.

WITH a great shew of change, this statute will, we fear, be found in practice to have advanced very little towards the accomplishment of the three objects for which it was designed—the simplification, the speeding, and the cheapening, of an action at law. It does little to simplify, less to cheapen, and positively nothing for speed. It introduces a multitude of changes, but few of them are substantial improvements; they go just far enough to unsettle the existing system, without constructing a new one, and the result is just that which a man witnesses who attempts to alter an old building—it is inconvenient and unsightly when done, and costs him more in money and labour than if he had pulled it down and erected a new one upon a plan adapted to his requirements. So in the new procedure of the Common Law Courts. New and old have been mingled together in unsightly and inconvenient companionship, and we suspect it will be found, when the machine comes to be set to work, that it has been marred instead of being mended, and that in patching one hole two new ones have been made.

If our readers will follow us through the series of papers in which we purpose, according to our promise, to make them fully acquainted with the new law, the alterations made by it, as compared with the former practice, and the manner in which they will be required to deal henceforth with actions in the Superior Courts, they will certainly share with us the sense of disappointment we have felt in reviewing its provisions, and the doubts we cannot but entertain, whether it will not prove a positive increase, instead of a diminution, of difficulty and cost. At all events, they will acknowledge that seldom has so little substantial benefit been ushered into the world with so much needless noise and undeserved gratulation.

The Act comes into operation on the 24th of October next.

Personal actions are still to be commenced by writ of summons, but it is to be necessary no longer to state in the writ the form or cause of action; still, however, the useless form is to be preserved of testing it in the name of the Chief Judge of the Court whence it issues.

It is to be indorsed as now, with the name and abode of the attorney actually suing it out, or with that of the plaintiff in person (if such was the case).

On demand in writing made by or on behalf of the defendant, the attorney whose name is on the writ is to declare whether the writ is issued with his authority, and the name and abode and profession of the plaintiff; and if he shall declare that it was not issued by him, then all proceedings thereon are to be stayed. This provision will meet an abuse that has occurred now and then in the issue of writs without authority.

We now proceed to describe the most useful provision of the statute, and the greatest improvement it has introduced.

Sec. 25 enacts, that where the claim is "for a debt or liquidated demand in money, with or without interest, arising upon a contract express or implied," as on a bill, note, cheque, bond, or contract under seal for a liquidated sum of money, or on a statute, where the sum sought to be recovered is a fixed sum, or in the nature of a debt, or on a guarantee, whether under seal or not, the plaintiff may make on the writ a special indorsement of the particulars of his claim, which shall be considered by the Act, at once sign final judgment for any sum not exceeding the sum indorsed on the writ, with interest, if any due, at the rate specified, and a sum for costs (on a scale to be framed by the Masters), and on such judgment the plaintiff may issue execution at the expiration of eight days from the last day for appearance.

A power is then reserved to the Court to let in defendant to defend after the expiration of eight days, upon good cause shewn by affidavits disclosing a defence upon the merits.

The advantages of this speedy process for recovery of debts will be recognised by all our readers, and it will compensate for much that is disappointing in the other portions of the Act. The Common Law Courts will thus be rendered far more efficient than the County Courts for the recovery of debts, and it is only to be regretted that permission was not given by the statute to plaintiffs to sue either in the Superior Courts or in the County Courts; for, as the law is, both a cheaper and speedier remedy is provided by the Superior Courts, and it will be hard to compel plaintiffs to go for redress to the most troublesome and costly, instead of to the easiest and cheapest tribunal.

We now return to the other provisions for the regulation of writs of summons.

Concurrent writs may be issued.

No original writ is to be in force for more than six months from the date, but if any defendant be not served, it may be renewed, at any time before its expiration, for another period of six months, and so from ti to time, and such renewed writ is to be in force to prevent the operation of any Statute of Limitations. And its production, marked with the seal of the Court, is to be evidence of the date of the commencement of the action.

A writ of summons in any action may be served in any county.

Indorsement of service of writ is to be made within three days.

Provision is made for service of writs on corporations or inhabitants of hundreds and towns.

Distringas is abolished, and instead of it, where personal service cannot be effected, and the Court or judge shall, upon affidavit, be satisfied that reasonable efforts have been made to serve it, and either that the writ has come to the defendant's knowledge, or that he wilfully evades service, the plaintiff may be permitted to proceed as if personal service had been effected.

Where a defendant resides out of the jurisdiction, in any place except Scotland or Ireland, a special form of writ may be issued (as given in the schedule), and upon the Court being satisfied that there was a cause of action, and that defendant was served, or that he had evaded service, or wilfully neglected to appear, or "that he is living out of the jurisdiction in order to defeat and delay his creditors," may order the action to proceed. But the plaintiff must, in such case, prove the amount of the debt or damages claimed by him, either before a jury on a writ of inquiry, or before one of the Masters, as the Court shall direct.

A similar course, but with a different form of writ, is to be pursued with a foreigner resident out of the jurisdiction.

A writ is not to be nullified by an omission to insert or indorse on it any matters required to be inserted, but the Court may amend on terms; as also it may where the wrong writ shall have been accidentally substituted.

Concurrent writs for service within and without the jurisdiction may be issued.

For the purpose of directing proceedings against persons residing out of the jurisdiction, affidavits may be sworn before a consul-general, consul, vice-consul, or consular agent.

Here we pause. So far the alterations are decided improvements, some of them very great ones, especially the final judgment upon the writ specially indorsed, and the provisions for process against defendants out of the jurisdiction, the difficulties which have been hitherto one of the reproaches of our law, and which the facilities of locomotion have lately rendered intolerable.

THE LEGISLATOR.

NEW STATUTES.

15 VICTORIA, A.D. 1852.

[In this record of Legislation only the Statutes of practical utility are given at length. Of the others an abstract or the titles only are presented.]

156. Jurisdiction of Courts of Error over the proceedings.—Courts of Error shall have power to quash the proceedings in error in all cases in which error does not lie, or where they are taken against good faith, or in any case in which proceedings in error might heretofore have been quashed by such Courts; and such Courts shall in all respects have such jurisdiction over the proceedings as over the proceedings in error commenced by writ of error.

157. Court of Error to have like powers with Court below.—Courts of Error shall in all cases have power to give such judgment and award such process, as the Court from which error is brought ought to have done, without regard to the party alleging error.

158. Proceedings in error in fact.—Either party alleging error in fact may deliver to one of the Masters of the court a memorandum in writing, in the form contained in the schedule (A) to this Act annexed, marked No. 12, or to the like effect, intituled in the court and cause, and signed by the party or his attorney, alleging that there is error in fact in the proceedings, together with an affidavit of the matter of fact in which the alleged error consists; whereupon the Master shall file such memorandum and affidavit, and deliver to the party lodging the same a note of the receipt thereof; and a copy of such note and affidavit may be served on the opposite party or his attorney; and such service shall have the same effect, and the same proceedings may be had thereafter as heretofore had after the service of the rule for allowance of a writ of error in fact.

159. Plaintiff may discontinue proceedings in error.—The plaintiff in error, whether in fact or law, shall be at liberty to discontinue his proceedings by giving to the defendant in error a notice, headed in the court and cause, and signed by the plaintiff in error or his attorney, stating that he discontinues such proceedings; and thereupon the defendant in error may sign judgment for the costs of, and occasioned by, the proceedings in error, and may proceed upon the judgment on which the error was brought.

160. Defendant may confess error, and consent to reversal of judgment.—The defendant in error, whether in fact or law, shall be at liberty to confess error, and consent to the reversal of the judgment, by giving to the plaintiff in error a notice, headed in the court and cause, and signed by the defendant in error or his attorney, stating that he confesses the error, and consents to the reversal of the judgment; and thereupon the plaintiff in error shall be entitled t and may forthwith sign a judgment of reversal.

161. Death of plaintiff in error no abatement.—The death of a plaintiff in error after service of the note of the receipt of the memorandum alleging error, with a statement of the grounds of ... , shall not cause the proceedings to abate, but they may be continued as hereinafter mentioned.

162. Proceeding for death of one of several plaintiffs in error.—In case of the death of one of several plaintiffs in error, a suggestion may be made of the death, which suggestion shall not be traversable, but shall only be subject to be set aside if untrue, the proceedings may be thereupon continued at the suit of, and against the surviving plaintiff in error, as if he were the sole plaintiff.

163. Proceedings upon death of sole plaintiff or of all the plaintiffs in error.—In case of the death of a sole plaintiff or of several plaintiffs in error, the legal representative of such plaintiff or of the surviving plaintiff may, by leave of the Court or a judge, enter a suggestion of the death, and that he is such legal representative, which suggestion shall not be traversable, but shall only be subject to be set aside if untrue, and the proceedings may thereupon be continued at the suit of, and against such legal representative as the plaintiff in error; and, if no such suggestion shall be made, the defendant in error may proceed to an affirmance of the judgment according to the practice of the Court, or take such other proceedings thereupon as he may be entitled to.

164. Death of a defendant in error no abatement.—The death of a defendant in error shall not cause the proceedings to abate, but they may be continued as hereinafter mentioned.

165. Proceedings upon death of one of several defendants in error.—In the case of the death of one of several defendants in error, a suggestion may be made of the death, which suggestion shall not be traversable but only be subject to be set aside if untrue, and the proceedings may be continued against the surviving defendant.

166. Proceedings upon death of sole defendant or of all the defendants in error.—In case of the death of a sole defendant or of all the defendants in error, the plaintiff in error may proceed, upon giving ten days' notice of the proceedings in error, and of his intention to continue the same, to the representatives of the deceased defendants, or, if no such notice can be be given, then, by leave of the Court or a judge, upon giving such notice to the parties interested as he or they may direct.

167. Marriage not to abate proceedings in error.—The marriage of a woman, plaintiff or defendant in error, shall not abate the proceedings in error, but the same may be continued in like manner as hereinbefore provided with reference to the continuance of an action after marriag

And with respect to the action of ejectment, be it enacted as follows

168. Ejectment to be brought by writ.—Instead of the present proceeding by ejectment, a writ shall be issued, directed to the persons in possession by name, and to all persons entitled to defend the possession of the property claimed, which property shall be described in the writ with reasonable certainty.

169. Form and duration of writ of ejectment.—The writ shall state the names of all the persons in whom the title is alleged to be, and command the persons, to whom it is directed, to appear, within sixteen days after service thereof, in the court from which it is issued, to defend the possession of the property sued for, or such part thereof as they may think fit, and it shall contain a notice that in default of appearance they will be turned out of possession; and the writ shall bear teste of the day on which it is issued, and shall be in force for three months, and shall be in the form contained in the schedule (A) to this Act annexed, marked No. 13, or to the like effect; and the name and abode of the attorney issuing the same, or, if no attorney, the name and residence of the party shall be indorsed thereon, in like manner as herein-before enacted with reference to the indorsements on a writ of summons in a personal action; and the same proceedings may be had to ascertain whether the writ was issued by the authority of the attorney whose name was indorsed thereon, and who and what the claimants are, and their abode, and as to staying the proceedings upon writs issued without authority, as in the case of writs in personal actions.

170. Service of writ of ejectment.—The writ shall be served in the same manner as an ejectment has heretofore been served, or in such manner as the Court or a judge shall order, and in case of vacant possession, by posting a copy thereof upon the door of the dwelling-house or other conspicuous part of the property.

171. Appearance of persons named in the writ.—The persons named as defendants in such writ, or either of them, shall be allowed to appear within the time appointed.

172. Appearance of persons not named.—Any other person not named in such writ shall, by leave of the Court or a judge, be allowed to appear and defend, on filing an affidavit shewing that he is in possession of the land either by himself or his tenant.

173. Appearance and defence by landlord.—Any person appearing to defend as landlord in respect of property whereof he is in possession only by his tenant, shall state in his appearance that he appears as landlord; and such person shall be at liberty to set up any defence which a landlord appearing in an action of ejectment has heretofore been allowed to set up, and no other.

174.—Notice to defend for part only.—Any person appearing to such writ shall be at liberty to limit his defence to a part only of the property mentioned in the writ, describing that part with reasonable certainty in a notice intituled in the court and cause, and signed by the party appearing or his attorney; such notice to be served within four days after appearance upon the attorney whose name is indorsed on the writ, if any, and if none, then to be filed in the Master's office; and an appearance without such notice confining the defence to part, shall be deemed an appearance to defend for the whole.

175. Want of certainty cured by particulars.—Want of "reasonable certainty" in the description of the property, or part of it, in the writ or notice, shall not nullify them, but shall only be ground for an application to a judge for better particulars of the land claimed or defended, which a judge shall have power to give in all cases.

176. Defence by persons not in possession.—The Court or a judge shall have power to strike out or confine appearances and defences set up by persons not in possession by themselves or their tenants.

177. Judgment for default of appearance or defence.—In case no appearance shall be entered into within the time appointed, or if an appearance be entered, but the defence be limited to part only, the plaintiffs shall be at liberty to sign a judgment that the person whose title is asserted in the writ shall recover possession of the land, or of the part thereof to which the defence does not apply; which judgment, if for all, may be in the form contained in the schedule (A) to this Act annexed marked No. 14, or to the like effect, and if for part, may be in the form contained in the schedule (A) to this Act annexed, marked No. 15, or to the like effect.

178. Issue how made up.—In case an appearance shall be entered, an issue may at once be made up, without any pleadings, by the claimants or their attorney, setting forth the writ, and stating the fact of the appearance, with its date, and the notice limiting the defence, if any, of each of the persons appearing, so that it may appear for what defence is made, and directing the sheriff to summon a jury; and such issue, in case defence is made for the whole, may be in the form contained in schedule (A) to this Act annexed, marked No. 16, or to the like effect, and in case defence is made for part, may be in the form contained in the schedule (A) to this Act annexed, marked No. 15, or to the like effect.

179. Special case may be stated.—By consent of the parties, and by leave of a judge, a special case may be stated according to the practice heretofore used.

180. Trial of issue.—The claimants may, if no special case be agreed to, proceed to trial upon the issue, in the same manner as in other actions; and the particulars of the claim and defence, if any, or copies thereof, shall be annexed to the record by the claimants; and the question at the trial shall, except in the cases hereafter mentioned, be, whether the statement in the writ of the title of the claimants is true or false, and, if true, then which of the claimants is entitled, and whether to the whole or part, and if to part, then to which part of the property in question; and the entry of the verdict may be made in the form contained in the Schedule (A) to this Act annexed, marked No. 17, or to the like effect, with such modifications as may be necessary to meet the facts.

181. Verdict when title appears to have expired before trial.—In case the title of the claimant shall appear to have existed as alleged in the writ, and at the time of service thereof, but it shall also appear to have expired before the time of trial, the claimant shall, notwithstanding, be entitled to a verdict according to the fact that he was so entitled at the time of bringing the action and serving the writ, and to a judgment for his cost of suit.

182. Trial may be ordered to take place in any county.—The Court or a judge may, on the application of either party, order that the trial shall take place in any county or place other than that in which the venue is laid; and such order being suggested on the record, the trial may be had accordingly.

183. Non-appearance at trial.—If the defendant appears, and the claimant does not appear at the trial, the claimant shall be non-suited; and if the claimant appears, and the defendant does not appear, the claimant shall be entitled to recover as heretofore, without any proof of his title.

184. Special verdict, and bill of exceptions.—The jury may find a special verdict, or either party may tender a bill of exceptions.

185. Judgment upon finding for claimant.—Upon a finding for the claimant, judgment may be signed, and execution issue for the recovery of possession of the property, or such part thereof as the jury shall find the claimant entitled to, and for costs, within such time, not exceeding the fifth day in Term after the verdict, as the Court or judge before whom the cause is tried shall order; and if no such order be made, then on the fifth day in Term after the verdict, or within fourteen days after such verdict, whichever shall first happen.

186. Judgment upon finding for defendant.—Upon a finding for the defendants, or any of them, judgment may be signed, and execution issue for costs against the claimants named in the writ, within such time, not exceeding the fifth day in Term after the verdict, as the Court or judge before whom the cause tried shall order; and if no such order be made then on the fifth day in term after the verdict, or within fourteen days after such verdict, whichever shall first happen.

187. Execution for recovery of possession and costs may be joint or separate.—Upon any judgment in ejectment for recovery of possession and costs, there may be either one writ or separate writs of execution for the recovery of possession and for the costs, at the election of the claimant.

188. Defence by joint tenants, tenants in common, or coparcener.—In case of such an action being brought by some or one of several persons entitled as joint tenants, tenants in common, or coparceners, any joint tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener in possession, may, at time of appearance, or within four days after, give notice in the same form as in the notice of a limited defence, that he or she defends as such, and admits the right of the claimant to an undivided share of the property (stating what share), but denies any actual ouster of him from the property, and may, within the same time, file an affidavit stating with reasonable certainty that he or she is such joint tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener, and the share of such property to which he or she is entitled, and that he or she has not ousted the claimant; and such notice shall be entered in the issue in the same manner as the notice limiting the defence, and upon the trial of such an issue the additional question of whether an actual ouster has taken place shall be tried.

189. Trial and judgment in ejectment against joint tenants, tenants in common, and coparceners.—Upon the trial of such issue as last aforesaid, if it shall be found that the defendant is joint tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener with the claimant, then the question whether an actual ouster has taken place shall be tried, and unless such actual ouster shall be proved, the defendant shall be entitled to judgment and costs; but if it shall be found either that the defendant is not such joint tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener, or that an actual ouster has taken place, then the claimant shall be entitled to such judgment for the recovery of possession and costs.

190. Action not to abate by death.—The death of a claimant or defendant shall not cause the action to abate, but it may be continued as hereinafter mentioned.

191. Proceeding upon death before trial where right survives.—In case the right of the deceased claimant shall survive to another claimant, a suggestion may be made of the death, which suggestion shall not be traversable, but shall only be subject to be set aside if untrue, and the action may proceed at the suit of the surviving claimant; and if such a suggestion shall be made before trial, then the claimant shall have a verdict and recover such judgment as aforesaid, upon its appearing that he was entitled to bring the action either separately or jointly with the deceased claimant.

192. Proceedings upon death before trial, where right does not survive.—In case of the death before trial of one of several claimants, whose right does not survive to another or others of the claimants, where the legal representative of the deceased claimant shall not become a party to the suit in the manner hereinafter mentioned, a suggestion may be made of the death, which suggestion shall not be traversable, but shall only be subject to be set aside if untrue, and the action may proceed at the suit of the surviving claimant for such share of the property as he is entitled to, and costs.

193. Upon death of one of several claimants having obtained a verdict.—In case of a verdict for two or more claimants, if one of such claimants die before execution executed, the other claimant may, whether the legal right to the property shall survive or not, suggest the death in manner aforesaid, and proceed to judgment and execution for recovery of possession of the entirety of the property and the costs; but nothing herein contained shall affect the right of the legal representative of the deceased claimant, or the liability of the surviving claimant to such legal representative; and the entry and possession of such surviving claimant under such execution shall be considered as an entry and possession on behalf of such legal representative in respect of the share of the property to which he shall be entitled as such representative, and the Court may direct possession to be delivered accordingly.

194. Proceedings in case of death of claimant, where right does not survive.—In case of the death of a sole claimant, or, before trial, of one of several claimants, whose right does not survive to another or others of the claimants, the legal representative of such claimant may, by leave of the Court or a judge, enter a suggestion of the death, and that he such legal representative, and the action shall thereupon proceed; and if such suggestion be made before the trial, the truth of the suggestion shall be tried thereat, together with the title of the deceased claimant, and such judgment shall follow upon the verdict in favour of or against the person making such suggestion, as hereinbefore provided with reference to a judgment for or against such claimant; and in case such suggestion in the case of a sole claimant be made after trial and before execution executed by delivery of possession thereupon, and such suggestion be denied by the defendant within eight days after notice thereof, or such further time as the Court or a judge may allow, then such suggestion shall be tried, and if upon the trial thereof a verdict shall pass for the person making such suggestion, he shall be entitled to such judgment as aforesaid for the recovery of possession, and for the costs of and occasioned by such suggestion; and in case of a verdict for the defendant such defendant shall be entitled to such judgment as aforesaid for costs.

195. Proceedings upon death of one of several joint defendants.—In case of the death, before or after judgment, of one of several defendants in ejectment, who defend jointly, a suggestion may be made of the death, which suggestion shall not be traversable, but only be subject to be set aside if untrue, and the action may proceed against the surviving defendant to judgment and execution.

196. Upon death of all the defendants in ejectment before trial.—In case of the death of a sole defendant, or of all the defendants in ejectment, before trial, a suggestion may be made of the death, which suggestion shall not be traversable, but only be subject to be set aside if untrue, and the claimants shall be entitled to judgment for recovery of possession of the property, unless some other person shall appear and defend within the time to be appointed for that purpose by the order of the Court or a judge, to be made upon the application of the claimants; and it shall be lawful for the Court or a judge, upon such suggestion being made and upon such application as aforesaid, to order that the claimants shall be at liberty to sign judgment within such time as the Court or judge may think fit, unless the person then in possession, by himself or his tenant, or the legal representative of the deceased defendant, shall within such time appear and defend the action; and such order may be served in the same manner as the writ; and in case such person shall appear and defend the same, proceedings may be taken against such new defendant as if he had originally appeared and defended the action; and if no appearance be entered and defence made, then the claimant shall be at liberty to sign judgment pursuant to the order.

197. Upon death of all defendants in ejectment after verdict.—In case of the death of a sole defendant or of all the defendants in ejectment after verdict, the claimants shall nevertheless be entitled to judgment as if no such death had taken place, and to proceed by execution for recovery of possession without suggestion or revivor, and to proceed for the recovery of the costs, in like manner as upon any other judgment for money, against the legal representatives of the deceased defendant or defendants.

198. Upon death before trial of defendant in ejectment, who defends separately for part.—In case of the death before trial of one of several defendants in ejectment, who defends separately for a portion of the property for which the other defendant or defendants do not defend, the same proceedings may be taken as to such portion as in the case of the death of a sole defendant, or the claimants may proceed against the surviving defendants in respect of the portion of the property for which they defend.

199. Upon death of defendant defending separately for property in respect of which others also defend.—In case of the death before trial of one of several defendants in ejectment, who defends separately in respect of property for which surviving defendants also defend, it shall be lawful for the Court or a judge at any time before the trial to allow the person at the time of the death in possession of the property, or the legal representative of the deceased defendant, to appear and defend on such terms as may appear reasonable and just, upon the application of such person or representative; and if no such application be made or leave granted, the claimant, suggesting the death in manner aforesaid, may proceed against the surviving defendant or defendants to judgment and execution.

200. Claimant may discontinue by notice.—The claimant in ejectment shall be at liberty at any time to discontinue the action as to one or more of the defendants, by giving to the defendant or his attorney a notice headed in the court and cause, and signed by the claimant or his attorney, stating that he discontinues such action; and thereupon the defendant, to whom such notice is given, shall be entitled to and may forthwith sign judgment of costs in the form contained in the schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 18, or to the like effect.

201. Discontinuance of action by one of several claimants.—In case one of several claimants shall be desirous to discontinue, he may apply to the Court or a judge to have his name struck out of the proceedings, and an order may be made thereupon upon such terms as to the Court or judge may seem fit, and the action shall thereupon proceed at the suit of the other claimants.

202. Judgment for not proceeding to trial after notice.—If after appearance entered the claimant, without going to trial, allow the time allowed for going to trial by the practice of the Court in ordinary cases after issue joined, to elapse, the defendant in ejectment may give twenty days notice to the claimant to proceed to trial at the sittings or assizes next after the expiration of the notice; and if the claimant afterwards neglects to give notice of trial for such sittings or assizes, or to proceed to trial in pursuance of the said notice given by the defendant, and the time for going to trial shall not be extended by the Court or a judge, the defendant may sign judgment in the form contained in the schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 19, and recover the costs of defence.

203. Defendant may confess the action.—A sole defendant or all the defendants in ejectment shall be at liberty to confess the action as to the whole or part of the property, by giving to such claimant a notice headed in the Court and cause, and signed by the defendant or defendants, such signature to be attested by his or their attorney; and thereupon the claimant shall be entitled to and may forthwith sign judgment and issue execution for the recovery of possession and costs in the form contained in the schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 20, or to the like effect.

204. Confession by one of several defendants defending separately for part.—In case one of several defendants in ejectment, who defends separately for a portion of the property for which the other defendant or defendants do not defend, shall be desirous of confessing the claimant's title to such portion, he may give a like notice to the claimant; and thereupon the claimant shall be entitled to and may forthwith sign judgment and issue execution for the recovery of possession of such portion of the property, and for the costs occasioned by the defence relating to the same, and the action may proceed as to the residue.

205. Confession by one of several defendants who defend for same property.—In case one of several defendants in ejectment, who defends separately in respect of property for which other defendants also defend, shall be desirous of confessing the claimant's title, he may give a like notice thereof; and thereupon the claimant shall be entitled to and may sign judgment against such defendant for the costs occasioned by his defence, and may proceed in the action against the other defendants to judgment and execution.

206. Formal entry of judgment on the roll unnecessary for purposes of execution.—It shall not be necessary before issuing execution upon any judgment under the authority of this Act, to enter the proceedings upon any roll, but an incipitur thereof may be made upon paper, shortly describing the nature of the judgment according to the practice heretofore used, and judgment may thereupon be signed, and costs taxed, and execution issued, according to the practice heretofore used: provided, nevertheless, that the proceedings may be entered upon the roll whenever the same may become necessary for the purpose of evidence, or of bringing error, or the like.

207. Effect of judgment.—The effect of a judgment in an action of ejectment under this Act shall be the same as that of a judgment in the action of ejectment heretofore used.

208. Error and bail in error in ejectment.—Error may be brought in like manner as in other actions upon any judgment in ejectment, after a special verdict found by the jury, or a bill of exceptions, or by consent after a special case stated, but, except in the case of such consent as aforesaid, execution shall not be thereby stayed, unless the plaintiff in error shall, within four clear days after lodging the memorandum alleging error, or after the signing of the judgment, whichever shall last happen, or before execution executed, be bound unto the claimant, who shall have recovered judgment in such action of ejectment, in double the yearly value of the property, and double the costs recovered by the judgment, with condition, that if the judgment shall be affirmed by the Court of Error, or the proceedings in error be discontinued by the plaintiff therein, then the plaintiff in error shall pay such costs, damages, and sum or sums of money as shall be awarded upon or after such judgment affirmed or discontinuance; and it shall be lawful for the Court wherein execution ought to be granted upon such affirmation or discontinuance, upon the application of the claimant, to issue a writ to inquire as well of the mesne profits as of the damage by any waste committed after the first judgment in ejectment, which writ may be tested on the day on which it shall issue, and be returnable immediately after the execution thereof; and upon the return thereof judgment shall be given, and execution awarded for such mesne profits and damages, and also for costs of suit.

209. Tenants to give notice of ejectment to landlord.—Every tenant to whom any writ in ejectment shall be delivered, or to whose knowledge it shall come, shall forthwith give notice thereof to his landlord, or his bailiff or receiver, under penalty of forfeiting the value of three years improved or rack rent of the premises, demised or holden in the possession of such tenant, to the person of whom he holds, to be recovered by action in any court of common law having jurisdiction for the amount.

210. Proceedings in ejectment by landlord for nonpayment of rent.—In all cases between landlord and tenant, as often as it shall happen that one half year's rent shall be in arrear, and the landlord or lessor, to whom the same is due, hath right by law to re-enter for the non-payment thereof, such landlord or lessor shall and may, without any formal demand or re-entry, serve a writ in ejectment for the recovery of the demised premises, or in case the same cannot be legally served, or no tenant be in actual possession of the premises, then such landlord or lessor may affix a copy thereof upon the door of any demised messuage, or in case such action in ejectment shall not be for the recovery of any messuage, then upon some notorious place of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments comprised in such writ in ejectment, and such affixing shall be deemed legal service thereof, which service or affixing such writ in ejectment shall stand in the place and stead of a demand and re-entry; and in case of judgment against the defendant for nonappearance, if it shall be made appear to the Court where the said action is depending, by affidavit, or be proved upon the trial in case the defendant appears, that half a year's rent was due before the said writ was served, and that no sufficient distress was to be found on the demised premises, countervailing the arrears then due, and that the lessor had power to re-enter, then and in every such case the lessor shall recover judgment and execution, in the same manner as if the rent in arrear had been legally demanded, and a re-entry made; and in case the lessee or his assignee, or other person claiming or deriving under the said lease, shall permit and suffer judgment to be had and recovered on such trial in ejectment, and execution to be executed thereon, without paying the rent and arrears, together with full costs, and without proceeding for relief in equity within six months after such execution executed, then and in such case the said lessee, his assignee, and all other persons claiming and deriving under the said lease, shall be barred and foreclosed from all relief or remedy in law or equity, other than by bringing error for reversal of such judgment, in case the same shall be erroneous, and the said landlord or lessor shall from thenceforth hold the said demised premises discharged from such lease; and if on such ejectment a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the claimant shall be nonsuited therein, then in every such case such defendant shall have and recover his costs; provided that nothing herein contained shall extend to bar the right of any mortgagee of such lease, or any part thereof, who shall not be in possession, so as such mortgagee shall and do, within six months after such judgment obtained and execution executed, pay all rent in arrear, and all costs and damages sustained by such lessor or person entitled to the remainder or reversion as aforesaid, and perform all the covenants and agreements which, on the part and behalf of the first lessee, are and ought to be performed.

211. Lessee proceeding in equity not to have injunction or relief without payment of rent and costs.—In case the said lessee, his assignee, or other person claiming any right, title, or interest, in law or equity, of, in, or to the said lease, shall, within the time aforesaid, proceed for relief in any Court of Equity, such person shall not have or continue any injunction against the proceedings at law on such ejectment, unless he does or shall, within forty days next after a full and perfect answer shall be made by the claimant in such ejectment, bring into Court, and lodge with the proper officer such sum and sums of money as the lessor or landlord shall in his answer swear to be due and in arrear over and above all just allowances, and also the costs taxed in the said suit, there to remain till the hearing of the cause, or to be paid out to the lessor or landlord on good security, subject to the decree of the Court; and in case such proceedings for relief in equity shall be taken within the time aforesaid, and after execution is executed, the lessor or landlord shall be accountable only for so much and no more as he shall really and bonâ fide, without fraud, deceit, or wilful neglect, make of the demised premises from the time of his entering into the actual possession thereof; and if what shall be so made by the lessor or landlord happen to be less than the rent reserved on the said lease, then the said lessee or his assignee, before he shall be restored to his possession, shall pay such lessor or landlord what the money so by him made fell short of the reserved rent for the time such lessor or landlord held the said lands.

212. Tenant paying all rent with costs, proceedings to cease.—If the tenant or his assignee do or shall, at any time before the trial in such ejectment, pay or tender to the lessor or landlord, his executors or administrators, or his or their attorney in that cause, or pay into the Court where the same cause is depending, all the rent and arrears, together with the costs, then and in such case all further proceedings on the said ejectment shall cease and be discontinued: and if such lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall, upon such proceedings as aforesaid, be relieved in equity, he and they shall have, hold, and enjoy the demised lands, according to the lease thereof made, without any new lease.

213. Ejectment by landlord against tenant holding over after expiration of term or determination of tenancy by notice to quit.—Rule or summons for the tenant to give bail. On rule or summons absolute, if tenant shall not conform, judgment to be for the landlord.—Where the term or interest of any tenant now or hereafter holding under a lease or agreement in writing any lands, tenements, or hereditaments for any term or number of years certain, or from year to year, shall have expired or been determined either by the landlord or tenant by regular notice to quit, and such tenant, or any one holding or claiming by or under him, shall refuse to deliver up possession accordingly, after lawful demand in writing made and signed by the landlord or his agent, and served personally upon or left at the dwelling house or usual place of abode of such tenant or person, and the landlord shall thereupon proceed by action of ejectment for the recovery of possession, it shall be lawful for him, at the foot of the writ in ejectment, to address a notice to such tenant or person requiring him to find such bail, if ordered by the court or a judge, and for such purposes as are hereinafter next specified; and upon the appearance of the party on an affidavit of service of the writ and notice, it shall be lawful for the landlord producing the lease or agreement, or some counterpart or duplicate thereof, and proving the execution of the same by affidavit, and upon affidavit that the premises have been actually enjoyed under such lease or agreement, and that the interest of the tenant has expired, or been determined by regular notice to quit, as the case may be, and that possession has been lawfully demanded in manner aforesaid, to move the Court or apply by summons to a judge at chambers for a rule or summons for such tenant or person to shew cause, within a time to be fixed by the Court or judge on a consideration of the situation of the premises, why such tenant or person should not enter into a recognisance by himself and two sufficient sureties in a reasonable sum conditioned to pay the costs and damages which shall be recovered by the claimants in the action; and it shall be lawful for the Court or judge upon cause shewn, or upon affidavit of the service of the rule or summons in case no cause shall be shewn, to make the same absolute in the whole or in part, and to order such tenant or person, within a time to be fixed, upon a consideration of all the circumstances, to find such bail, with such conditions and in such manner as shall be specified in the said rule or summons, or such part of the same so made absolute; and in case the party shall neglect or refuse so to do, and shall lay no ground to induce the Court or judge to enlarge the time for obeying the same, then the lessor or landlord filing an affidavit that such rule or order has been made and served and not complied with, shall be at liberty to sign judgment for recovery of possession and costs of suit in the form contained in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 21, or to the like effect.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—It appears from a Parliamentary paper just issued, that the House of Commons sat during the late session on eighty-two different days. The total number of hours occupied in the sittings was 617, of which sixty-one hours were after midnight. The number of entries in votes amount to 6,301.

MEETING OF THE NEW PARLIAMENT.—It is expected that the new Parliament will assemble about the third week in October.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

A POOR-RATE case, in which the Judges differed in opinion in some points, consequently giving occasion for a very elaborate judgment, was reported last week. Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Longwood, 19 Law T. Rep. 270, was a question as to the manner of rating certain waterworks conducted by commissioners under local Acts. The facts are peculiar, and too long for repetition here, and we must refer the reader for them to the case stated to the Court, which is given verbatim, and to the judgment, where they are carefully reviewed.

The LAW TIMES edition of the Militia Acts, edited by Mr. T. W. SAUNDERS, will be ready on Tuesday next. The Act of last Session refers throughout to the previous Acts, which are in fact incorporated in it, the whole forming the Militia Law. Hence this volume contains, not only the new Act, but all those that yet remain in force, so that it presents the whole of the law as it is, with explanatory notes, the forms, and an elaborate index.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

THE Court of Q. B. has confirmed the ruling of Lord CAMPBELL at Nisi Prius, in the case of Stewart v. The Anglo-Californian Gold Mining Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 272. A scripholder did not execute the deed of settlement within three months from its date, he had no notice of the clause of forfeiture therein, and the directors, in pursuance of the clause, forfeited his shares. The clause did not expressly require notice to be given. They were held to have been rightly forfeited. "This is an action," said the Court, "for not permitting the plaintiff to execute the deed, and the plaintiff must be supposed to have availed himself of his opportunities of becoming acquainted with its contents, and to have assented to it as it stands. If the deed contains anything contrary to the principles of law, or in other respects objectionable, the plaintiff might possibly recover back the sums he has paid for the scrip from the individuals who compose the company; but in an action against the company for not permitting him to execute the deed, he cannot object to it as unreasonable."

WINDING UP.

Two interesting points in the law of winding up decided by the Court of Q. B. in Mackenzie v. The Sligo, &c. Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 270: first, whether an order for a company to be wound up was a bar to an action previously commenced. The Court held that it was not. "There is no provision in the statute taking away the Common Law remedy for a debt, on dissolution under the statute." On the contrary, by sec. 58 it is enacted, "that nothing in the Act shall alter or affect the rights and remedies of creditors." The second point was, whether sec. 73, which prohibits any action, after an order for winding up, until proof before the Master, created a bar to the action. But the Court held that it was not a bar, but only a suspension until proof made of the debt, after which the creditor is at liberty to proceed with his action. "All that the 73rd section provides is a power whereby there may be a suspension of the action until after proof by application for an order to stay proceedings. Full effect is given to all the other parts of the section by holding that the action may be stayed by the order until after proof, but it is not barred altogether."

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

IT seems that as a general rule the Court has no authority to direct a sale of an infant's real estate, or to convert it, merely because it was assumed that it would be for the infant's benefit. But the Court held, in Browne v. Paull, 19 Law T. Rep. 269, that it might do so under the particular circumstances of a devise in trust for certain purposes, and with the consent of the annuitant (his wife) to sell and dispose, and after her decease on their own authority to sell and dispose of all or any part of the estate, and to invest the proceeds on the trust of the will, and the devisees in trust had renounced probate and disclaimed.

In Wisdom v. The Mayor, &c. of Dublin, 19 Law T. Rep. 276, there was a lease for lives renewable during the period of seventy years, each life to be added within twelve months after the fall of the previous life. One of the lives was not heard of for eighteen years. Just before the expiration of the twenty years, the lessee prayed to be allowed to renew, in lieu of the life that had thus been missing for eighteen years, and he was allowed to do so; and he was held not bound to make application for renewal within the twelve months after the presumption of death had arisen.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

THE Court of Q. B. has decided, in Reg. v. The Insolvent Debtors Court, 19 Law T. Rep. 271, that the Insolvent Debtors Court has not jurisdiction to rehear the case of an insolvent, originally heard before a County Court Judge. "There is no provision," said Lord CAMPBELL, "expressly giving power to the Commissioners over cases heard by a Judge of a County Court, and the provision in the 96th section of the former Act does not, in terms or on principle, apply to these cases; in terms it does not apply to County Courts, and on principle it was reasonable to vest the power of deciding on a rehearing in a tribunal in which all, or at least one, of the Judges was present who had presided over the former hearing. It would be inconvenient to require a tribunal to decide whether a Judge had been deceived by false evidence or otherwise, without any power of communicating with the Judge on a matter that depended on what passed in his own mind." As to the power of the County Courts to rehear, Lord CAMPBELL said, "We forbear therefore, to say more with respect to the powers of County Court Judges, than that the words of the section conferring jurisdiction on them to hear originally appear wide enough to comprehend a power of rehearing, and we think that the words describing their powers do not bring them within the limits of the power formerly exercised by the Commissioners themselves."

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—In Hills v. Nash, 19 Law T. Rep. 267, the MASTER of the ROLLS held that the Master is bound either to accept or reject evidence, leaving the parties to except to his report; and that it was not competent to the parties, on a mere expression of doubt by the Master, to come to the Court to decide the point, even by consent, as no arrangement by consent can give jurisdiction.

In Bangley's Trust, 19 Law T. Rep. 269, where a trust fund had been paid into court under the Trustee Act, the costs of the application by the tenant for life for payment of dividends were not allowed to be paid out of the corpus of the fund.

SALARIES TO OFFICERS AND CLERKS IN THE COMMON LAW COURTS.—By virtue of the new Act (15 and 16 Vict. c. 73), the following officers and clerk of the Common Law Courts are to be paid by salaries instead of fees, from the 24th of October next.—The Associates in the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, senior clerk in the offices of the Associates in the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer; junior clerks in those offices; clerk of assize for the performance of the duties of Associate in the Northern Circuit; clerk of assize for the performance of the duties of Associate of the Western Circuit, Oxford Circuit, Midland Circuit, Home Circuit, Norfolk Circuit, North Wales Circuit, and South Wales Circuit. The following judges' clerks are likewise to be paid by salaries:—Principal clerks of the Lord Chief Justices of the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, and Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer; chamber clerks to the same; third clerks to the same; principal clerks to the other judges and barons, and chamber clerks to the same. The salaries to the judges' clerks are to be fixed by the Treasury, with the sanction of the three chiefs of the Common Law Courts.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

A PERUSAL of the Lord ST. LEONARDS's very able judgment in the case of Mangles v. Dixon, 19 Law T. Rep. 261, which we noticed briefly last week, will amply justify the expressions we then used as to its great importance to the mercantile world, and its great value as a legal treatise, for such it is, and as such it ought to be read with most careful attention by all who desire to possess a correct knowledge of mercantile law, and especially do we recommend it to all law students. The LORD CHANCELLOR himself designated it as a case of "vast importance in a mercantile point of view."

Another case of scarcely inferior interest was reported last week from the Lord Chancellor's Court. As a question of legal interest it was even more important, for it determined a new point in the law of injunction, and it has been rightly looked upon by the Profession as the greatest of the many great judgments that have already proceeded from Lord ST. LEONARDS, and of which a complete collection will be found in the LAW TIMES Reports. The case was the famous one of Lumley v. Wagner, 19 Law T. Rep. 264. The facts and the judgment of V. C. PARKER upon them have been already reported. The single question brought before the LORD CHANCELLOR was the point of law, whether a contract containing a positive agreement to do something, accompanied by a negative agreement not to do any other thing, could be so far enforced by the Court that it would restrain the breach of the negative agreement, although it might not be able to compel specific performance of the positive agreement. This was decided in the affirmative in a judgment remarkable for its learning and for the closeness and clearness of the argument by which it was sustained.

A patent case of some interest is reported from the Court of Error (Heath v. Unwin, 19 Law T. Rep. 272). But it contains no point of law capable of being stated apart from its facts.

It will be seen that the case of Escritt v. Mason, as to the proper stamp on a promissory note payable on demand, has been explained by the publication of a copy of the note itself. It was payable "to bearer," and not "on demand," and therefore clearly liable to the 5s. stamp.

In Bankruptcy there are two reports. In Re Wood, 19 Law T. Rep. 275, the Court allowed expenses incurred by the assignees in offering a reward for the bankrupt's capture, and sending a officer abroad in pursuit of him; and in the same case it refused a certificate altogether, the bankrupt having been guilty of fraud, although the creditors waived objection to it.

A paragraph, which appears below, extracted from a Liverpool paper, will probably direct the attention of our readers to a statute of whose existence many of them are probably not aware, although it is one of great practical utility, especially at this time, when emigration is so much the fashion, and embarrassed debtors are likely to be tempted by the double object of escaping from creditors at home, and digging gold abroad. The Absconding Debtors' Arrest Act enables a creditor to stop a flying debtor by a very summary process in the County Court, or before a Commissioner of Bankruptcy. This most useful statute, with all the forms of affidavits, &c. required to put it in operation, and very ample instructions to solicitors, has been published by Mr. KERR (who is preparing the LAW TIMES edition of the Common Law Procedure Act), and as practitioners must necessarily be required to advise and act upon this statute upon the instant, without time allowed for obtaining assistance from counsel, or even from friends or books, they will probably be pleased to learn that there is an inexpensive adviser, who will give them all the information they require when they are suddenly called upon by a client to stop the flight of an emigrant debtor. We can answer for the completeness, for practical use, of Mr. Kerr's Absconding Debtors' Arrest Act, and for the ability of the author.

IMPORTANT DECISION UNDER THE RECENT EMIGRATION ACT.—At the Liverpool Police Court, on Saturday, Richard Boothroyd, an emigrant, claimed a payment of 10*l*. and the return of passage money, from Mr. J. S. de Wolf, as charterer of the emigrant ship Ottillia, bound for Port Phillip, which vessel had taken her departure on Sunday, the 18th of July, instead of Monday, the 19th, causing him and other passengers to be left behind. Mr. Blair, barrister, attended for the plaintiff, and Mr. Harvey, solicitor, for the defendant. Mr. Blair stated that the passengers had been left on shore without money, their property, to the amount, he understood, of about 1,000*l*. being on board. Mr. Harvey on behalf of the owners of the vessel, expressed great regret that any of the passengers should have been left behind, and gave a promise that all the property should be taken care of, and be delivered to the various owners as soon as they arrived out. He proposed that they should be taken out by another vessel on Monday, for which they would pay the usual charge, subject to an abatement of 5*l*. each, under the circumstances. After the conclusion of the evidence on both sides, Mr. Blair submitted that the case had been entirely proved. Mr. Mansfield, in delivering judgment, said there was no doubt it was intended that the ship should sail on the Monday morning, but that, for some reason or another, the time had been altered. There appeared not to have been sufficient notice given to the passengers of that alteration. The decision of the bench was, that the passage-money should be returned, and that the defendant should pay 5*l*. as compensation.—Liverpool Albion.

APPREHENSION OF ABSCONDING DEBTORS.—The inducements held out for emigration to Australia are now being taken advantage of to a large extent by persons who wish to escape from their creditors. During the past week no fewer than ten of these absconding debtors have been arrested by the messenger of the Liverpool Bankruptcy Court, independently of those, of whom no return is kept here, who may have been followed and apprehended by order of the commissioners of bankruptcy or judges of County Courts in other districts of the country. On Tuesday two debtors from London, the one a surgeon and the other an assistant-surgeon, on board one of the many vessels now leaving this port for the gold diggings, in Australia, were arrested by one of the messengers of the Bankruptcy Court of Liverpool. The surgeon, who was possessed of a goodly sum of ready cash, at once paid the demand made by his tailor upon him, 23*l*. with expenses; but the unfortunate assistant being minus of the sum due to the same creditor, 20*l*. 2s. 6d. was transferred to Lancaster, and safely lodged there. The speedy operation of the Act may be made known by the mere mention of the circumstance that creditors from a distance even, on application (the affidavit as to the correctness of the debt being satisfactory) to the Bankruptcy Commissioner here, can obtain an order in five minutes for the arrest of any debtor, whether on shore or on board any vessel leaving the port. In many instances it happens that the husband is taken to Lancaster, and his wife and family left to proceed on their voyage; a distressing separation, no doubt, but a salutary provision. There is one defect in the Act which, it is understood, Government intends early in the next session of Parliament to remedy; that is, that the property as well as the person of the absconder, as in the case of bankruptcy, shall be seized, since, in many instances, rather than pay their debts, several parties with money have preferred being taken to Lancaster, in order to get rid of their liabilities by petitioning the Insolvency Court. Some amusing scenes are often witnessed by the messengers in effecting these disagreeable captures. Now and then the debtors themselves are very valiant and obstreperous; often the passengers interfere to prevent their arrest, and sometimes the captain of the vessel refuses to pay obeisance to the law; but all these difficulties are surmounted, and all opposition quieted, by the exhibition of a little bauble, "the silver oar," which we believe from time immemorial it has been the privilege of the water-bailiff to carry as an emblem of his authority on the Mersey, and on the exhibition of which no pilot will proceed to sea until all "legal" powers are obeyed. Thus, without authority to arrest, this little badge is made the means, and is, we learn, the only available means, of carrying out efficiently the provisions of this salutary statute. In addition to other law reforms already carried out by the present Administration, it may be added that their attention has been directed to the defective provisions of the Absconding Debtors Act. Through Mr. Walpole, a return has been ordered from this district of the number of arrests since the filing of the Act on the 25th of August, 1851, to the 28th of May, 1852; and from this return (on warrants obtained in Liverpool alone) we learn that during the period above-mentioned forty-five absconding debtors have been apprehended, whose liabilities varied from 20*l*. (unless the debt is to this extent no warrant can be issued) up to above 2,000*l*. Since this return was made up, a period of about two months, nearly as many captures have been made, owing to the Australian emigration mania; and in most instances the creditors have either gained all their demands, or such a moiety of them as not only satisfied the expenses they had incurred, but left them very trifling losers by their would-be evaders.—Liverpool Albion.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Assizes.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

DORCHESTER, July 22.—The commission for this county was opened yesterday. There were only two causes entered for trial, the one an undefended ejectment, and the other a question of right of way. The calendar contains the names of six prisoners, and two or three cases have been since added to the list.

COVENTRY, July 23. — Mr. Baron Alderson arrived here this afternoon. There are only 11 prisoners for trial, 2 charged with manslaughter, 1 with perjury, 2 with burglary, 1 with assault with intent, and the rest with minor offences.

EXETER, July 26.—The commission was opened on Saturday. The number of prisoners is thirty, and the cause-list fifteen, but there are six special juries, in one of which Sir Alexander Cockburn will come down specially. He was retained when Attorney-General. Mr. Crowder was also retained, but Sir A. Cockburn having ceased to be Attorney-General, falls down into the rank of Q.C. and, consequently, is junior to Mr. Crowder, who would now, therefore, lead the cause; but, it being evidently the intention of the parties that Sir Alexander should lead, Mr. Crowder, with that highmindedness which might be expected from him, has declined to appear, and the other side will, of course, be deprived of his services.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

STAFFORD, July 22.—The commission was opened here yesterday by Mr. Justice Williams. There is an entry of fourteen causes, three of which are special juries. Mr. Justice Cresswell sat at Nisi Prius, and Mr. Justice Williams in the Crown Court, where there are sixty-nine prisoners for trial.

HOME CIRCUIT.

MAIDSTONE, July 26.—The commission was opened on Saturday by Mr. Justice Maule. Lord Chief Justice Jervis presides on the Civil Side, and Mr. Justice Maule in the Crown Court. The gaol calendar contains the names of forty prisoners; and the offences comprise murder, attempt to murder, rape, highway robbery, and other serious charges. On the Civil Side seventeen causes are entered, three of which are special jury cases.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.

WARWICK, July 26.—The cause list contains an entry of eighteen causes, including that of De Moroda v. Dawson and Others—the Baroness Von Beck's case—which is marked as a special jury. The calendar contains the names of forty-two prisoners, of whom twenty-two are sent from Birmingham. There are three cases of manslaughter; one of shooting with intent to murder; six, cutting and wounding; four, burglary; five, robbery with violence; two, uttering counterfeit coin; one, stealing letter containing money; four, forgery; two, bigamy; one, conspiracy to defraud; two, abominable offences; two, sheep stealing; and the rest minor offences.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

DURHAM, July 26.—The judges on Saturday opened the commission. The calendar is light, both as respects the number of prisoners and the description of the offences. There is one charge of murder of an infant, four charges of rape, three of highway robbery, three of perjury, and the rest are ordinary larcenies. The cause list contains an entry of twelve, none of which are causes of moment.

NORTH WALES CIRCUIT.

The commission of assize for Merionethshire was opened at Dolgelley, on the 21st instant, before Mr. Justice Talfourd. The grand jury ignored a bill against Gwen Roberts for concealment of birth. The trial of a simple case of larceny closed the proceedings.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

NORWICH, July 27.—The commissions for the county of Norfolk and the city of Norwich having been opened yesterday at two o'clock, the learned judges afterwards attended Divine service in the cathedral. This morning Mr. Baron Parke disposed of the few prisoners awaiting their trial in the city, and then proceeded to charge the grand jury for the county of Norfolk. The calendar contains the names of fifty prisoners, charged 5 with cases of arson, 1 of bigamy, 3 of manslaughter, 2 of rape, 3 of felony, 1 of horsestealing, 1 of forgery, 1 of attempting to murder, and 20 of larceny. The cause list for the county contains two special and five common jury causes, and that for the city contains two common jury causes.

NEW ACT ON PHARMACY.—Among the public Acts passed in the late session was one for regulating the qualifications of pharmaceutical chemists. It is declared to be expedient for the safety of the public that persons exercising the business or calling of pharmaceutical chemists in Great Britain should possess a competent practical knowledge of pharmaceutical and general chemistry, and other branches of useful knowledge. Further, it is declared that it is expedient to prevent ignorant and incompetent persons from assuming the title of or pretending to be pharmaceutical chemists, and to that end it is desirable that all persons, before assuming such title, should be examined as to their skill, and that a register should be kept by some legally authorised officer of all such persons. The charter of the pharmaceutical chemists is confirmed by this Act. Bylaws are to be framed, and to be approved by the Secretary of State. A registrar is to be appointed, and all members, associates, &c. of the society at the passing of the Act are entitled to be registered. The examiners are to grant certificates of competency. All persons registered as pharmaceutical chemists are eligible to be elected members, as also assistants and apprentices. No person is to assume the title of pharmaceutical chemist unless registered, under penalties to be recovered in England and Scotland. The Act took effect from the 30th ult. when it received the Royal assent.

LONDON REVERSIONARY INTEREST SOCIETY.—On Thursday the twelfth annual meeting of this company took place at the offices in New Bank-buildings, City. Alderman Sir Peter Laurie took the chair. The secretary read the report, which shewed a steady improvement in the business of the past year. A dividend of 5 per cent. per annum was proposed, and agreed to unanimously. After the usual vote of thanks to the chairman and directors, the meeting adjourned.

FEES UNDER THE NEW PATENT ACT.—The following list of fees under the Patent Law Amendment Act (which will come into force on the 1st of October next) appears in the schedule annexed to the statute:—On leaving petition for grant of letters patent, 5*l.*; on notice of intention to proceed with the application, 5*l.*; on sealing of letters patent, 5*l.*; on filing specification, 5*l.*; at or before the expiration of the third year, 40*l.*; at or before the expiration of the seventh year, 80*l.*, on leaving notice of objections, 2*l.*; every search and inspection, 1s.; entry of assignment or license, 5s.; certificate of assignment or license, 5s.; filing application for disclaimer, 3*l.*; and caveat against disclaimer, 2*l.* The stamp duties to be paid are as follow:—On warrant of law-officer for letters-patent, 5*l.*; on certificate of payment of the fees payable at or before the expiration of the third year, 10*l.*; and on certificate of the fee payable at or before the expiration of the seventh year, 20*l.*

THE RECENT FRACAS.—The Gateshead Observer adds to its account of this extraordinary affair the following statement:—"Mr. Seymour has of course no other mode left him of obtaining satisfaction than to resort to a legal tribunal; and we are informed that the honourable and learned member has accordingly placed the matter in the hands of a leading firm of solicitors in York."

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE CITY OF LONDON.—Among the local Acts of Parliament, which is numbered 168 in the late session, was one for effecting improvements in the city of London. The object of the Act is to widen and improve the north end of Dowgate-hill, Threadneedle-street, opposite Old Broad-street, the south-east corner of Mark-lane, and part of the north side of Great Tower-street. The corporation of London is to effect the improvements. There are several clauses in the Act to carry out the same, and that money may be raised on bond at interest. The plans of improvements are to be deposited in the Town Clerk's Office, to remain there, and to be open to inspection on the payment of 1s.

The Benchers of Lincoln's-inn have appointed William L. Birkbeck, esq. late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, to the Readership in Equity instituted under the new arrangement for legal education.

NEW ORDERS IN CHANCERY.—It is expected that the Lord Chancellor, with the assistance of the other Chancery judges, will shortly frame a number of general rules and orders for carrying into force the Chancery Reform Acts passed in the late session of Parliament.

Leasehold private residence, with stabling, 41, Upper Bedford-place, Bloomsbury—privately, 1,100*l.*

VALUE OF LAND IN WINCHESTER.—Some idea may be formed of the rapid progress and prosperity of Winchester from the fact that the enfranchisement price of a piece of land in the suburbs of the city, adapted for building private houses on, has just been fixed by the owners of the fee simple at seven hundred pounds per acre. The tenant holding, too, a lease of this property for twenty-one years, a large portion of which term is unexpired. Land for agricultural purposes contiguous to the city is equally high, as much as 7*l.* per acre frr meadow, and 4*l.* for arable, land being at this time paid. -Hampshire Advertiser.

MORTGAGES.

Some correspondence on this subject is before us, part approving, part disapproving, the suggestion we have made.

We have weighed attentively the arguments of the dissentients, but they appear to us to have little worth. One calls the plan "dangerous," and another denounces it as "destructive," but neither states in what respect it is calculated to be either the one or the other.

These objections are directed to the principle of the proposition. But there are others that question its practicability. This is a more disputable point. We have frankly admitted that it is encompassed with many difficulties. But difficulty alone is no sufficient cause for the abandonment of any desirable object. Difficulty can always be overcome by patience and perseverance. Difficulty stimulates invention and increases exertion. Nothing that is worth having can be procured without difficulty.

But is it practicable? Wherefore should it not be so? There is no inherent essential impracticability in the nature of land that should make it a less marketable security than others; but, on the contrary, inasmuch as it is in itself a better security, it ought to be more marketable. The reverse, however, is the fact. A mortgage bears a higher interest than money in the Funds, or than bills and notes. Why? Only because it is less readily transferred. If a charge upon a man's land could be passed about as easily as a charge upon his personal estate, it would command a higher price, or a lower rate of interest, than personalty, because it is more secure.

When a banker issues his notes, people take them readily as cash, because they have confidence that he is able to perform his promise and pay in cash when demanded. A banker puts his money into some securities easily convertible into cash, and then issues his notes, which, in fact, represent his securities. But if he puts his money out upon mortgage, we see no reason why he should not issue similar representatives of the money so secured, or why, instead of a promise to pay out of his personalty a certain sum, he should not issue a promise to pay out of his money invested in a mortgage of realty, making that promise a charge upon the land.

The design is not a new nor an untried one. In some parts of Southern Germany it has been adopted with great success. Landowners are there allowed to charge their lands to a certain amount for the purpose of improvements; and this charge is represented by certificates, which go into the market like bills or other securities, and command the highest market value. The new Copyhold Enfranchisement Act has adopted this very plan for the rent-charges for which the lord's interest is to be commuted. The Commissioners are to issue certificates of charge for the amount of such commutations, and which will be marketable commodities and excellent investments.

Our purpose in this is not to supersede mortgages, but to facilitate them. We do not propose to issue certificates of charge in lieu of mortgages, but in addition to them; nor to the mortgagor, but to the mortgagee. Many persons would gladly lend money upon mortgage at a very low rate of interest, if they could readily convert their mortgage into cash. This they would be enabled to do by such certificates as we have suggested. They could take just so many of them as they wanted to dispose of to any banker or broker, and get them discounted at any moment, instead of being obliged to wait, as now, until they can call in their money in due course of law. Nor do we contemplate anything in the nature of compulsion. We propose that it should be purely a voluntary proceeding, for the use of such persons as may desire to avail themselves of such conveniences and advantages as it may be found in practice to afford. Precautions will of course be required against fraud and forgery: but to these all money transactions are exposed, and no greater facilities will be presented by this design, nor will protection against them be more difficult to devise than in the cases of other securities that now go into the market, and are dealt with freely every day, to fifty times the amount in value of the mortgage certificates which the suggestion we have thrown out would be likely to send into the Stock Exchange.

THE ASSIZES.

The Circuits, now almost concluded, have been marked by the same proofs of the continued decline of legal business which we have had occasion to note ever since the establishment of the County Courts. When first we ventured to hint that this would be the probable result of the local tribunals, the prophecy was met with incredulity, and the Bar were confident that the public would never prefer an undignified and *un*learned County Court to the formality of a Judge from Westminster Hall, attended by a Sheriff in a court dress, guarded by a party of men with pikes, and assisted by a jury and a formidable array of wigs. But we, who have a practical acquaintance with the opinions and feelings of suitors, knew well that there was something they preferred even to the dignity, formality, and profound learning of an Assize Court, and that was a more speedy and less costly method of trying their disputes. They like sound law very much, but they like cheap law a great deal more, and they think that even bad law is better for them than no law at all, or that which is equivalent to it, law whose cost places it beyond their reach, or whose formalities hedge it about with such obstacles that they cannot approach it. The event has proved the correctness of our anticipations. Suitors have deserted the Superior Courts for the more speedy and less costly justice to be procured in the County Courts. It is seen in the steady diminution of the cause lists at the Assizes, and the spectacle of more Barristers than briefs at every counsel-table.

Some think that the reform just effected in procedure will restore the lost business to the Assize Courts. We cannot share that expectation, nor will any Attorney be found to echo the opinion. Every Attorney who has a practice knows that the inducement to suitors to go into the County Court is mainly the convenience of very speedy trial, and the avoidance of the cost of conveying his witnesses from a distance to the assize town, and keeping them there for several days. He would prefer a Judge of the Superior Court, and the assistance of experienced Counsel, but he is not inclined to pay so dearly for them; so he takes his cause into the County Court, and, instead of waiting six months before it can be tried, he obtains a hearing in one month, and, instead of keeping his witnesses at expenses for three or four days, he is sure that they will be dismissed in one day.

But if the business continues to decline, or even remains at the present point of depression, what is to be done? Fifteen Judges will no longer be required for its despatch, nor will a Bar incur the loss of attending Courts that do not yield them fees enough to pay even their travelling expenses. There is but one remedy, and it is that which we have urged over and over again, and of which we shall not cease to remind those in authority until it is accomplished. There must be more frequent assizes, so that a trial may be had almost as speedily in the Superior Courts as in the County Courts. There must be four circuits in the year, one Judge only travelling each. The number of the circuits must be increased to twelve. The Quarter Sessions must be abolished; the lesser criminal business sent to the County Courts, the greater crimes reserved for trial by the Judge of Assize, and by him should be heard all appeals from the County Courts and from Magistrates' Courts. This would despatch the whole legal business of the country with rapidity and efficiency, and go far to restore to the Superior Courts the business that has been attracted away from them by the more speedy trial now afforded by the County Courts.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

The House of Commons will not, after all, be so flooded with Lawyers as, from the array of legal candidates, had been anticipated with some alarm by the Lawyer-hating public. The total number is seventy-five, a very slight addition to that in the last Parliament. The list is as follows. According to the Legal Observer, those marked with an asterisk are or have been Attorneys.

Adair, Hugh Edward, Ipswich.
Aglionby, Henry Aglionby, Cockermouth.
Armstrong, Rt. Baynes, Q.C. Lancaster.
Atherton, William, Q.C. Durham (City).
Baines, Rt. Hon. Matthew Talbot, Q.C. Leeds.
Bankes, Right Hon. George, Dorsetshire.
*Barrow, Wm. Hodgson, Nottinghamshire (S).
*Benbow, John, Dudley.
Bethell, Richard, Q.C. Aylesbury.
Bouverie, Hon. Edward P. Kilmarnock.
*Bremridge, Richard, Barnstaple.
Brockman, Edward Drake, Hythe.
Butt, George Medd, Q.C. Weymouth.
Butt, Isaac, Youghall.
Cabbell, Benjamin Bond, Boston.
Cairns, Hugh M'Calmont, Belfast.
Carter, S. Tavistock.
Chambers, Montagu, Q.C. Greenwich.
Chambers, Thomas, Hertford.
Cobbett, John Morgan, Oldham.
*Cobbold, John Chevallier, Ipswich.
Cockburn, Sir Alexander James Edmund, Q.C. Southampton.
Collier, Robert P. Plymouth.
Coles, Henry Beaumont, Andover.
Crowder, Richard Budden, Q.C. Liskeard.
Ewart, William, Dumfries (District).
Farrer, James, Durham (South).
Fitzgerald, John D., Q.C. Ennis.
Follett, B. Spencer, Q.C. Bridgewater.
*Freshfield, J. W. Penryn and Falmouth.
Gipps, H. P. Canterbury.
Gower, Hon. F. Leveson, Stoke-on-Trent.
Granger, Thos. Colpitts, Q.C. Durham (City).
Grogan, Edward, Dublin (City).
Hayter, Right Hon. Wm. Goodenough, Q.C. Wells.
Headlam, Thomas Emerson, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.
Hildyard, Robert Charles, Q.C. Whitehaven.
Hogg, Sir James Weir, bart. Honiton.
Ingham, R., Q.C. South Shields.
Inglis, Sir Robert Harry, bart. Oxford (University).
Keating, H. S., Q.C. Reading.
Kelly, Sir Fitzroy, Suffolk (Eas
*Laslett, Wm. Worcester.
*Layard, Henry Austen, D.C.L. Aylesbury.
Lefevre, Right Hon. Charles Shaw, Hants (North).
Lowe, Robert, Kidderminster.
Macaulay, Kenneth, Q.C. Cambridge (Borough).
Macaulay, Rt. Hon. T. B. Edinburgh (City).
Malins, Richard, Q.C. Wallingford.
Massey, W. N. Newport.
Mills, Arthur, Taunton.
Moncrief, Rt. Hon. James, Leith.
*Mullings, Joseph Randolph, Cirencester.
Murphy, Francis Slade, S.L. Cork (City).
*Murrough, John Patrick, Bridport.
*Neeld, Joseph, Chippenham.
O'Connell, Maurice, Tralee.
Peel, Frederick, Bury (Lancashire).
Philimore, J. G., Q.C. Leominster.
Phinn, Thomas, Bath.
Pugh, David, Montgomery (District).
Roebuck, John Arthur, Q.C. Sheffield.
*Sadleir, John, Carlow (Borough).
Seymour, William Digby, Sunderland.
Stapleton, John, Berwick.
Stuart, John, Q.C. Bury St. Edmunds.
Tancred, Henry William, Q.C. Banbury.
Thesiger, Sir Frederick, Stamford.
Villiers, Hon. C. P. Wolverhampton.
Vivian, John Ennis, Truro.
Walpole, Rt. Hon. Spencer Horatio, Q.C. Midhurst.
Whiteside, Rt. Hon. James, Q.C. Enniskillen.
Wigram, Loftus Tottenham, Q.C. Cambridg (University).
Wood, Sir William Page, Oxford (City).
Wortley, Rt. Hon. James Archibald Stuart, Q.C. Buteshire.

And of these seventy-four how many are practising Lawyers—how many are only Lawyers by courtesy—gentlemen who have gone to the Bar as a matter of form, with no purpose of pursuing their Profession? So far as the names are known to us, we can detect only thirty-three, or somewhat less than one-half of the whole, who are really practitioners, the rest being but honorary members of the Profession.

The difference between the prospect and the result is due to the extraordinary number of defeated candidates. According to our contemporary (with some corrections) they number no less than sixty-six, or nearly one-half of all who were candidates. The following is the list of the unfortunates, first stating those who were in the last Parliament, but unsuccessful in their attempt to be again returned:—

Anstey, Thomas Chisholm, Bedford.
Baldwin, Charles Barry, Totness.
Bernal, Ralph, Rochester.
Best, John, Kidderminster.
Bunbury, Edwd. Herbert, Bury St. Edmunds.
Butler, Pierce Somerset, Kilkenny (County).
Cardwell, Edward, Liverpool.
Collins, Thomas, Knaresborough.
Evans, John, Q.C. Haverfordwest and Pembroke (District).
Greene, Thomas, Lancaster.
Hardcastle, Joseph Alfred, Colchester.
Hobhouse, Thomas Benjamin, Lincoln (City).
*Hodgson, William Nicholson, Carlisle.
Lewis, George Cornewall, Herefordshire.
Nicholl, Right Hon. John, D.C.L. Cardiff.
O'Brien, John, S. L. Limerick (City).
O'Connell, Morgan John, Kerry.
Palmer, Roundell, Q.C. Plymouth.
Romilly, Right Hon. Sir John, Devonport.
Stanford, John Frederick, Reading.
Trelawny, John Salusbury, Brighton.
Watson, William Henry, Q.C. Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

The following New Candidates were unsuccessful:—

Allen, Robert, S.L. Stafford (Borough).
Bayford, Augustus Frederick, D.C.L.
Barnes, P. Edward, Penryn and Falmouth.
Bovill, William, Lewes.
Cadogan, Hon. F. Bridgnorth.
Channell, W. F., S.L. Beverley.
Cleasby, A. Surrey (East).
Cox, Edward William, Tewkesbury.
Escott, B. Plymouth.
Evans, Cooke, Stafford (Borough).
Farsyde, G. J. W. Whitby.
Fenwick, Henry, Sunderland.
Follett, Robert B. Lichfield.
Gaselee, S., S.L. Portsmouth.
Greene, J. G. J. Wilton.
Horsman, Edward, Cockermouth.
Huddleston, J. W. Worcester (City.)
Kinderley, George Herbert, Tralee
Kinglake, A. W. Bridgewater.
Kinglake, J. A., S.L. Wells.
Lee, John, LL.D. Buckinghamshire.
Lewis, William David, Pontefract.
Liddell, Hon. A. F. O. Gateshead.
Loch, George, Manchester.
Locke, John, Hastings.
Mellor, J., Q.C. Warwick (Borough)
Newton, Augustus, Ripon.
Overend, W. Sheffield.
Palmer, Geoffrey, Leicester.
Paull, Henry, St. Ives.
Pashley, Robert, Q.C. Lyme Regis.
Phillimore, J. G., Q.C. Cheltenham.
Phillimore, Robt. Joseph, D.C.L. Tavistock.
Ridley, George, Northumberland (South).
Robinson, Augustin, Shrewsbury.
Rolt, John, Q.C. Bridport.
Romaine, W. G. Marlow (Great).
Slade, F. W., Q.C. Salisbury.
Smith, John Sidney, Bodmin.
Sturgeon, C. Nottingham (Borough).
Whateley, William, Q.C. Bath.
Wilde, James, Leicester.
Wilkins, Charles, S.L. Evesham.
*Wire, David Williams, Greenwich.

These lists exhibit some curious facts. All the Attorneys who were candidates, save two, were successful. The great majority of the Lawyers who were defeated, are Conservatives; the great majority of those who were elected are Liberals. As elections cannot be conducted, even in the cheapest form, without considerable expense, the great number of Lawyers candidates would appear to indicate that Barristers are not so badly off as they profess to be. On the other hand it may be argued that the desire of so many to hazard the virtual abandonment of their Profession, implied in undertaking duties so laborious as those of an M.P. proves the prevalent conviction of the Bar, that the prospects of their Profession are very lowering, or they would not exchange it for so unprofitable a pursuit as politics.

THE NEW COMMON LAW PRACTICE.

II. PROCEEDINGS IF DEFENDANT DOES NOT APPEAR.

The form of plaintiff's entering appearance for defendant, in default of defendant's appearance, and then proceeding thereon to judgment and execution, is abolished.

In cases where the writ is not specially indorsed, and has been served, and defendant does not appear, on affidavit of personal service, the plaintiff may file a declaration, indorsed with notice to plead within eight days.

If the defendant has not been served, upon affidavit shewing that he evades service, &c. as already described, a judge's order may be obtained for leave to proceed, and on filing such order, and a copy of the writ of summons, the plaintiff may declare.

Distringas to compel appearance, and outlawry for non-appearance, are abolished.

III. APPEARANCE.

The defendant may appear at any time before judgment.

If he appears after the time specified for appearance, he may, after notice of such appearance given to the plaintiff or his Attorney, be in the same position as to the pleadings or other proceedings as if he had appeared in due time.

Where the defendant appears in person, he must give an address, at which it will be sufficient to serve all pleadings and proceedings not requiring personal service. No appearance will be received without such address given; and if it be fictitious, the appearance will be irregular, and be set aside, and plaintiff permitted to proceed by sticking up the proceedings in the Master's office, without further service.

Appearance will be entered by delivery of a memorandum in the short form given by the Act.

Where some only of several defendants appear to a writ of summons, specially indorsed (i. e. where the particulars are stated, and judgment may be signed upon the writ), judgment may be signed and execution issued (before declaration filed against those who have appeared), against those who have not appeared, and in such case the plaintiff will be taken to have abandoned his action against those who have appeared. But the plaintiff may, before issuing execution, declare against those who have appeared, stating, by way of suggestion, the judgment so obtained against the others, in which case such judgment shall operate as a judgment by default obtained under the old practice against one or more of several defendants in an action of debt.

IV. JOINDER OF PARTIES.

A non-joinder or misjoinder of parties may be amended before trial, by order of the Court, or of a Judge, upon such terms as may be directed; and it may even be amended at the trial, as in cases of variance under the existing law. If notice be given of non-joinder or misjoinder of plaintiffs, or a plea in abatement, the proceedings may be amended without an order, on such amendment only, the defendant to have liberty, if he pleases, to plead de novo: and a misjoinder of defendants may be amended before trial by the Court, or a Judge, and at the trial by the Judge, and likewise, upon a plea of abatement for non-joinder of defendants, the proceedings may be amended without order, provided that the date of such amendment shall, as between the persons named in such plea in abatement and the plaintiff, be considered for all purposes the commencement of the action.

If at the trial it shall appear that the person named in the plea in abatement was justly liable, the original defendant shall be entitled as against the plaintiff to the costs of his plea in abatement and of amendment. But if it shall appear that he was not liable, and that the original defendant is liable, the plaintiff is to be entitled to judgment against such as are found to be liable, and the defendant not so found shall be entitled to his costs of the plea, as part of the costs in the cause. Any defendant pleading in abatement is to be entitled to adduce evidence of the liability of the defendants named in his plea.

Where in an action husband and wife are necessarily joined for injury done to the wife, the husband is empowered to add thereto "claims in his own right," or a separate action brought in respect of those claims may be consolidated. If either party dies, the suit is to abate only so far as relates to the causes of action which do not survive.

V. JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.

"Causes of action of whatever kind, provided they be by and against the same parties, and in the same rights, may be joined in the same suit." But this is not to extend to replevin and ejectment.

Where two or more of the causes of action are local and arise in different counties, the venue may be laid in either.

The Court or Judge may prevent the trial of different causes of action together, if such trial would be inexpedient, and in such case separate records are to be made up, and separate trials had

VI. QUESTIONS RAISED BY CONSENT.

Parties may consent to a trial to be had without pleadings. Thus:—

Where they are agreed as to the questions of fact to be tried before them, the parties may, after wri issued and before judgment, by consent and order of a Judge, who must be satisfied that they have bonâ fide interest in the subject-matter, and that it is fit to be so tried, proceed to trial of the questions of fact without any formal pleadings, the questions to be stated in an issue in a form prescribed; the proceedings at the trial to be the same as in other actions.

The parties may also enter into an agreement in writing, to be exempt from stamp duty, that on the finding of the jury in the affirmative or negative of such issue, a sum of money fixed by the parties, or to be ascertained by the jury upon a question i serted in the issue, shall be paid, with or without costs, and judgment may be entered on such agreement, and execution issue accordingly, unless the Court or a Judge shall order it to be stayed, to enable either party to move to set aside the verdict or for a new trial. The proceedings may be recorded at the instance of either party.

After writ issued and before judgment, the partie may, by consent and order of a Judge, state any questions of law in a special case for the opinion of the Court without any pleadings, and fix therein any sum to be paid by either party with or without costs, and the judgment may be entered and execution issue according to such agreement.

But in both of the above cases, namely, of trials of fact or of law, without pleadings, the costs are to follow the event, unless otherwise agreed by the parties.

We shall next have to direct the reader's attention to the language and form of pleading under the new Act.

THE NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.

INTRODUCTION.

THIS year will long be memorable for the extensive, and, it is believed, most beneficial, alterations introduced into the practice and course of procedure of the Court of Chancery, by the Acts of Parliament of this last session, embodying the recommendations contained in the Report of the Chancery Commissioners. This Commission was issued under the late administration; and the Commissioners were:—Sir John Romilly, M.R.; Sir George James Turner, V.C.; Richard Bethell, esq. Q.C.; Sir James Parker, V.C.; Sir W. Page Wood, Mr. Justice Crompton, W. Milbourn James, esq. Barrister-at-Law; to whom were afterwards added two lay Commissioners, Sir James Graham, M.P.; and Joseph Warner Henley, esq. M.P. The object of the Commission was, "to make a diligent and full inquiry into, and report upon the process, practice, and system of pleading in the Court of Chancery, the manner of conducting suits, and other proceedings in such court, and in the offices connected therewith; and the costs, charges, and expenses incident thereto, the practice at the Masters' offices, and the duties of the several officers, clerks, and other persons of, and connected with such court, their salaries, fees, emoluments." By a subsequent Commission the inquiry was extended to "the course of proceeding and practice in, and the jurisdiction of and exercised in the High Court of Chancery, and the several other departments of justice at present administered by and under the authority of the LORD CHANCELLOR, and incidental thereto; and to consider and report whether any, and, if any, what alterations or amendments tending to improve the administration of justice, may be made in, or in relation to such Court and respective departments, or the course of practice and proceedings therein, or the jurisdiction thereof, or incidental thereto."

The Commissioners made their first report on the 27th of January, 1852; and on this report the two most important Acts of this session relating to Chancery reform are founded, namely, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, entitled "An Act to Abolish the Office of Master of the High Court of Chancery, and to make provision for the more speedy and efficient dispatch of business in the said Court;" and the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, entitled "An Act to amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding in the High Court of Chancery." As the former Act is not only prior in date, but forms, as it were, the foundation for the second Act, it is intended, in the first instance, after a few preliminary remarks on the Report of the Commissioners, to shew the alteration in the existing practice and procedure in Chanceay introduced by that statute.

The Report of the Commissioners most strikingly shows how necessary the abolition of the Masters' offices was, in order that the ridiculously complicated and cumbersome machinery of the present practice, should give way to a mode o procedure in some degree approaching to one worthy of a civilised nation. A specimen of the way in which matters were managed in the Masters' offices in an unopposed case,—where, for instance, there had been a reference to the Master to inquire whether certain proposed arrangements were beneficial to infants or persons not competent to agree to such arrangements, may be given by way of illustration of the evils apparently inseparable from Southampton-buildings. The graphic description of the Commissioners is in the following words:—

"A petition is presented to the Court, setting forth in detail the title of the parties interested, and the full particulars of the proposed arrangement, and praying a reference to the Master to inquire whether it will be beneficial to such of the parties interested as are infants, or under disability, that the arrangement should be carried into effect. This petition having been presented, copies are served on all parties, and briefs are delivered to counsel; the matter is heard in open court, and the reference is made almost as a matter of course. The order is drawn up, and carried into the Master's office, and a warrant to consider the order is taken out, which is attended by the solicitors of the parties, and results in a direction to bring in a state of facts. The petition is then converted into a state of facts, which is left in the office, and a warrant on leaving is then taken out. The parties interested then take copies in the Master's office and warrants to proceed are issued, upon some of which the Master is usually attended in person, while others are disposed of before the chief clerk, who compares the state of facts with the evidence adduced in support of it. The Master himself considers the arrangement, and if, as generally happens, he approves of it, the state of facts is allowed. The usual forms are then gone through of taking out and serving warrants to shew cause why the report should not be prepared, and warrants on preparing the draft. The Master's clerk then converts the state of facts into the draft of a report, adding the finding of the Master. Copies of the draft are taken, and warrants are issued to settle it, and when settled the report is transcribed, signed by the Master, and delivered to the solicitor prosecuting the order, who files it at the Report office, and obtains an office copy. A second petition is then prepared for the Court, which, after setting out the order of reference made on the first petition and the Master's report, prays the confirmation of the report, with such consequential directions as may be thought requisite. Copies of this petition are served on all parties, and briefs delivered to counsel. The petition is heard in open Court, when the sanction of the Court is finally obtained to the proposed arrangement. Thus the petition is converted into a state of facts, the state of facts into the draft of a report, the draft into a report, the report into an office copy, and the office copy into a petition, which ordinarily differs but slightly from the original petition, before the transmuting process had commenced." P. 33.

In other civilised countries, especially those in which codes of procedure exist, the steps to be taken in a suit, have in general, or were intended to have, reference to this one object—that of enabling suitors to bring before the judge, with the least possible delay and expense, the materials for enabling him to arrive at a correct conclusion upon the merits of their several cases. How, then, did the course of procedure in the Master's office take its rise? To use again the words of the Commissioners, "The system obviously calculated to cause unnecessary delay and expense, had its origin at a time when the Masters and their clerks were paid by fees. Every warrant, every copy, every report, indeed, every proceeding, carried its fee, small, perhaps, in individual amount, but the multiplication of which pressed heavily on the suitor, and yielded large emoluments to the officers. This method of remunerating the Masters and their chief clerks by fees has been put an end to by the Chancery Regulation Act, but the system still remains; fees are still paid as heretofore, though the amount is carried to the fee fund, and the effect of the system still remains in the mode of procedure." They add, moreover,—"In estimating the evils arising from this system, it must not be forgotten that every warrant, and every other step and proceeding, is attended with professional charges of the solicitors employed." To put an end to a system which owed its origin to corruption, and its continuance to neglect, is the object of the Act; and this it purposes to carry into effect by abolishing what lies at the root of all the delay and expenses in Chancery—the office of Master in Ordinary, and transferring to the Judges of the Court of Chancery, assisted by officers called Chief Clerks, the duties formerly performed by the Master.

The Act which received the royal assent on 30th June, 1852, after the preamble, commences by abolishing the office of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, and enacts that no vacancy therein is to be filled up. The present Masters, however, are to continue to perform the duties provided for in a subsequent part of the Act, until they are released under the Act (secs. 1 and 2). Two of the Masters—Master FARRER and Master BROUGHAM—are to be released on the first day of Michaelmas Term next, but the LORD CHANCELLOR has power, if, from the nature of any particular matter before either of these Masters, he thinks it desirable that it should be worked out before him, to direct such Master to continue the prosecution thereof, for which purpose he has the same power as if he had not been released under the Act. Power is also given to the LORD CHANCELLOR when, from the state of business in the Court, any Master or Masters can be spared, to release them, according to seniority, from all their duties, except from their attendance upon the House of Lords, for which the order of the House is requisite (secs. 3 and 4). Each Master so to be released is to be entitled for life to the full amount of his salary, &c. payable as at present (secs. 5 and 6).

Next come some very important provisions, not only conferring extensive judicial powers upon the Masters, but also enabling them, by compelling suitors to proceed with the matters and things depending before, or which have been referred to them, to wind them up as expeditiously as possible; in effect, to clear their offices, by encroaching as little as possible upon the time of the judges, upon whom additional duties will be thrown, viz. those which formerly fell to the lot of the Masters.

By the 7th section power is given to every Master, after the passing of the Act, to summon as he shall deem fit all or any of the parties to any cause, matter, or thing depending before him, or their solicitor, to proceed on it, and give such directions and make such order as he may think necessary for the purpose of settling and winding up the same; but any such order may be discharged or varied upon application to the Court. Moreover, on the refusal or neglect of any of the parties or their solicitors to attend, the Master is to be at liberty to proceed in their absence. If the Master cannot dispose of any cause, matter, or thing, by reason of the conduct of the parties or otherwise, he is be at liberty to dispose of any part thereof within his power, and to report or certify on the whole of the case; and the Court is to have power to make such order upon such report or certificate on all or any of the parties, for the further prosecution of the suit or matter, or for the final disposal th..eof, and al to costs, including those incurred by reason of the conduct of the parties.

In the event of the parties refusing or neglecting to bring the Master's report or certificate, within a time to be fixed by the Master, he may direct the same to be brought before the Court by the solicitor to the Suitor's Fund, the payment of whose costs and expenses the Court is empowered to order out of the funds in the cause, matter, or thing, or by such parties as to the Court shall seem just; or in case payment cannot be obtained by any of these means, the same, by the direction of the Court, may be paid out of the Suitors' Fund. (See 9.)

The previous sections of the Act having provided the means for the speedy clearance of the Master's offices, the 10th section provides that from and after the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1852, no reference is to be made to any of the Masters in ordinary of the Court, except in cases in which, from some previous reference made in the cause or matter, or in some other cause or matter connected therewith, the Court may think it expedient to make such reference, and except in matters arising under the Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849. Until the Masters are released, they will retain their present powers for the performance of their duties.

THE LEGISLATOR.

NEW STATUTES.

15 VICTORIA, A.D. 18

[In this record of Legislation only the St of practical utility are .. abstract of the title only

214. On trial of any ejectment between landlord and tenant, juries to give damages for mesne profits down to the verdict, or to a day specified therein. Wherever it shall appear on the trial of any ejectment, at the suit of a landlord against a tenant, that such tenant or his attorney hath been served with due notice of trial, the judge before whom such cause shall come on to be tried shall, whether the defendant shall appear upon such trial or not, permit the claimant on the trial, after proof of his right to recover possession of the whole or of any part of the premises mentioned in the writ in ejectment, to go into evidence of the mesne profits thereof which shall or might have accrued from the day of the expiration or determination of the tenant's interest in the same down to the time of the verdict given in the cause, or to some preceding day to be specially mentioned therein; and the jury on the trial finding for the claimant shall in such case g their verdict upon the whole matter, both as to the recovery of the whole or any part f the premises, and also as to the amount of the damages to be paid for such mesne profits; and in such case the landlord shall have judgment within the time hereinbefore provided, not only for the recovery of p session and costs, but also for the mesne profits found by the jury provided a at nothing hereinbefore contained shall be construed to bar any such landlord from bringing any actio r the mesne profits which shall accrue from th rdict, or the day so specified therein, down to the day of the delivery of possession of the premises recovered in the ejectment.

215. On trials after bail found, judge shall not stay the execution, except by consent, or tenant's finding security.—Bail in error to discharge such security.—In all cases in which such security shall have been given as aforesaid, it upon the trial a verdict shall pass for the claimant, unless it shall appear to the judge before whom the same shall have been had that the finding of the jury was contrary to the evidence, or that the damages given were excessive, such judge shall not, except by consent, make any order to stay judgment or execution, except on condition that within four days from the day of the trial the defendant shall actually find security, by the recognisance of himself and two sufficient sureties, in such reasonable sum as the judge shall direct, conditioned not to commit any waste, or act in the nature of waste, or other wilful damage, and not to sell or carry off any standing crops, hay, straw, or manure produced or made (if any) upon the premises, and which may happen to be thereupon, from the day on which the verdict shall have been given to the day on which execution shall finally be made upon the judgment, or the same be set aside, as the case may be: provided always, that the recognisance last above mentioned shall immediately stand discharged and be of no effect, in case proceedings in error shall be brought upon such judgment, and the plaintiff in error shall become bound in the manner hereinbefore provided.

216. Recognisances to be taken as other recognisances of bail; actions on them limited.—All recognisances and securities entered into as last aforesaid may and shall be taken respectively in such manner and by and before such persons as are provided and authorised in respect of recognisances of bail upon actions and suits depending in the court in which any such action of ejectment shall have been commenced, and the officer of the same court with hom recognisances of bail are filed shall file such recognisances and securities, for which respectively the sum of two shillings and sixpence, and no more, shall be paid; but no action or other proceeding shall be commenced upon any such recognisance or security after the expiration of six months from the time when possession of the premises, or any part thereof, shall actually have been delivered to the landlord.

217. Landlord to recover possession of lands, &c. after serv of writ in ejectment.—In all actions of ejectment hereafter to be brought in any of her Majesty's courts at Westminster by any landlord against his tenant, or against any person claiming through or under such tenant, for the recovery of any lands or hereditaments in any county, except London or Middlesex, where the tenancy shall expire, or the right of entry into or upon such lands or hereditaments shall accrue to such landlord, in or after Hilary or Trinity Terms respectively, it shall be lawful for the claimant in any such action, at any time within ten days after such tenancy shall expire, or right of entry accrue as aforesaid, to serve a writ in ejectment in the form contained in the Schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 13, except that it shall command the persons to whom it is directed to appear within ten days after service thereof in the court in which such action may be ght, and the like proceedings shall be thereupon had as hereinbefore provided, save that it shall be sufficient to give at least six clear day notice of trial to the defendant before the commission day of the assizes at which such ejectment is intended to be tried; and any defendant in such action may, at any time before the trial thereof, apply to a judge by summons to stay or set aside the lings, or to postpone the trial until the next and it shall be lawful for the judge, in his discretion, to make such order in the said cause as to him shall seem expedient.

218. Saving of former remedies.—Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prejudice or affect any other right of action or remedy which landlords may possess in any of the cases hereinbefore pro- d for, otherwise than hereinbefore expressly enacted.

219. In ejectment by mortgagee, the mortgagor's le ing the principal, interest, and costs in court, shall be deemed a full satisfaction, and the Court may compel the mortgagee to reconvey.—Where an action jectment shall be brought by any mortgagee, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assignees, for the recovery of the possession of any ortgaged lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and no suit shall be then depending in any of her Majesty's Courts of Equity in that part of Great Britain called England, for or touching the foreclosing or redeeming of such mortgaged lands, tenements, or hereditaments, if the person having right to redeem such mortgaged lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and who shall appear and become defendant in such action, shall, at any time pending su action, pay unto such mortgagee, or, in case of his refusal, shall bring into court, where such action shall be depending, all the principal moneys and interest due on such mortgage, and also all such costs as have expended in any suit at law or in equity upon such mortgage (such money for principal, interest, and costs to be ascertained and computed by the Court where such action is or shall be depending, or by the proper officer by such Court to be appointed for that purpose), the moneys so paid to such mortgagee, or brought into such court, shall be deemed and taken to be in full satisfaction and discharge of such mortgage, and the Court shall and may discharge every such mortgagor or defendant of and from the same accordingly; and shall and may, by rule of the same Court, compel such mortgagee, at the costs and charges of such mortgagor, to assign, surrender, or re-convey such mortgaged lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and such estate and interest as such mortgagee has therein, and deliver up all deeds, evidences, and writings in his custody, relating to the title of such mortgaged lands, tenements, and hereditaments, unto such mortgagor, who shall have paid or brought such moneys into the Court, his heirs, executors, or administrators, or to such other person or persons as he or they shall for that purpose nominate or appoint.

220. Not to extend to case ... redemption is controverted, ... adjusted; or to prejudice any —Nothing herein contained sh where the person, against who or shall be prayed, shall (by writing under his hand, or the hand of his attorney, agent, or solicitor, to be delivered before the money shall be brought into such Court of Law, to the attorney or solicitor for the other side) insist, either that the party praying a redemption has not a right to redeem, or that the premises are chargeable with other of different principal sums, than what appear on the face of the mortgage or shall be admitted on the other side; or to any case where the right of redemption to the mortgaged lands and premises in question in any cause or suit shall be controverted or questioned by or between different defendants in the same cause or suit; or shall be any prejudice to any subsequent mortgage or subsequent incumbrance, anything herein contained to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

221. Jurisdiction of Courts and judges.—The several Courts and the judges thereof respectively shall and may exercise over the proceedings the like jurisdiction as heretofore exercised in the action of ejectment, so as to ensure a trial of the title, and of actual ouster, when necessary, only, and for all other purposes for which such jurisdiction may at present be exercised; and the provisions of all statutes not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, and which may be applicable to the altered mode of proceeding, shall remain in force and be applied thereto.

And whereas the power of amendment now vested in the Courts and the judges thereof is insufficient to enable them to prevent the failure of justice by reason of mistakes and objections of form. Be it enacted as follows:

222. Amendment.—It shall be lawful for the Superior Courts of Common Law, and every judge thereof, and any judge sitting at Nisi Prius, at all times to amend all defects and errors in any proceeding in civil causes, whether there is anything in writing to amend by or not, and whether the defect or error be that of the party applying to amend, or not; and all such amendments may be made with or without costs, and upon such terms as to the Court or judge may seem fit; and all such amendments as may be necessary for the purpose of determining in the existing suit the real question in controversy between the parties shall be so made.

And in order to enable the Courts and judges to carry this Act thoroughly into effect, and to enable them from time to time to make rules and regulations and to frame writs and proceedings for that purpose, be it enacted as follows:

223. General rules may be made by the judges. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 16.—It shall be lawful for the judges of the said Courts, or any eight or more of them, of whom the chiefs of each of the said Courts shall be three, from time to time to make all such general es and orders for the effectual execution of this Act, and of the intention and object thereof and for fixing the costs to be allowed for and in respect of the matters herein contained, and the performance thereof, and for apportioning the costs of issues, and for the purpose of enforcing uniformity of practice in the allowance of costs in the said courts, and of insuring as far as may be practicable an equal division of the business of taxation amongst the Masters of the said Courts, as in their judgment shall be necessary or proper, and for that purpose to meet from time to time as occasion may require: and it shall further be lawful for the judges of the said Courts, or any eight or more of them, of whom the chiefs of each of the said Courts shall be three, from time to time to exercise all the powers and authority given to them by an Act of Parliament passed in the session of Parliament held in the thirteenth and fourteenth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to enable the Judges of the Common Law at Westminster to alter the Forms of Pleading," with respect to any matter herein contained relative to practice or pleading, anything in this Act to the contrary notwithstanding; and the provisions of the said last-mentioned Act as to the rules, orders, or regulations made in pursuance thereof shall be held applicable to any rules, orders, or regulations which shall be made in pursuance of this Act: Provided that nothing herein contained shall be construed to restrain the authority or limit the jurisdiction of the said Courts or the judges thereof to make rules or orders, or otherwise to regulate and dispose of the business therein.

224. New forms of writs and other proceedings. —Such new or altered writs and forms of proceedings may be issued, entered, and taken, as may by the judges of the said courts, or any eight or more of them, of whom the chiefs of each of the said courts shall be three, be deemed necessary or expedient for giving effect to the provisions hereinbefore contained, and in such forms as the judges of such courts respectively shall from time to time think fit to order; and such writs and proceedings shall be acted upon and enforced in such and the same manner as writs and proceedings of the said courts are now acted upon and enforced, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit; and any existing writ or proceeding, the form of which shall be in any manner altered in pursuance of this Act, shall nevertheless be of the same force and virtue as if no alteration had been made therein, except so far as the effect thereof may be varied by this Act.

225. Rules may be made by each Court for government of its officers.—It shall and may be lawful to and for the judges of each of the said courts from time to time to make such rules and orders for the government and conduct of the ministers and officers of their respective courts, in and relating to the distribution and performance of the duties and business to be done and performed in the execution of this Act, as such judges may think fit and reasonable: Provided always, that no additional [illegible] imposed on the suitors.

And whereas it is expedient that injunctions and orders to stay proceedings should be rendered more effectual, be it enacted as follows:

226. Injunctions and orders to stay proceedings to have a specific effect.—In case any action, suit, or proceeding in any court of law or equity shall be commenced, sued, or prosecuted, in disobedience of and contrary to any writ of injunction, rule, or order of either of the Superior Courts of law or equity at Westminster, or of any judge thereof, in any other court than that by or in which such injunction may have been issued, or rule or order made, upon the production to any such other Court or judge thereof of such writ of injunction, rule, or order, the said other Court (in which such action, suit, or proceeding may be commenced, prosecuted, or taken), or any judge thereof, shall stay all further proceedings contrary to any such injunction, rule, or order; and thenceforth all further and subsequent proceedings shall be utterly null and void to all intents and purposes: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be held to diminish, alter, abridge, or vary the liability of any person or persons commencing, suing, or prosecuting any such action, suit, or proceeding contrary to any injunction, rule, or order of either of the Courts aforesaid, to any attachment, punishment, or other proceeding to which any such person or persons are, may, or shall be liable in cases of contempt of either of the Courts aforesaid, in regard to the commencing, suing, or prosecuting such action, suit, or proceeding.

And be it enacted as follows:

227. Interpretation of terms.—In the construction of this Act the word "Court" shall be understood to mean any one of the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster in which any action is brought; and the word "judge" shall be understood to mean a judge or baron of any of the said courts; and the word "Master" shall be understood to mean a Master of any of the said courts; and the word "action" shall be understood to mean any personal action brought by writ of summons in any of the said courts; and no part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, nor the islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, or Sark, nor any islands adjacent to any of them, being part of the dominions of her Majesty, shall be deemed to be "beyond the seas" within the meaning of this Act: and wherever in this Act, in describing or referring to any person or party, matter, or thing, any word importing the singular number or masculine gender is used, the same shall be understood to include and shall be applicable to several persons and parties as well as one person or party, and females as well as males, and bodies corporate as well as individuals, and several matters and things as well as one matter or thing, unless it otherwise be provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

228. Her Majesty may direct all or part of this Act to extend to any Court of Record.—It shall be lawful for her Majesty from time to time, by an order in council, to direct that all or any part of the provisions of this Act or of the rules to be made in pursuance thereof shall apply to all or any Court or Courts of Record in England or Wales, and within one month after such order shall have been made and published in the London Gazette such provisions and rules respectively shall extend and apply in manner directed by such order; and any such order may be in like manner from time to time altered or annulled.

229. Certain of the provisions of this Act to extend and apply to the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and the Court of Pleas at Durham.—And whereas it is expedient to apply the provisions of this Act, with the requisite modifications, to the Superior Courts of the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham respectively: all the enactments and provisions of this Act with respect to writs for the commencement of personal actions, except such as relate to the teste thereof in the name of a judge, to concurrent writs, and to the service of writs elsewhere than in the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham respectively, and proceedings against parties residing out of the jurisdiction of the said Courts; and all the provisions of this Act with respect to the appearance of the defendant and proceedings of the plaintiff in default of appearance; and with respect to the joinder of parties to actions and joinder of causes of action; and with respect to the determination of questions raised by consent of the parties without pleading; and with respect to the language and form of pleadings, and provisions as to pleadings, profert, oyer, setting out of documents; and with regard to the time and manner of declaring; and as to pleas and subsequent pleadings, and incident thereto; and examples and forms of pleading and causes of action; and with respect to judgment by default, and the mode of ascertaining the amount to be recovered thereupon and incident thereto; and all the provisions of this Act with respect to juries and jury process; and with respect to the admission of documents; and with respect to the expenses of execution and the remaining in force and renewal of execution, the discharging of parties from execution, and charging in execution persons in prison; and with respect to proceedings for the revival of judgments and other proceedings by and against persons not parties to the record; and with respect to the the effect of death, marriage, and bankruptcy, upon the proceedings in an action; and with respect to the proceedings upon motions to arrest the judgment and for judgment non obstante veredicto; and with respect to proceedings in error, subject to the proviso hereinafter contained; and all the provisions of this Act with respect to the action of ejectment, and incident thereto; and with respect to the power of amendment by Courts and the judges thereof, shall extend and apply to the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and the Court of Pleas at Durham, and actions and proceedings therein respectively.

230. Powers given by this Act to the judges of the Superior Courts at Westminster to make rules, &c. may be exercised by judges of the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and Court of Pleas at Durham as to those Courts.—All the powers given by this Act to the judges of the said Superior Courts at Westminster to make rules and regulations for the execution of this Act, and to frame writs and proceedings for that purpose; and to the judges of the said respective courts to make rules or orders for the government and conduct of the ministers and officers thereof; and all other powers by this Act given to or vested in the judges of the said Superior Courts at Westminster to be exercised by more than one of them, except the powers and authority given by the said Act of Parliament passed in the session of Parliament held in the thirteenth and fourteenth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to enable the Judges of the Courts of Common Law at Westminster to alter the Forms of Pleading," shall and may be exercised by the respective judges of the said Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and Court of Pleas at Durham, being judges of one of the said Common Law Courts at Westminster, or any two of them, with respect to the said Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and Court of Pleas at Durham respectively, and the ministers and officers thereof, and matters and proceedings therein, within the jurisdiction of the same Courts respectively; and all powers under this Act exercisable by any one judge of the Superior Courts at Westminster shall and may be exe able by judge of the said Superior Courts of the said counties palatine, being also a judge of one of the said Courts at Westminster, as to matters and proceedings in the said Superior Courts of the said counties palatine.

231. Judges may make rules for applying other provisions of this Act to Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, and Court of Pleas at Durham.—It shall and may be lawful to and for the judges of each of the said Courts of Common Pleas at Lancaster, and Pleas at Durham, being judges of one of the Superior Courts at Westminster, or any two of them, from time to time to make rules and orders for applying any of the other provisions of this Act to the said respective Superior Courts of the said counties palatine, and matters and proceedings therein and parties thereto, with such modifications and alterations with reference to the constitution and peculiar circumstances of such Court, as they may think fit and reasonable; and for modifying any of the provisions hereby applied to such last-mentioned courts respectively with reference to such constitution and peculiar circumstances; and from time to time to rescind, amend, or alter such rules or orders; and that such rules or orders, subject to such power of rescission, amendment, and alteration, shall have the same force as if the same were made by and embodied in this Act.

232. Provisions to apply to Masters of Courts at Westminster to apply to prothonotaries of Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, and Court of Pleas at Durham, and their deputies, &c.—Provided always, that all the provisions of this Act applicable to Masters of the said Courts at Westminster, shall apply to the respective prothonotaries of the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, and Court of Pleas at Durham, and their respective deputies, who may singly exercise, with reference to matters and proceedings in the last-mentioned courts respectively, the powers hereby given to any one or more of the Masters of the Superior Courts at Westminster; and that such respective officers shall record the proceedings of trials of causes depending in the said respective courts, and draw up and return posteas on records from the Superior Courts at Westminster, tried in the said counties palatine respectively, and officiate at the trial of such causes therein as heretofore.

233. As to proceedings in error.—Provided also, as to proceedings in error, that the Court of Queen's Bench shall still be the Court of Error from the said Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, and Court of Pleas at Durham; and that it shall be sufficient to transmit to the said Court of Queen's Bench a transcript of the record of any judgment or proceedings in those Courts on which error is alleged; and that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench thereon shall be certified by one of the Masters of the said Court of Queen's Bench on the said transcript, or by rule of Court, as the said Court may direct; and that thereupon such judgment shall be entered on the original record in the said respective Courts of Common Pleas at Lancaster and Pleas at Durham; and such further proceedings as may be necessary thereon shall be awarded by the said respective Courts, subject to the right of either party to allege errors in the said judgment in the said Court of Queen's Bench, and proceed thereon as provided by this Act in the case of errors alleged in actions depending in that Court.

234. Certain provisions of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 62, and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 16, repealed.—From the time when this Act shall commence and take effect so much of a certain Act of Parliament passed in the fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for improving the Practice and Proceedings in the Court of Common Pleas of the County Palatine of Lancaster," and so much of a certain other Act of Parliament passed in the second year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for improving the Practice and Proceedings of the Court of Pleas of the County Palatine of Durham and Sadberge," as relate to the duration of writs; and to alias and pluries writs, and to the proceedings necessary for making the first writ in any action available to prevent the operation of any statute whereby the time for the commencement of any action may be limited, shall be repealed, except so far as may be necessary for supporting any writs that have been issued before the commencement of this Act, and any proceedings taken or to be taken thereon; but that the other provisions of the said last-mentioned Acts of Parliament, so far as they are not altered by or inconsistent with the provisions of this Act shall remain in force.

235. Short title of Act.—In citing this Act in any instrument, document, or proceeding, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Common Law Procedure Act, 1852."

236. Act not to extend to Ireland or Scotland.—Nothing in this Act shall extend to Ireland or Scotland, except in the cases herein specially mentioned.

CAP. XXXI.

An Act to legalize the Formation of Industrial and Provident Societies. (June 30, 1852.)

We give this statute entire.

13 & 14 Vict. c. 115.—Whereas by an Act passed in the thirteenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to Friendly Societies," it was enacted, that a society might be established under the provisions of the said Act for any of the objects therein mentioned; that was to say (amongst other objects), "for the relief, maintenance, and endowment of the members, their husbands, wives, children, and kindred;" "and for the frugal investment of the savings of the members, for better enabling them to purchase food, firing, clothes, or other necessaries, or the tools or implements of their trade or calling, or to provide for the education of their children kindred, provided (amongst other things) that th shares in any such investment should not be transferable." And whereas various associations of working men have been formed for th mutual relief, maintenance, education, and endowment of the members, their husbands, wives, children, or kindred, and for procuring to them food, lodging, clothing, and other necessaries, by exercising or carrying on in common their respective trades or handicrafts; and it is expedient to extend the provisions of the said recited Act to such Associations, and otherwise to regulate the same: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Societies of working men may be established for attaining the objects of Friendly Societies Acts by means of joint trade.—It shall be lawful for any number of persons to establish a society under the provisions of this and the said recited Act, for the purpose of raising by voluntary subscriptions of the members thereof a fund for attaining any purpose or object for the time being authorised by the laws in force with respect to friendly societies, or by this Act, by carrying on or exercising in common any labour, trade, or handicraft, or several labours, trades, or handicrafts, except the working of mines, minerals, or quarries beyond the limits of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and also except the business of banking, whether in the said United Kingdom or elsewhere; and this Act shall apply to all societies already established for any of the purposes herein mentioned, so soon as they shall conform to the provisions hereof.

2. Rules of the society.—The rules of any such society shall provide,

1st, For allowing payments to be made from time to time to all members of the society in respect of any work or service which they may do or perform for or on behalf of the same:

2nd, Upon what terms and conditions (if any) persons not members of the society shall be employed for or on behalf of the same; yet so that any person not a member of the society who shall be employed for or on behalf of the same shall receive in respect of any work or service done or performed by him on behalf of such society, whether by way of wages or otherwise, at least the same amount or value as if he were a member of the society:

3rd, Whether or not any loans shall be contracted with persons (whether members of the society or not) for the better effecting the purposes thereof, and how such loans and interest thereon (if any) shall be secured; yet so that the interest on any such loan shall not exceed the rate of six pounds per centum per annum, and so that the total amount of moneys to be owing on loan by the society at any one time shall not exceed four times the amount of paid-up subscriptions for the time being; and a declaration under the hands of the trustees or trustee of the society, certified by the registrar of friendly societies, shall be sufficient evidence in that behalf of the amount of paid-up subscriptions:
